The thirtieth of November is the day set apart for public thanksgiving. Everyone wants to feel that he has had his part in the preparation of this distinctively American festival, and the Moving Picture Weekly does not want to be left out. So this special edition is our way of expressing our spirit of thankfulness, and our message of good-will to every reader of these pages. The two great blessings, peace and plenty, are with us in full measure. In the words of the Bard of Avon, whose three hundredth anniversary is celebrated this year, "Let good digestion wait on appetite and health on both!"

Two Universal Thanksgiving Films and Something About Ruth Ann Baldwin.

By Herbert Rothschild.

venport in the leading role. This charming playlet, released on Thanksgiving Day as a Big U, was written by Lynn Reynolds, a Bluebird director, and produced by one of the few woman directors in moving pictures, Miss Ruth Ann Baldwin. It is very appropriate, too, that this play should have been produced by a woman, as it idealizes motherhood, an ideal in the breast of every man or woman in the country, and doubly so on Thanksgiving Day. It is the story of a mother who expects her children to visit her on Thanksgiving Day. The children have gone to the city and have drifted away from their old surroundings and from their mother. Both are too busy with their own pursuits to come and the old lady is heartbroken. But at the last minute they both are stricken with the spirit of the holiday and hurry down to see their old mother.

These are the two plays that the Universal presents as their Thanksgiving offering, and they will be only too happy if somewhere some one will be made a little happier by them.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note that one of these Thanksgiving stories was directed by Ruth Ann Baldwin from a story written by her former chief and very good friend, Lynn Reynolds. "The Mother Call" is Miss Baldwin's first production "on her own." She is now working on a single-reeler entitled "Bred in the Purple," from a story by J. F. Wilson.

ANOTHER WOMAN DIRECTING.

Why Ruth Ann Baldwin Dresses in the Costume Shown in the Cut on This Page.

RUTH ANN BALDWIN is a name which has been associated with the Universal Film Company for several years in various capacities. Lately she realized her cherished ambition and was appointed assistant director to Lynn Reynolds.

Before joining Universal, Miss Baldwin was one of the ever-growing army of newspaper women, and had much experience in the press world of San Diego. Then she became interested in the scenario end of the motion picture enterprise, and was for some time employed by the Universal in this capacity. She was sent to London by President Laemmle to collaborate with E. Phillips Oppenheim on the scenario for one of the early and exceedingly successful serials of the company, "The Black Box." After this she became editor of the West Coast scenario department for a time.

But all the time she cherished her desire to become connected with the production of pictures, and when the powers that be gave her the chance she determined to make good. She was appointed assistant to the director whose work she most admires, Lynn Reynolds.

The cut shows her in the costume which she has adopted for wear in the woods during the filming of out-of-door stories, such as Director Reynolds loves. There is a story connected with her choice of apparel. When she was a small girl she was very fond of riding. One day she had a serious fall, and her skirt catching in the pommel of the side-saddle, she was dragged for a long distance. Her mother made her promise that she would discard both side-saddle and skirts for riding and she adopted the masculine costume from that day. She found the clothes so comfortable and practical that she decided to wear them while working for the camera. She accompanied Mr. Reynolds and his company to Hume, recently, to film the Bluebird, "The End of the Rainbow," in the lumber country. The inhabitants at first looked askance at her costume, but when they realized the exacting nature of her task as assistant director they all agreed that her idea of dress was the right one.

NOTED CALIFORNIA OFFICIALS VISIT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Lieut.-Governor of California, Wm. D. Stephens, Mrs. Stephens and Lieutenant Zane See Film Capital.

WILLIAM D. STEPHENS, Lieutenant-Governor of California, accompanied by Mrs. Stephens and their son-in-law, Lieutenant R. T. Zane, and Mrs. Zane were among the distinguished visitors at Universal City on October 25.

Lieutenant Zane is connected with the United States Marine Corps at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and he and Mrs. Zane were spending a few weeks in Los Angeles with the latter's parents. He informed the Lieutenant-Governor of his desire to see the famous picture-making plant before returning to the islands and Mr. Stephens, who was making a campaign tour for Hughes and Fairbanks, took time away from the rostrum to accompany them and Mrs. Stephens to the city of make-believe.

Lieutenant-Governor Stephens, who is an enthusiastic "movie fan" and who often has visited Universal City, took a keen delight in pointing out the noted stars to the members of his family, many of them greeting him warmly.

The members of the little party were kept busy watching the many companies at work, and when they left Lieutenant Zane said: "Most interesting place I have ever visited and that is saying much, as I have traveled a great deal since my connection with the navy."

"Right you are," said the Lieutenant-Governor, "greatest place in the country. If anyone wants real entertainment he will find it here in all varieties."

McRae Now Directing "Liberty"

Henry McRae.

IT seemed a dreadful calamity when Jacques Jaccard, who was both writing and directing the serial "Liberty," became so ill that continuing such arduous work was out of the question for him. But the Universal is a fortunate institution. This has been proved many times, and never more forcibly than in this crisis. If any one could take charge in this crisis that man was Henry McRae, of 101 Bison fame, the past-master of the punch. And the Universal possessed his services.

McRae has such a string of successes to his credit that there is no room in a book of this size to enumerate them, that is if you want the magazine to contain anything else. But one cannot refrain from mentioning that breath-taking drama "Behind the Lines," which he put on for Bluebird, with Harry Carey and Edith Johnson. It was a sort of epitome in five reels of the capabilities of this human dynamo. He took hold of the serial in the thirteenth episode, the unlucky thirteenth it might have been called, had any one with less ability been called upon to assume the difficulties of finishing another man's job. But McRae did his patching with such skill that it is impossible to detect the change. From the thirteenth episode the action has started to run at a speed which is amazing, and which promises to surpass even the record of Henry McRae himself. His story reads something like one of his own pictures. It is a series of obstacles overcome.

No middle name, please. An undiscerning, Scotch-Presbyterian, theatre-abhorring father sandwiched "Alexander" between "Henry" and "McRae," but the initials "H. A. M." on the end of a wardrobe trunk—well, imagine it.

Born in Toronto in 1878. Educated there. Started a course in medicine. The greatly reverenced and all-wise professor one day asked the boy how to spell "can't," and the future Bisonite decided that education from books didn't come up to specifications.

Amateur theatricals had always thrilled the boy. Through the list from Romeo to Shylock, he had appeared at once as bill poster, business manager, stage director, leader of the orchestra and leading man in these school productions.

The stage! Just the thing. Dad said no. Henry, being half Irish, joined a stock company at five dollars per week. He had good clothes, trunks full of them. The five per week went for laundry bills and the young Beau Brummel made most of his meals on—enthusiasm.

In the months of semi-starvation, dirt and the discomfort of being knocked about from town to town, McRae developed the main quality which has brought him to his present position. In common parlance, that thing is "to use the bean," in plain English, "common sense."

"I soon realized," he says, "that it was the fellow who filled his job with equal parts of energy and brains who was constantly shoved along toward the top."

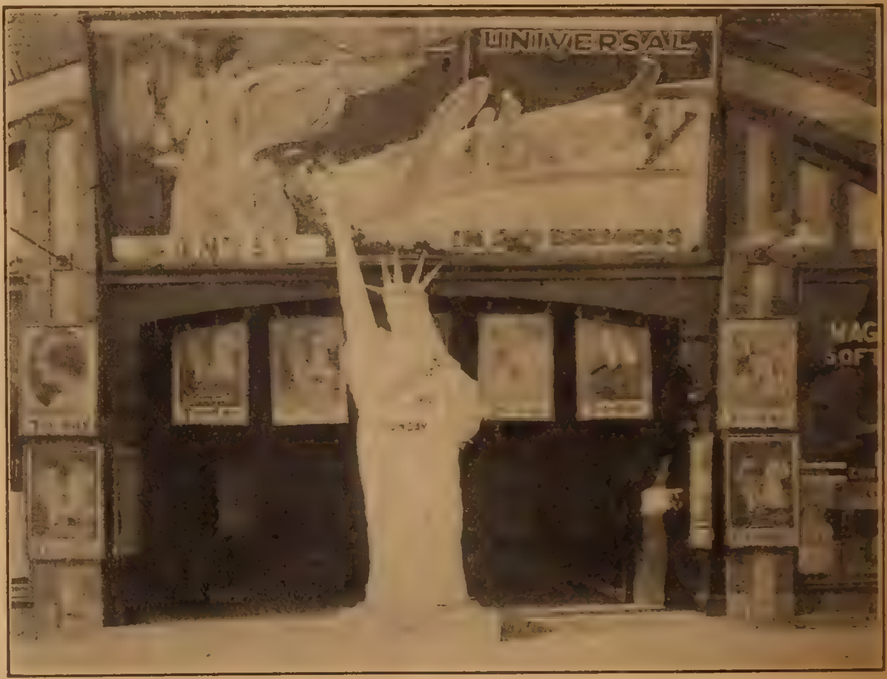
"Using the bean," McRae organized his own stock company and toured the country with marked success. He owned theaters in Tacoma and Seattle and took his company to Honolulu where they stayed for many months and became so popular that the residents of that city are still asking for a return engagement.

After a three-day inspection of the Selig plant in Chicago, McRae decided to go into the movies as a producer. Selig decided so, too.

About four years ago the Universal asked McRae to join the tremendous plant at Hollywood, California. The result is the famous Bison Pictures.

"Show me the name 'McRae' in the corner of a picture and I don't have to look at the film to know that it will bring me money," said an exhibitor.

Ask any member of McRae's company what he thinks of his director and you will get the same answer:



LIBERTY display of the Plaza Theatre, Detroit, Mich. The proprietor expended almost a hundred dollars on the paper mache statue of Liberty. There also are two large Liberty bills hanging from each corner of the theatre which do not show in this photo.

"Fairest, and hardest man to work for in the business. If you're a mutt, beat it quick. You can't fool Sunset Mac. He'll work from dawn until the sun goes down. Maybe you eat and maybe you don't, but he'll never ask you to do a thing that he won't do himself. If it's shooting a log flume at 60 miles an hour, falling down a cliff, jumping into an ice-cold stream or walking a 14-inch pipe over a 150-foot ravine to get to a 'location,' Mac wil be there to do it first."

Such results make it permissable to ask McRae what, in his mind, constitutes a successful picture.

"Several things," is his answer. "Personality of the actors, interest in the story, 'punches,' setting and photography. Yet, these may all be good and, if your film drama lacks real, human appeal, it won't bite into the lasting appreciation of your audience.

"The day of 'any old thing' is gone. The day of the real portrayal of real humanity is here. The men who can make pictures so true in their portrayal of joy and sorrow, humility and pain, shame and glory, that these qualities reach out and strike a responsive note in the hearts of the audience—those men are the ones who are making and will continue to make the truly successful motion pictures."

Aside from his work McRae has one enthusiasm, his small son, Henry Oswald McRae who gives every evidence of being a true Bison production.

MARIE WALCAMP HAS JAPANESE ADMIRER.

A bundle of mail comes every day to Fred Donaghy of Universal City addressed to Marie Walcamp, who plays the featured lead in "Liberty, A Daughter of the U. S. A." Recently, one came from an admirer in Japan written in excellent penmanship but unusual in its phraseology. The letter follows:

"Dear Miss Walcamp:—I have no doubt that you will have certainly astonished in getting the letter from me who am quite stranger to you. But I know you on seeing 'The Moving Picture Weekly,' publishing in your country. The reason why I am now writing this letter to you is that I am very much interested in Cinema.

"Recently a curiosity induced me to collect general photos of well-known cinema players in the world. Some American players kindly accepted my offer in giving me their photos. I do not see Liberty manufacturing by Universal Co., but I have any room to doubt that it will arrive Japan presently. So I desire earnestly to have one of your photo, having your own hand's writing's signature on it. I sincerely trust that you will have no objection in accepting my offer.

"I thank you in anticipation for your kindly sending me one of your photo to my request."

JAPANESE TWIN GIRLS ADMIRE POLO.

THE fame of Eddie Polo, well-known Universal athlete and actor, has spread to Japan as is evidenced by the large correspondence he receives from the Orient. No letter has pleased him more, however, than one from Japanese twin girls in Yokohoma in a joint letter. They not only sent their photographs, but told him how they admire his work on the screen. The letter was translated for Polo by Frank Tokanaga, one of the Universal actors.

INTEREST IN "LIBERTY" GROWS WITH EACH EPISODE.

was that it was all right only he did not have enough to do. Polo, who before going into the movies, was a trained athlete and circus performer, is the possessor of a wonderful physique and is quite the strongest man of the studio. In spite of his many encounters in the film he has found it necessary to take conditioning runs and boxes with any one who is brave enough to undergo the ordeal. It is interesting to know that Eddie has an enormous following in Japan, where they are simply wild over his wonderful muscular development and the numerous stunts that he performs.

Another of the players in "Liberty" who has covered himself with glory is Jack Holt. Jack is the hero, and as a dashing army captain who is always on the spot to save the heroine, Jack is able in every respect. His handsome face and figure, together with the expert horsemanship that he has shown in this picture have won him the admiration of the entire country.

And now with a couple of shudders and many gasps of horror, the villains are approached, villains because of these there are two in "Liberty." The first and most villainous of them is, or rather was, Manuel Leon, a part played by Bertram Grassby. This was the first picture that Grassby had ever been in where he had had to do any riding, so all the boys were anxious to see him in the saddle. But Bertram fooled them all, for he jumped right on the horse and rode off without so much as a single balk. The very first episode had a part in it where Bertram had to ride down a very steep incline, but he stood up to the test like a major and now has the respect of all the rough riders in the film.

The other gasp-producer was G. Raymond Nye, who in the part of the bandit chief, has filled the bill in every respect. With a towering physique and a black mustache, he has terrified quite as much by his satirical laugh as by his stern frown. In the last few episodes since Manuel was killed, Raymond has had to work pretty hard to furnish all the villainy of the serial, but he has stood up to the task so well that the heroine is still in his clutches without much prospect of freedom.

Much to the regret of the company and of those who like to see a man finish what he has begun, the direction of "Liberty" has changed hands almost in the middle, as it were, but this course was necessary and unavoidable, owing to the partial breakdown of Jacques Jaccard under the tremendous strain of putting out two reels of intense action every week. A very unexpected rainy season at Universal City also impeded the progress and so worked on Mr. Jaccard's nerves that it was feared he would have a complete breakdown.

In this crisis Henry McRae, veteran director of the Bison brand, was asked to take up the serial, and out of his friendship for the leading players, Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt, all of whom he knows very well indeed, and has directed in the Bison brand, he consented to take up the serial in the thirteenth episode and see it to the end. The thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth have already been shown in the projection room, and too much praise cannot be showered upon Mr. McRae for the manner in which he has grasped the original plan and for the friendly spirit in which he has undertaken to carry out something which he did not begin.

McRae has long been known as one of the foremost and most successful thrill producers in the game, and the episodes that he has turned out have been up to his reputation in every way. So well has he picked up the threads that it is impossible to tell at which episode the other left off and at which McRae began.

So "Liberty" is drawing to a close. To say that it is the greatest serial that has ever appeared would not be going too far. Many others have said it, and the congratulations from exhibitors and fans have been pouring into the office ever since it began. Undoubtedly it has set a new pace in serial conducting, showing the country something entirely new in the way of serial pictures, and has opened up a new field which the other companies will not be long in following.

IT WAS NEW TO ELIZABETH.

TWO little girls were sitting on the knee of Marshall Stedman, engaging director at Universal City, telling their friend of the events of the day in school. They were Lena Baskette and Elizabeth Janes, well-known child actresses of the film capital.

"I got 100 in deportment to-day, Uncle Marshall," said Lena proudly.

"How much did you get?" he asked of Elizabeth.

The fair-haired child looked up. She did not quite understand the meaning of the word. "I don't take it," she replied.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS."

to speak. But the whole chamber is dismayed when he gives the measure his hearty support instead of his opposition. It is a stirring moment, but at last the bill is passed.

But the crisis is not yet over. The agents of the foreign government have been foiled in their attempt to stay the passage of the bill, but they realize that it will take years before the preparation provided for in the bill can be attained, so they advise their government to make their demands at once. This is done and the War Department is at a loss to know what to do, as they have not enough munitions to go to war.

But now young Wallace, who has all along been giving the matter his thought and attention, advances a plan to save the country. At a meeting of the committee for defence he advocates that they institute what he calls industrial preparedness. At the first sign of war all the factory operatives in the country are to be mustered into federal service and are to go to work making munitions. As he describes his plan, the whole thing is unfolded before their eyes. They see milk-can factories making shell casings; locomotive works making field guns, etc., down the line of the list of things that will be required for the war. Then he shows how these can be distributed and put into service. The plan is accepted and put into action. So quickly does the country prepare that the foreign agents are surprised and at once wire to their countries to withdraw the demands as America is preparing so fast that they will be armed in a few months. So the country is saved.

At last Mona is convinced that Wallace is right, and she, blushing, accepts him as her leader for life. She, too, believes in preparedness.

"THE MAINSPRING."

story was that she was such a success that she was offered a regular engagement and has risen rapidly through all the stages so that now, with the Universal Company, she is considered one of the most capable of the younger actresses.

In the cast is also Thomas Jefferson, a son of the famous Joseph Jefferson. For twenty years he played in "Rip Van Winkle" with his father and then upon the latter's demise he continued it in the title role. Mr. Jefferson is a fine-looking man with a tall, stately figure and gray hair. He may be remembered in the Bluebird, "Little Eve Edgarton," as the old professor, and also in "A Romance of Billygoat Hill" in a similar part.

So here is the secret of the wonderful quality of "The Mainspring." It is wonderful because it could not help but be so with the array of talent that has conspired in its production. It is interesting because it is a plot written by a master pen, produced by a master director, and acted by players who are artists as well as types. When the materials and workmanship are of the finest, the product cannot be surpassed, and this is just an instance in point to prove the superiority the popular Red Feather brand of productions. "The Mainspring" will stand up beside any other film or any other program. It need never fear comparison or competition.

all admitted the force of his arguments, most of them couldn't find their "French tongue." But Ella Hall is as much of an enthusiast as Julian, and it is not so very long since she was in school, anyway. So she set to work with a French coach. First they translated all the things that she might be expected to say into colloquial French, and then she learned them by heart, and practised French phrases in her sleep until they fell naturally from her tongue.

So, in the picture, when Gabrielle answers the President of the Republic, a Frenchman in the audience runs no danger of having his illusion of reality destroyed, for she says, so plainly that a one-eyed man can see it, "Pas Madame, Monsieur le President, mais Mademoiselle!" It was a real labor to learn regular lines in a foreign language for "the silent drama," but it was a labor of love, and she says she will be rewarded if the play is made more convincing to just one member of one audience.

THE SMALLEYS TURN OUT MASTERPIECES

James Oppenheim was born in St. Paul and is no relation to E. Phillips Oppenheim, also the writer of many successful film plays. The author of "Idle Wives" is one of America's youngest as well as one of her most promising authors. In the years 1901 to 1903, while a student at Columbia University, Mr. Oppenheim did a great deal of settlement work at the Hudson Guild Settlement and it was there that he received the inspiration for social service and uplift that is so apparent in all his work. This work in the Ghetto of New York appealed to the young man and several years later he adopted it as his vocation, being connected with the Hebrew Technical Institute both as teacher and acting-superintendent. Then came his success as a writer and ever since he has devoted himself entirely to literary endeavors.

The first of Mr. Oppenheim's work to attract the public attention was the series known as "The Doctor Rast Stories" which appeared serially and later were published in book form. Since then he has written "Wild Oats," "The Olympian," "Idle Wives," and "The Beloved," all of them popular novels, besides producing two volumes of poetry, "Monday Morning, Etc.," and "Songs for the New Age." A play, "Pioneers," and a serious sociological study, "Pay Envelopes," are also the product of his pen. This incomplete list does not include the hundreds of short stories that have appeared in the magazines. He is a constant contributor to the most widely circulated magazines in America, and as such is known to millions of readers throughout the United States.

U. S. SENATOR PHELAN VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY

JAMES D. PHELAN, of San Francisco, accompanied by Charles W. Fay, who has been for many years postmaster of San Francisco; John T. Carter, Collector of United States Internal Revenue for the Sixth District of California, and W. M. Humphries, of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, were also visitors at Universal City recently.

The party spent several hours at the plant, which all agreed exceeded the stories about its wonders they had heard from other pilgrims who had wended their way to the city of make-believe.

Senator Phelan and the others, spending some time on the stages watching several hundred people at work, motored over the 230 acres of Universal City, viewed the many elaborate exterior sets and ended the journey with a visit to the zoo, where Superintendent Rex de Rosselli entained them with acts by the lions and Joe Martin, the famous simian comedian.

U. PLAYERS CHECKER FIENDS.

ALL of the members of the Universal Joker company, from Director W. W. Beaudine down through the line of players and assistants are checker fiends. When not working before the camera two or three games always are in progress in the dressing rooms, and Gale Henry and William Franey lay claim to championship honors.

Franey, however, admits that Charles Conklin defeated him once, but an investigation proved that Conklin was using thirteen checkers against Franey's eleven.

How Rufus Steele Came to Write "The Eagle's Wings"

By Peter Pepper

These three were the Waterfliet arsenal in New York State, the Frankfort arsenal at Philadelphia, and that at Watertown, Mass.

"At the first are made the largest guns for the army and some of those for the navy. The shop is 1,000 feet long, 200 feet wide, and 150 feet high. It is the most enormous place I ever saw in my life. Everything from a 3-inch gun to the new 16-inch gun is made there. The 14-inch gun is the large gun more commonly used, and this is fifty feet long, and weighs seventy tons. Yet the great cranes pick up these monsters and handle them as if they were pencils. It takes four men, one to operate the crane, and the others to handle the cables, which are so heavy that three men have all they can do to lift the sling and place it around the gun.

"If you told most people that they use wire in making a 14-inch gun, they would be considerably surprised. Yet there are 125 miles of square steel wire used in every gun of this calibre. The gun barrel is not a solid piece; it is composed of a core which is wrapped with the wire. Then a jacket is shrunk into place, after which this is again wrapped with wire. This gives the gun far greater strength, though its life is short enough at best. To make the 16-inch monsters, an addition of 75 feet had to be made to the enormous shop. A complete idea of the immensity of this plant can hardly be gained by the pictures in 'The Eagle's Wings,' but the ease with which the monsters are handled is graphically illustrated—and for the first time.

"At the Frankfort arsenal all sorts of ammunition are manufactured, from 14-inch shells to revolver cartridges. Many women are employed here, and are seen at work in the film. The machines seem positively human, especially that which puts the finished cartridges into a clip. A hand grabs them in the most life-like fashion. The girls work with lightning rapidity, especially the inspectors of the bullets. The nickle is pressed into shape and the lead forced into that, and each must be absolutely perfect. The girls run them through their hands at terrific speed, and then they are reinspected, and if a girl has made more than five errors in a day, that is, has passed more then five bullets with, to us, imperceptible defects, she is penalized.

"When we wanted to take the making of the time fuses, in one of the arsenals, the officer in charge made an objection. He said that the place had just celebrated its one hundredth anniversary, and no camera, in all that time, had ever been inside the plant. He could not understand how we had obtained permission to take them there now.

"Of course we had to take our pictures by artificial light, and so we were careful not to go where powder was being used. In one place, on the third floor, there were about a hundred girls and men assembling the fuse parts. Inside a glass partition there were more men, working at machines with an iron apron in front, something like a harness-maker's machine. They were putting the explosives into the shells in rings, using a press. They gazed through the glass at our picture-taking, in astonishment at seeing cameras in the plant. One man was so interested that he became careless. When the press came down, the plunger struck on the edge of a ring and a spark found its way to the powder. There was an explosion, and when it was over, though there had been two hundred and two people in the place, just two had stood their ground—the cameraman and myself. This was not an indication of superior bravery on our part—it merely meant that we did not know enough to run! I confess that after I had heard that the man was not hurt, I had to go out and get a breath of air.

"Then we went to the room where the biggest shells are loaded. A weird place! There were little rooms, eight feet square, all divided from each other by walls eight feet thick. The idea of this arrangement is that if one man is blown to bits, all his neighbors won't go, too! A comfortable place to work in. They told us, however, that it was not particularly dangerous, and that we might set up our camera here. There was dust on the wall. I rubbed some of it off on my fingers.

"'What's this?' I asked.

"'Just dust,' they answered.

"But I saw plainly that it was powder dust, and I decided that we would take no pictures by artificial light there.

"The room where the shells are loaded with the highest explosive is the strangest place of all. The men move with the precision of machines. There is absolute stillness, they do not even talk among themselves. When we entered they carefully laid down their work and turned to look at us, but no one spoke or smiled, as they had done in the other rooms. Outside, one could hear the constant 'put-put-put' of rifle fire out on the ranges where they test cartridges—so and so many out of every thousand—all day long. It was one of the queerest impressions of my life, but we took no pictures there!

"At Watertown, Mass., near Boston, the gun carriages and biggest shells are made. Here was obtained the beautiful picture which is called in the film 'Blowing Steel.' No one has ever photographed these things before, and in all human probability no one will ever do so again, for the plants are to be reorganized and then they will close up tight again. Prominent engineers who have seen these pictures have expressed the opinion that they are the finest industrial pictures which have ever been taken. The secret of this is that they are close-ups, which show every detail of the process with almost greater impressiveness than if one were looking at the real thing. But there are other remarkable features of the picture.

"Every one has spoken of the reproduction of the raid on Columbus, with its extraordinary representation of Villa. In the scenes in Washington the House and the Senate are reproduced with such fidelity that a Congressman or a Senator would feel at home there. Men have been chosen who physically resemble conspicuous figures, Champ Clark and Vice-President Marshall, for example.

"The picture gains immensely when we realize that such a scheme as it protrays for the industrial preparedness of the country, has actually been formulated, and that the listing of the plants adapted to the carrying out of it, has actually begun. To many who have seen it, the most impressive thing in it is the dissolving view of the six men, representing raw material, into the one soldier thoroughly equipped and the five industrials who are needed to equip him. Many people do not realize that, if it ever comes to an actual test of this scheme, it will not be the men of brains and soft hands who will be exempt from military service in the trenches, but the huskies who wield the hammer and the honest workingman, who in previous wars has been the one to be called first."

JULIAN BEGINS NEW FEATURE.

"MARCEL'S Birthday Present," suggested by a play of the same name, is the next production to be undertaken by Director Rupert Julian who has just finished the masterpiece "The Bugler of Algiers."

The original play was written by H. R. Durant and has been scenarioized in five reels by E. J. Clawson. Julian will not play any of the roles.

THE world's greatest theme, staged in the hugest manner. Spectacles outdone by realistic scenes of the most thrilling and timely interest. A lavish and stupendous production with a brilliant cast of BLUEBIRD players,

A magnificent and tremendous presentation of an absorbing story of National Defense.

Beyond description because without precedent. A box-office attraction unparalleled because it has the universal appeal; the grip direct that clutches at the heart of every American man, woman and child. A picture that accomplishes what other producers have attempted—but without the usual silly mimic warfare, paper castles and ingenious brain-storms.

"EAGLE'S WINGS" is a dignified yet fascinating drama that will hold your audiences spellbound, and send them from your theatre to tell their friends it is the greatest world-drama ever told in pictures.

NOTICE to all BLUEBIRD Exhibitors: The BLUEBIRD Exchanges have paid an enormous sum for the State Rights to this exceptional picture. It is called "A BLUEBIRD Extraordinary," not merely to advertise it, but to give you due notice that it is a Special Release.

You must expect to pay a good price for it because it is so unusual that but for the action of the BLUEBIRD Exchanges it would have been State Righted. Then you would have paid as much or more—and without the prestige of the BLUEBIRD name.

Special posters have been prepared. Unique and distinctive paper, worthy of this great picture. There is an extra special 24-sheet, a 6-sheet, two 3-sheets and two 1-sheets. Also a magnificent window card.

We suggest that you wire for a booking reservation now. Remember, it is not on the BLUEBIRD Program. Book through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

GREAT LESSON IN "IDLE WIVES"

By JANE M'LEAN:

"Idle Wives," the great new picture of the Universal Film Company, as a production, conveys precisely the meaning it was intended to convey. Its purpose is to hold the mirror up to society and to promote as far as possible that feeling of democracy that should be more prevalent where democracy is thought to be a foreword to everything worth while.

"Idle Wives" is founded on the novel of that name by James Oppenheim. An interesting prologue has been arranged for the picture, showing types who go to see it and benefit greatly by the lesson it involves This necessitates the showing of a picture within a picture, which is always interesting when well managed.

The film tells briefly of the hopelessness of the outlook for a woman who makes a typical society "match" Her husband loves his stocks and bonds far more than he loves her. her in the splendid handling of the contrasted detail. The captions are clear, and each has a separate background appropriately illustrating the scene in question.

The Universal Film Company has undertaken to present a series of pictures that will serve as warnings to the ignorant. Such films as "Idle Wives" cannot help but add to the credit of any motion picture corporation, and a purpose so laudable as this should be duly recognized and appreciated.

"IDLE WIVES" TRUE TO LIFE

Powerful Photoplay at Maxine Elliott's Theatre Faithfully Portrays Foibles of Human Nature. Lesson for the Young.

By REV THOMAS B GREGORY.

IT was my good fortune last evening to see "Idle Wives," at the Maxine Elliott Theatre, Thirty-ninth street and Broadway, and it was—RIDICULOUS.

But hold on a minute. This does not mean what it would seem to mean. I do not intend to convey the idea that "Idle Wives" is silly, or comical, or purile. I say the picture is ridiculous; and it is ridiculous simply because it is a perfect replica of human life, and human life is the most ridiculous of all things, in fact, the only ridiculous thing under the stars.

But hold on once more, please I am not slandering human life, or making light of it. If I thought there was a drop of cynicism in my blood I'd let it out if it killed me; for one had better be dead than be a cynic.

EYE-OPENER IN "IDLE WIVES," SAYS ZIT

By "ZIT."

The Universal Film Company presented a subject last night entitled "Idle Wives," which will cause more "agreeing with" than discussion, for in this photodrama of truth, those who see it who are addicted to some of the habits that the picture is trying to improve, will find an eye-opener that no book or words can teach. For years we have been seeing the slums in these so-called vice pictures, but we have never really seen society hit as we see the upper class shown in "Idle Wives."

"Idle Wives" Opens at Maxine Elliott Theatre

ANOTHER reel novelty arrived on Broadway last night. It was shown at the Maxine Elliott Theatre for the first time and is called "Idle Wives." It aroused the curiosity among theatregoers to the extent of compelling the management to give two exhibitions in order to accommodate the crowds. If the enthusiasts who witnessed the film last night go home and tell their neighbors about the strong moral lesson it conveys, the Maxine Elliott Theatre can count on capacity business for the remainder of the run.

This vivid play of New York social life is based on the theme that the American home is the greatest institution of the American people, and that anything which threatens the sanctity, peace and safety of home is the devil's brew. "Idle Wives" has been produced to bring that lesson home to every husband and wife, to every young girl and young man in the world—and it does.

No wife or mother can follow the life story of Anne Wall, who refuses a parasitical existence in lieu of helping others, without a heart-ache that teaches a lasting lesson. No girl or young man can observe the wanderings of poor Molly Shane as she flies from the protecting roof of her poor but honest parents, and fails to realize the tragedy which discontent inevitably brings.

The red blood and throbbing life of a great city pulsates in every scene of "Idle Wives," who come from the parlors of the rich as well as from the seductive dance halls of the working girls.

The ... is much to commend in the new screen play. Its lesson is conveyed with a punch more ... ful than either sermon or ... by the ... "Idle Wives" ... Phillips Sm... has ...

"IDLE WIVES," PICTURE SERMON

Photoplay at Maxine Elliott's Theatre Based on Dangers of Indolence in Society.

It is an old saw, "It takes nine tailors to make a man," and it took two men and a woman to make the photographic preachment to young men and women which, under the title "Idle Wives," was shown last night at Maxine Elliott's Theatre. The first night spectators were late in arriving, but they gave approval to the photo play.

"Idle Wives" is based on a novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim, who wove one of his tense tales of love that doesn't run smoothly, with men and women of society as his principal figures. He showed the discontent that causes misunderstandings in couples and leads to the divorce mill and demonstrates the possibility of reconciliation of the estranged by letting them see some of the unfortunates in ... sub- merged tenth" and the reasons for their downfall

Neighborhood Good Will-Valuable Asset

HOW THE UNIVERSAL JUVENILE PROGRAMS WILL DEVELOP IT FOR THE EXHIBITOR.

By GEORGE U. STEVENSON

Manager Juvenile Program Bureau, Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York.

DID you ever stop to consider, Mr. Exhibitor, that it is "good business" to cultivate the good will of your community?

Do you realize that without the expenditure of a cent of extra capital you may develop prestige and position for yourself and theatre? That this prestige will mean immediate revenue to you and an ultimate increased value for your house?

Of course, this cannot be obtained without the expenditure of something, and the "something" in this case is willingness to co-operate with your neighbor in their neighborhood ideals.

The average citizen who has an investment in property, who has children in school, or who belongs to a church, lodge or club, wants to see his community improve. He would be a poor husband or father, or a negligent son or brother, if he did not interest himself in shielding his family group from degrading influences, and direct it toward better things. Naturally he is to be found lined up with others of his class in a defense of the neighborhood spirit.

The tone of this neighborhood spirit varies with communities, according to the influence exerted by the directing minds. In one community it may be puritanical, while in another it may be ultra-liberal. But it is always higher in purpose than that of the individuals who compose it. Whatever be the tone of your community, Mr. Exhibitor, it is your place not to oppose it, but to work with it.

Therefore, do not denounce offhand as faddists and busybodies, the members of the women's clubs, the schools and the churches, who send committees to you asking for the inclusion of a certain class of pictures in your programs. They represent public sentiment in your community, and as such are entitled to your utmost consideration.

Instead of "stalling" them when they ask that you put on special Juvenile Programs, invite their co-operation and give them the necessary pointers that will make it possible for them to make the affairs a financial success.

Instead of cold shouldering the delegation from your local schools and churches who desire to have shown special programs of educational, moral or religious films, ask them to guarantee the expense of such performances, and meet them half-way by giving personal attention to the other details of arrangement for service, advertising, etc., with which they cannot be expected to be familiar. Saturday morning or week-day afternoons on which you have no matinees, may be used for these purposes to your mutual advantage.

Until a few months ago it was an almost impossible task to procure these programs. Now, however, since the establishment of the special Juvenile Program Bureau of the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the supplying of this class of service is largely a matter of routine.

Alleged anxiety for child morals is at the bottom of all agitation for motion-picture censorship. While many of the agitators have self-interest, or an ingrained prejudice against motion-pictures in general as their motive, we must not ignore the fact that there are thousands of earnest men and women throughout the country who believe that the children should not be given the strong meat that is furnished adult audiences by the average picture-show. Twenty thousand delegates and alternates to the 13th Biennial Convention in New York City last May, put the 2,000,000 clubwomen of America on record as holding this view; and the newly elected President of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, as her first official act, named a committee of ladies of national prominence to meet a similar committee of film manufacturers to arrange for "Better Motion Pictures for Children."

With its customary enterprise, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had anticipated this situation by providing a series of thirteen special programs for juveniles to be rented out to the women's clubs or theatres, on a new plan, to be worked in conjunction with its exchanges throughout America.

The basis of the series is the grand patriotic instructional film "Uncle Sam at Work," issued in twelve parts, one reel each week, showing in a spirited way the activities of our national government. The accompanying sample program is typical of the series, each program of which comprises one child comedy or drama; one animated cartoon or novelty; one travel or nature film; or combinations of these calculated to make five reels of good lively entertainment:

UNIVERSAL JUVENILE PROGRAM
Number Five

1136—Uncle Sam at Work (No. 5), Patriotic.
Protecting the Ships at Sea. Powers—1 reel
1515—Betty's Hobo (Thos. Jefferson and Zoe Rae), Child Dr. Big U—1 reel
CC—In and Around Chicago. Travel. 1 reel
1440—A Toyland Robbery. Novelty. Powers—½ reel
CC—Marvels of the Insect World. Nature. ½ reel
Mammy's Chile (Matthews), Juvenile Comedy. Powers—1 reel

This arrangement of films, which insures the utmost variety in combination with good taste and live entertainment value, is the result of a careful survey of the situation by the Universal's Juvenile Program Bureau. The judgment of teachers and child psychologists, of practical exhibitors who have made a practice of catering to children's entertainment, and of the children themselves were all considered.

The Universal Juvenile Programs are a recognition of the practical opinion of earnest people who know what they are talking about. They are not merely a "stab in the dark," but a well-considered plan to eliminate from the children's view the vicious and nasty, but not the wholesomely vigorous films.

There are hundreds of the latter class of subjects that have been made and released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the past. All of these negatives have been carefully viewed and such parts eliminated as might run counter to the plan. These subjects in the balanced program form will be issued in brand-new prints as rapidly as the demand for them manifests itself.

These programs may be run either separately or in the series of thirteen performances at the uniform rental price of $10 a performance, or $120 for the series, expressage to and from New York City additional. If a dozen or more theatres in any State or metropolitan district of the country will contract for the series of thirteen performances, a special program will be issued for that territory to clear from the central Universal Exchange, thus insuring definite service and obviating excessive express charges.

The activities of the Juvenile Program Bureau of the Universal have further been extended to make a survey of all films that are upon the shelves of the various Universal Exchanges throughout the Union. These are being arranged into program form upon the same plan of selection that governs the Bureau's circulating programs, and are available from local exchanges at above rates.

"THE CELEBRATED STIELOW CASE"

Produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley Producers of

"WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN"

The famous STIELOW CASE has had Nation-wide publicity. Nearly every newspaper throughout the United States has carried news of some sort of this great legal tangle. From the facts gathered it looks as though an innocent man is being railroaded to the electric chair; thus this subject has a most powerful appeal to all classes. The character impersonation of Stielow is acknowledged to be the finest portrayal of a character ever seen in moving pictures, and greater by far than anything that has ever been done on the legitimate stage. Nothing ever seen on any screen even begins to equal the performance of the man who portrays the leading role.

This picture, handled and directed under the direct personal supervision of Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, is alone sufficient guarantee to all of its extraordinary character and crowd-bringing qualities. You recall "Where Are My Children?"—and its tremendous sucess, having a run in the city of Chicago alone for over 15 consecutive weeks, playing to packed houses. This is a Smalley picture, and you'll find the STIELOW CASE as strong and even stronger in its tremendous appeal to all classes of people as "Where Are My Children?" It will be sold on State Rights basis, and will be released shortly after its first presentation in New York City.

Write or wire the State Rights Department of the ARGOSY FILMS, Inc., 1600 Broadway, for terms, prices, release date, etc.

This beautiful drama is positive proof of the fact that BLUEBIRD means an evening of delightful entertainment. It means that no pains are spared to make story, cast and production everything that the public expects them to be. It means that we do not make BLUEBIRDS for the Star's benefit, but rather the benefit of the public on the theory that "the play's the thing".

The term BLUEBIRD means more than the brand of an advertiser. It definitely exemplifies quality because no second-rate picture can possibly be a BLUEBIRD. It has got to be highest-grade, cleanest in tone, most comprehensive in plot and utterly fit for the whole family, Father, Mother, Son and Daughter.

PISH TUSH

(No. 152. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

EDITOR JOHNSTON, of the Motion Picture News, publishes some figures showing that 80 percent of the moving picture theatres are small ones, seating 650 or less.

These houses, he says, want "a little art, a little literature, a little drama, a little travel, a little fun, a little news." He then goes on to say that if the advertisements in the trade papers may be taken as a criterion the manufacturers today are "not meeting this broad and basic demand."

Tut, tut, Mr. Johnston. Moreover, fie upon you!

Don't you know, haven't you heard, haven't your reporters told you that the Universal program is just exactly what you specify--"a little art, a little literature, a little drama, a little travel, a little fun, a little news?"

Mr. Johnston, pish, tush! And a couple of gee whizzes!

Don't you realize that the Universal is about the ONLY MANUFACTURING CONCERN WHICH HAS NEVER FORGOTTEN THE LITTLE THEATRE?

Don't you know that we have hammered, hammered and hammered home the fact that we regard the little theatre as the BACKBONE of the business. Haven't we said time after time that the Universal never got panic-stricken, as some program concerns did, but kept furnishing short subjects of a quality superior to ninety percent of the big features?

MR. JOHNSTON!

Pooh, Mr. Johnston, pooh twice!

Don't you know that every Monday night some forty or fifty of the best sets of brains in the moving picture business look at our whole program (several weeks in advance of release date) just to see that the week's program has just the right variety of art and literature and travel and drama and news and comedy?

Don't you know that if the week's program contains too much of one and too little of another variety, it is changed and switched and pulled and hauled until it is PERFECTLY BALANCED?

Editor Johnston, there is a great and growing trade paper known as the Motion Picture News. I advise you to read it carefully--its advertising columns and its news columns. You will then discover what thousands of exhibitors already know--namely, that the Universal program knows what the little theatre (as well as the big one) needs and furthermore IT SUPPLIES THAT NEED!

The Universal, I honestly believe, is the only manfacturer that has never, never, never forgotten the little theatre. Furthermore, the little theatres everywhere are flocking to the Universal program in a way that is positively EXCITING!

Mr. Johnston, tut, tut!!!

RECORD TEA PARTY.

THERE was recently held in Windsor Great Park in England the largest tea party on record. It was for the benefit of 6,000 wounded Tommies and all the 6,000 were there enjoying all the benefits. It was something of an international affair, too, as there were about 800 Australians and New Zealanders, 500 Canadians and 250 South Africans, as well as 4,000 men drawn from the home regiments. The program, conducted by the army service corps, consisted of a drive, a tea, and other amusements that were enjoyed by all the men.

Although the whole is shown in the forty-seventh number of the Animated Weekly, this does not give an adequate idea of the size of the affair. Among the other things that were served there was 1,000 pounds of plain cake, 1,000 pounds of current cake, 1,250 pounds of meat, 150 pounds of tea, 600 pounds of sugar and 18,000 cigarettes. Everyone pitched in with a will, even the taxi drivers helping by furnishing free transportation to and from the park. These men have been doing a great deal of late to make the lot of the wounded men a little easier by carrying them about the city.

A SHEER STEAL.

THE editor of the Universal Animated Weekly has so many times demonstrated that there is nothing that he and his live-wire cameramen cannot get, that it is almost useless to praise them any more. But again they have stolen the finest films of a football game that they were not supposed to film at all, so that all due credit must be given. This time it was the University of Pittsburg and Washington and Jefferson game that appears in the forty-seventh number of the Animated Weekly. The rights to film the game had been sold to another concern, but that was no reason why the patrons of the Animated Weekly should not see this exciting event. So a camera was smuggled in and the result was that they obtained the best films that were taken, and that night they were shown in some of the theatres in Pittsburg.

The game was a corker, as the two teams are rivals, and this year, as usual, they both had excellent football aggregations. That Pitt won, 37-0, is a tribute to the coaching methods of the veteran Glen Warner, who for years turned out teams at Carlisle that made the rest of the football world tremble with terror.

AN ANCIENT CEREMONY.

THE forty-seventh number of the Animated Weekly shows one of the oldest customs in existence in England, the opening of the law courts. For centuries this custom has been observed and the English, with their ultra-conservatism, hesitate to abolish an observance that has been in existence for so many years. The custom consists in all the judges and a great many members of the bar marching through the streets of London after attending service in Westminster Abbey. From there they proceed to the law courts, where the business is at once begun. A very good shot of this is shown in the Weekly and should prove very interesting to Americans, as the lawyers all are attired in their long gowns and white wigs, making a very picturesque appearance.

A THIRD OF A MILE A YEAR.

WHAT is supposed to be the slowest continued motion on record was discovered as a letter posted fifty-seven years ago reached its destination a few years ago. The letter came in the ordinary channels of the post and the man to whom it was addressed having died some years ago, it was delivered to his son. The letter was written to a Mr. E. A. Edenbourne from his brother-in-law, telling him of the death of his mother-in-law. The chances were that it was caught in a crevice of the post-box or of the post office and was hidden for all these years. But the affair has many remarkable features. One cannot help wondering whether or not the man to whom it was addressed ever went to the funeral. It is also remarkable to note that the letter, taking fifty-seven years to go the eighteen miles from Willow Grove, Pa., where it was mailed, to its destination, traveled at the rate of a third of a mile a year, which seems to be the record for slow procedure. All the particulars of the incident are shown at length in the forty-seventh number of the Animated Weekly.

A $10,000 GIFT.

IT is gratifying to hear that there is one club for the furtherance of one art that does not confine its efforts to writing pamphlets on the subject. The forty-seventh number of the Universal Animated Weekly shows the Massachusetts Aero Club presenting to the State a $10,000 aeroplane for the advancement of the art of flying in that State. The occasion of the gift was the memory of Norman Prince, the American aviator who was killed while serving in the French corps somewhere in France. Governor McCall is shown accepting the gift and ex-Governor Walsh is shown making a speech on preparedness.

ELLA HALL PLAYS WITH TWELVE LITTLE GIRLS.

IN "Mary, Keep Your Feet Still," dainty Ella Hall, Bluebird star, is doing some of the best work of her career before the camera. She is working under the direction of Jack Conway in this five-reel production.

Miss Hall is supported by Marcia Moore, another dainty little actress, and Margaret Whistler, well-known character woman. But what has delighted the little actress more than anything is the fact that a troupe of little girls are also appearing in the company in a number of clever stage dances.

When not actually at work the clever little star is playing with the children and keeping them amused while they are waiting for the next scene of the photoplay.

One afternoon the sun hid behind a bank of clouds for fully half an hour at a time at intervals all day.

Director Jack Conway was working on a set representing a theatre stage. During one of the dark intervals Miss Hall suggested they present a play for the amusement of the twelve little girls who are appearing in the production and so the photoplayers did the best they could to play a real play with Conway as the only man in the cast with the exception of Cameraman E. Kull, who was required to stand in the background as a bit of scenery.

The attempt to speak impromptu lines caused much laughter not only for the children but for the few visitors who happened along at the time.

MILTON MOORE PROMOTED.

AFTER having served a number of years as one of the expert cameraman at Universal City, Milton Moore has been detailed by John M. Nicholaus, Superintendent of Photography, to the office of O. L. Sellers, production manager.

Moore will be known as Sellers' expert assistant over all questions of photography, arrangements of sets for proper lighting and special lighting effects. This is a deserved promotion for Moore.

Ben Wilson Plays Best Role Thus Far

Ben Wilson.

ONE of the "Old Guard" of Universal players is Ben Wilson, who has been associated with the company for several years. Wilson is an actor of vast experience, having been connected with some sort of "Show business" ever since he was a boy. He says that he cannot remember, as a child, being interested in anything else. One of the keenest memories of his early days is the time that "Hamlet" came to Corning, Iowa, where he was born, and he, like a spendthrift, had squandered all his pocket money on a baseball catcher's mitt.

"I had to see the play," he says, "so I sneaked into the 'Opera House' during the day, while it was being swept, and hid in an elevator shaft, where the dust kept me in an agony of apprehension lest a sneeze might give me away. I stayed for hours in that shaft, but I've always thought that the play was worth it." That is the true "theatre blood."

Wilson declares that everything he did as a boy was done with the stage in view. He read books about the stage, practised "elocution" in the barn, made gestures at himself in the glass for hours at a time, and learned the longest poems by heart in record time to make himself a "quick study." At last the eager boy had an opportunity to join a repertoire organization. After valuable training, he became a member of the Spooner Stock Company in Brooklyn, where he played innumerable parts. Then he became manager of the Park Theatre. Almost as soon as his occupancy began, the building caught fire and burned to the ground.

So Wilson went back to playing, this time to Broadway. He was connected with several successful plays, among them "Paid in Full" and "Seven Days." It was while playing in the former that he became so seriously interested in motion pictures that he was tempted to give up the stage for them. But his friends raised a howl of protest.

"Pictures?" they cried contemptuously. "They are the last resource of the broken down actor, unfit for anything better!"

So Wilson postponed his screen debut, and joined the "Seven Days" company which enjoyed a New York run of fifty-two weeks. Meantime, the contemptuous friends had been watching the development of the "infant industry" with something akin to alarm. So when Wilson again declared his intention of playing for the films, they exclaimed "Go to it!"

He went to the Edison company, where he had an immediate success. Since joining Universal, Mr. Wilson has made a reputation for himself as a director, which rivals his success as an actor. His tremendous experience stood him in good stead here. He has seen so much that he has a vast store of impressions to draw upon, as well as the imagination to use them. He served in the Spanish-American war, among other things, and his experience as a soldier has been invaluable to him.

Wilson is a home-loving, easy-going sort of chap, who refuses to get excited about the changes and chances of the actor's career. He possesses the invaluable quality of adaptability. When the Universal players were moved out of the old Imp studio over to the brand-new building at Fort Lee, Wilson, with his usual foresight, built himself a house there, and was comfortably installed before the snowy weather made the daily trip a matter of difficulty to all the other players who lived in New York. Then came the exodus to Universal City. Every one was excited over that except Ben Wilson. He sold his house, packed up, and was again one of the first to be settled in Hollywood.

Since reaching the Coast, Wilson has been adding to his laurels as a director. He put on two three-reel photoplays, "Honor Thy Country" and "Society Hypocrites," which won him the unstinted praise of the professional critics and the public. Wilson also directed a five-reel feature with Neva Gerber in the lead, which has not yet been set for release.

His talents as an actor were quickly recognized by the Universal City directors, and they all made bids for his services. Lois Weber asked him to portray the husband in the prologue of her splendid production, "Idle Wives." Then Conway asked him to take the dual role in the present Red Feather. But the role of the "doubles" in "The Mainspring" is the best part that Wilson has ever had, so he is reconciled to his temporary deprivation of authority.

Ruth Stonehouse and Raymond Wells directing a scene in "Kinkaid, Gambler," next Red Feather.

"The Mainspring"

"THE MAINSPRING" is the forty-fourth Red Feather Production. Written by by Charles Agnew McLean, supervising editor of the Street and Smith publications. The scenario is by William Parker, and the photoplay was produced by Jack Conway. It features Ben Wilson and Francelia Billington.

CAST.

Larry Ashmore speaks for himself.

NOVELS are very often put into scenario form for the screen, but it is not often that the process is reversed. However, Charles Agnew McLean, the editor-in-chief of all the Street and Smith publications, who wrote the story of "The Mainspring," is convinced that it will make a good novel, and will publish it as a serial in one of his many magazines. The working script was made by William Parker of the Universal staff, and Jack Conway was responsible for the production. Ben Wilson, who of late years has been out of the habit of taking direction from any one, is featured in the leading role, an unusually difficult one, with two distinct characterizations; for the plot is based upon the extraordinary resemblance between two men. Conway has not resorted to the expedient of double exposure to any great extent, but nevertheless, the problem of presenting the two characters and discriminating between them by outward tricks of manner, walk and gesture, is a great one, and is handled in splendid fashion by Ben Wilson.

Larry Craven confronts his friends.

Francelia Billington has not very much to do except to look pretty, and she can always be depended upon for that. Others in the cast who have important roles are Marc Robbins, as the "Tiger of Wall Street," and Thomas Jefferson, as his henchman. It is a new experience for Mr. Jefferson to play a villain, but his artistry is equal to the task.

One of the most convincing shipwrecks ever staged is put on in this picture. Larry Ashmore, the hero, is kidnaped, and taken on board a small vessel. But a great storm arises and the boat founders. It is always difficult to stage a scene of this kind, but the flooding of the cabin, gradual sinking of the vessel, and the escape of Larry by swimming are all carried out with the utmost realism.

The story itself, one of the best in recent pictures, is as follows:

Jesse Craven, the great financier, is ill, but so closely guarded is he that the public can obtain no details, and are in suspense as to whether he is seriously ill or only slightly indisposed. Lawrence Ashmore, a young reporter, is detailed by one of the papers to obtain an interview.

Larry Craven, Jesse's son, is expected to arrive from Europe, and the chauffeur mistakes Ashmore for him, Ashmore bearing a very close resemblance to the son. But when Edith, Jesse's niece, and Richard Creelman, Jesse's closest friend, see Ashmore after the first moment of meeting, they realize that he is not Larry, and so hold him a prisoner, fearing that he may be a spying reporter. Larry meanwhile has been kidnaped by the orders of Shackleton, who is the confidential man—also the former secretary to Craven—to Farnum and Sharp, two brokers, who are bent upon the ruin of Craven and the thousands of stockholders who have entrusted their investments to him.

Creelman and Ramsdale, the latter Craven's broker, offer Ashmore a large sum of money if he will pose as Larry, since the resemblance is so strong, and he agrees. He and Edith become warm friends. Farnum and Sharp, thinking they have Larry safe, manipulate the stock market, and things are looking very serious for the Craven interests. They keep the real Larry under the influence of liquor most of the time.

In order to carry their bluff further, they plan that "Should She Have Told?"

Brother against brother.

GOLD SEAL three-reeler. Written and produced by John McDermott. Tells gripping story in straightforward manner. Girl marries brother of betrayer. Should she have told?

CAST.

John Randall	Edward Hearn
Ed Randall	George Beranger
Mary	Ruth Clifford

Below—The one she thought was real.

"SHOULD SHE HAVE TOLD?" a three-reel Gold Seal, presents a question that is an interesting one and affords at the same time excellent drama. When the wife has committed an indiscretion in her youth or been the innocent victim of circumstances, should she tell her husband or should she keep the secret? The wife in this picture did not tell, and her life was almost ruined as a consequence. The final scene when her happiness and even her life itself hung in the balance while two men worked out a physical and mental problem before her eyes is one of the biggest moments that can well be imagined. The best part of it is that this moment was bound to come and the audience knows it all the time. The suspense in this film is wonderful and greatly heightened by the clever work of Ruth Clifford and George Beranger.

Of the brothers, John and Ed Randall, the one employs his spare time in studying law, while the other seeks low companionship and drink. The ways of the two are so far apart that Ed decides to leave his brother, assume another name, go to a distant city and there live as he pleases.

Soon he becomes the leader of one of the most notorious bands of crooks in the vicinity. Then he meets Mary, a little flower girl, whom he befriends, and ere long she has become his bride. She remonstrates with him to give up his evil companions, but he will not listen to her. On the night of their wedding he receives a note calling him for a big "job." He starts to leave, but Mary, reading the note, knocks him unconscious and for a time prevents his going, but later he leaves. She follows and the whole gang are apprehended and arrested. Ed is sent to prison, but Mary is released and the district attorney's wife takes her into her home as her daughter.

Soon after, the attorney brings John home with him and the two meet—and love. Mary, hiding her past from her lover, marries him and for some time everything goes happily in the little household, until John discovers that their son, Roy, is reading bad books and smoking.

One day, while Mary and Roy are playing ball, it rolls away to a park bench upon which is seated Ed, just recently released from prison. He recognizes Mary and later extorts money from her as the price of his silence. The time comes when she has no more money for him and then he kidnaps Roy, intending to make him a member of his gang, which Roy is willing to be. Mary rescues him from the den, but Ed, awakening and finding the boy gone, follows to Mary's home, where there is a scene between the three. John returns home as Ed and the boy hide behind a curtain, but Roy calls and John comes back into the room. A fight takes place and a ray of light, falling upon Ed's face, makes it possible for John to discover it is his own brother. Ed begs forgiveness, tells John that he had come to rob the house and had been prevented by Mary—so her secret remains with her.

Pierre, Gabrielle and Anatole bid each other good-bye.

"The Bugler of Algiers"

WITH RUPERT JULIAN, ELLA HALL AND KINGSLEY BENEDICT

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS," the forty-fourth Bluebird photoplay, is a refutation of the old saying that too many cooks spoil the broth. A great many cooks were concerned in its making, but the broth remains of super-excellent quality. Robert H. Davis, the editor of Munsey's Magazine, wrote the original story in collaboration with Perley Poore Sheehan, and it was published in the All Story Magazine, under the title of "We Are French." It had an immediate and impressive success, and was later brought out in book form. Sir Gilbert Parker wrote a preface to the volume, in which he said that reading the book reminded him of sojourning in an orchard where wild fruit grows, plentiful, ruddy and sweet. The story found its way into the trenches, and was translated into French at the express request of General Joffre, that it might be read to him. It is regarded in Europe as a sort of text book on patriotism.

The authors saw its picture-play possibilities, and sold them to Bluebird, and Rupert Julian was chosen to produce the film, from the script by Elliott J. Clawson, because of his former Bluebird successes, because of his military experience during the Boer war, and because he possesses the imagination and sensitiveness necessary for a delicate piece of work like this. The other leading roles were confided to two of the most capable of the Bluebird players, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict, who have already appeared together in "The Crippled Hand" and "The Love Girl," former Bluebird successes. Everything possible was done to insure the success of the play. A special street of French houses was constructed, and one of the most elaborate sets ever erected was built for the scene of the presentation of the Cross of the Legion of Honor, to the patriot.

The scene of the picture is laid in the France of 1870, but no attempt has been made to make the story in any way partisan, and no reference to the present European situation appears in the course of the tale. France was chosen by the authors of the story, because, as Sir Gilbert Parker says in his preface, odd things do happen in France, because the race is original. But the theme of the story is one which appeals to the deepest, finest instinct of the human race as a whole—patriotism, love of country, devotion to a cause. The authors have expressed the wish that the Marseillaise, acknowledged to be the finest patriotic song in any country, should be played all through the running of the picture, not because it is French, but because it is so perfect an expression of the devotion of a people to their cause.

A few scenes from the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71 are introduced, for the purpose of explaining the separation of Gabrielle from her home and kin, but when it is realized that more than forty years has elapsed since these events took place, it will be seen that the picture is historical, and has no reference to the antagonisms and conflicts of today.

When Mr. Davis and Mr. Sheehan saw the picture on the screen for the first time, they sent a telegram to the Bluebird studio, which read: "We have just seen 'The Bugler of Algiers.' The laurel wreath is yours, wet with our tears. The picture is greater than the book—a miracle of photography, a marvel of continuity, a new and progressive chapter in the history of silent drama."

In the little town of Miribel, where all the girls are beautiful, lived Gabrielle Picard, an orphan, and her younger brother Anatole, to whom she had been mother and sister, ever since their parents left them alone. The dearest friend of both, is Pierre

Pierre relinquishes his borrowed honors.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS" is the forty-fourth Bluebird Photoplay, and was written by Robert H. Davis, the editor of Munsey's Magazine in collaboration with Perley Poore Sheehan, and published under the title of "We Are French" in the All Story Magazine and later in book form. The scenario was prepared by Elliott J. Clawson and the play was produced by Rupert Julian, who plays one of the leads, with Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict in the other principal roles.

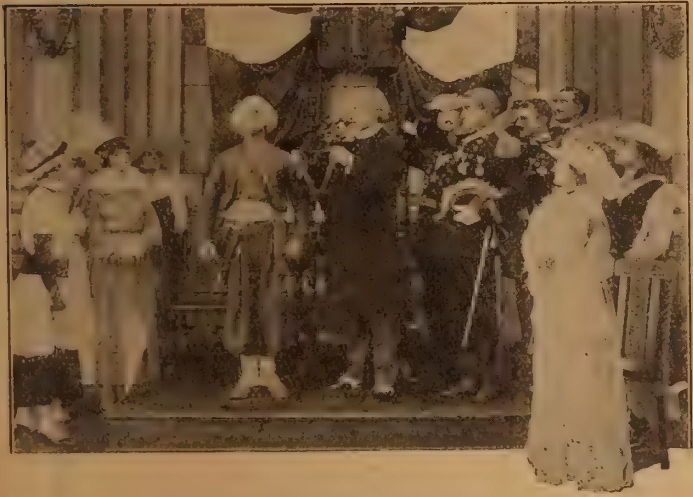
Instead of the retreat, Anatole blows the "Charge!"

Dupont, who has loved Gabrielle ever since she was a tiny girl, but who has always been too shy to tell her so.

The call to war comes, and the two young men are among the first to be summoned. They are members of a Zouave regiment, and are embarked at once for the scene of action in Algiers. They have time only for a hurried farewell, but Gabrielle finds a moment in which to promise her bashful lover that she will marry him on his return, if he will take her place in watching over Anatole.

Anatole becomes the bugler of the regiment. During one of the skirmishes, he and Pierre become separated from their comrades, and fall into the hands of the Arabs. The Sheik, who sees the French troops almost exhausted, orders Anatole, his prisoner, to blow the retreat, offering freedom for himself and his comrade, as the reward. Anatole raises the bugle to his lips, and blows, not the retreat, but the charge. The French are reanimated with courage, and the day is won. But Pierre and Anatole are not found by their comrades. They linger to give burial to the little drummer boy, who falls mortally wounded and dies in their arms. So a report of their death reaches the village, and the good Cure has to break the sad news to Gabrielle as best he can.

Evil days fall upon the village. War comes, and the little place is invaded by hostile troops. A group of officers is quartered in the cottage of Gabrielle. They order her to bring them wine; she does so, and they attempt to force her to drink a toast to their success. She takes the glass and throws the contents in the officer's face. Similar treatment from the patriotic women of the village angers the invaders and they set fire to the houses. Gabrielle sees her home reduced to ruins before her eyes. She is offered a home by neighbors who are leaving that part of the country and goes with them.



At the top of the steps stood the hero.

So, when their seven years are over, and the two Zouaves return to Miribel, nothing but desolation awaits them. Gabrielle has disappeared and try as they may they cannot find her out. They rebuild her cottage and settle down to live out their lives in the place of their happiest memories, earning a living as vine-dressers. Pierre never tires of recounting the tale of Anatole's bravery, and is supported in all his disappointments by the thought that some day his friend's heroism will be recognized by his country.

At last the reward of his faith comes. Both are grown old, when one evening a message arrives for Anatole from the head of the Society for the Perpetuation of the Glory of France. There is to be a grand celebration, with the President of the Republic presiding in person, at which the decoration of the Legion of Honor is to be conferred on the patriot, Anatole Picard, for heroic conduct in Algiers, in the year 1871. Pierre is mad with delight at the fulfillment of his prophecy, but Anatole takes the event more calmly. He insists that, if they are to make the journey to Paris, they shall make it like soldiers, on foot and in uniform. Pierre agrees, and the two old men set out on their long march.

Pierre's enthusiasm bears him up, but Anatole begins to flag. He will not hear, however, of Pierre's suggestion that they take the train or a conveyance of any sort. He insists that they continue to march it. Constant telegrams from the almost distracted president of the Society meet them, but to all of them Anatole sends the same reply: "Anatole Picard will be there."

At last they arrive on the outskirts of the city, and Anatole sinks down exhausted by the roadside. He hears an inner voice which assures him, "Anatole Picard shall have no decoration but from the President on high." Pierre, almost heart-broken, supports him to a wayside cottage, where the good people receive him and do their best for him. But the brave spirit cannot longer support the weak body, and Pierre sees his friend pass away before his eyes. Over the body, he takes a resolution, exclaiming: "Thou, comrade God, wilt understand!"

Pierre goes on alone to Paris, where the guests are awaiting his arrival at the luncheon. The head of the Society is nearly out of his mind with suspense. The President of the Republic has arrived, and still no hero. As they sit down to the banquet the great doors at the end of the room open and, there, at the head of the flight of steps, stands an old man in the worn and travel-stained uniform of a Zouave private. A tremendous reception greets him, he is presented to the President, and the ribbon of the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, with the

Universal Gives Cup for Big Auto Race

Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers and R. H. Cochrane to attend Opening Event of Uniontown Race-Track, Pittsburgh, which the Universal Cup Race will Open on Thanksgiving Day

OFFICIALS of the Universal including Carl Laemmle, Pat Powers, and R. H. Cochrane, have engaged a private car in the special train which will leave the Pennsylvania Station at 6 a. m. Thanksgiving Day for Pittsburg where, at the new $1,000,000 Uniontown Speedway, the most famous automobile drivers in America will compete for the solid silver $3,000 trophy presented by the Universal.

The Universal trophy, which will be the reward of the winner of the 112 miles feature event, has been pronounced the most beautiful trophy ever offered in an automobile race. It was made by the well-known firm of Fifth Avenue jewelers, Black, Starr & Frost, and is now on exhibition in their show rooms. Made of solid silver, it stands thirty-six inches high and is fifty-two inches around the base. It rests on a base of Italian marble, which came from Naples and is the last piece of its kind in this country. Since the war started Italy has been sending no marble to the United States, and a most thorough search was made by Black, Starr & Frost for the piece which is used as the base for the trophy.

The Fifth avenue jewelers have been nearly three months making the trophy. Every portion of it was made by hand, and it represents the Universal trade mark. The upper portion is a representation of the globe used by the Universal, and the Saturn ring which is used in the trade mark has been slightly elevated so as to represent the Uniontown track outside of Pittsburg, which was completed only this month. A beautiful silver panel, just above the base, contains the following inscription:

"Presented by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Carl Laemmle, President, to the Uniontown Speedway Association for Automobile Contests to be competed for by motor cars under the rules and with the sanction of the A. A. A. Contest Board."

The deed of gift which was presented by President Carl Laemmle to go with the trophy was sent to the Uniontown Speedway Association officials last week and reads as follows:

"I, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, do hereby donate to the Uniontown Speedway Association a trophy for Automobile Contests, to be contested for with the following provisions:

"The trophy shall be known as the 'Universal Film Trophy.' It shall be competed for by motor cars as defined in the rules of the American Automobile Association and shall be contested for through a period of five years.

"The trophy shall be loaned after each contest to the entrant whose car finished first in the competition; said entrant to retain possession of same until the next succeeding event is held, or until such time preceding the event as in the judgment of the A. A. A. It should be called for to insure its delivery to the next winning competitor. Permanent possession of the said trophy, after the time limit here above named, shall vest in the entrant winning three out of five contests. Qualifications of cars to compete for this trophy to be determined by the Uniontown Speedway Association."

Arrangements are now being made by the Universal to have a scenario written around the race. This will be produced under the direction of one of its best directors, with a couple of its famous Universal City stars in the leading roles.

The Animated Weekly pictures of the race and presentation of the cup by Mr. Laemmle will be shown in the 2,500 theatres throughout the United States using the regular Universal Program service.

Mr. Laemmle has further agreed to place at the disposal of the Uniontown Speedway officials his scenario and publicity departments to assist in an attractive presentation of the winning car. Arrangements are also being made for a preliminary event, to be known as the "Star Race," in which Herbert Rawlinson, Allan Holubar, Ben Wilson, Hobart Henley and other Universal stars will race their own cars.

The big Universal race will be the feature event on Thanksgiving Day at the Uniontown track. It will run 100 laps of 1⅛, or 112½ miles under the rules of the American Automobile Association Contest Board. No car

"LIBERTY"

EPISODE No. 16

CAST.

Liberty Horton	Marie Walcamp
Major Winston	Neal Hart
Jose Leon	L. M. Wells
Capt. Bob Rutledge	Jack Holt
Pedro	Eddie Polo
Pancho Lopez	G. Raymond Nye

Liberty is brought back to the prison by Lopez.

THE sixteenth episode of the serial "Liberty" is a tremendous test of nerve for its chief character, played by the intrepid Marie Walcamp. She has endured almost more than a woman can stand in the former episodes, and run risks innumerable; but in this her courage is put to still greater proof. Shut up in the dungeon, into which she escapes by prying loose a stone in the wall of her cell, she finds herself in close proximity to snakes, (real, live, crawling serpents they are, too,) gila monsters, snapping turtles, rats and other horrors of the animal world. She plunges into a pool, already inhabited by a choice selection of these specimens of the animal kingdom. Pedro, tortured almost to death, is shot into the pool on top of her, and in this appalling situation we are forced to leave them for another whole week.

The sixteenth episode opens with the Major crawling out of his improvised grave, where he finds the bodies of his dead men. He is horror stricken as he sees the ravages of death that are strewn about him. His wounds pain him so that he can scarcely walk and the terrible sight that greets his view almost unbalances his mind, together with the pain that he is suffering. He takes a canteen from one of the bodies and after quenching his thirst he starts out, alone in the desert, to find civilization.

In the meantime Jack and his band of men have decided that they will not go back to the States until they have found Liberty. So they start out in the direction of the Leon Hacienda to learn what news they can.

Marie is still in the subterranean chamber with all the horrors about her. The plucky girl, who has gone through so much, is at last discouraged, as she is beginning to feel the hardship. She has not had anything to drink for more than two days and the thirst is terrible. She comes very near yielding to the temptation to drink some of the stagnant water in the pool.

In the torture chamber Pedro is faring scarcely any better. They have tortured him so that the spark of life has almost gone out. At last he faints from utter exhaustion and they take his limp body and put it through an aperture. The door snaps back and his body is swallowed up in the black.

In the dungeon Liberty is about to yield and drink some of the water when the body of a man comes down the chute. It is Pedro. Liberty drags him out of the water and so saves him from drowning.

In the meanwhile Major Winston is wandering on the desert. He has no more water and is almost dying of thirst. In a frantic effort to find water he digs into the sand. The buzzards are hovering near in the hope that his body will soon be theirs. Finally he falls exhausted and there he is found by Bob.

UNIVERSAL CITY RECOGNIZED AS A WORLD CAPITAL.

UNIVERSAL CITY has been officially recognized as one of the capital cities of the world—in this case the world of motion pictures. Recognition came to the film municipality in the following manner.

Recently a Hupmobile started out on a tour of this country, with the avowed intention of stopping at the capital city of every state in the Union. The journey was to cover twenty-five thousand miles, there and back. In every state capital the tourists were well received, but the greatest reception of all took place in the film "hub of the universe"—Universal City.

LAEMMLE Southern drama in two reels. Written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude. Direction by William V. Mong. Tragedy of Southern "cunel" averted by darky's devotion.

On the old plantation.

"I want to sell these."

WILLIAM V. MONG has turned out a little gem in the Laemmle two-reel drama of the South, entitled "The Last of the Morgans," playing the title role himself. Mong has proven his versatility in direction, time and again, as well as his peculiar adaptability for a variety of character roles. His success lies in his ability to act, not at all in the God-given privilege of playing handsome juveniles; he is not cut out for this, and he knows it. But there is plenty of pathos, plenty of strong acting, and plenty of conviction in the roles which he assigns himself, and in the manner in which he plays these roles. One of the very best of them is the old colonel in "The Last of the Morgans," written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, who also are the joint authors of "Just Her Luck," the two-reeler, the story of which will be found on the opposite page.

Mong's make-up is masterful; his assumption of the character truly wonderful. He seldom wears whiskers in an attempt to simulate age greater than his own. He doesn't have to, for he is able to make up his face by the aid of a little artifice, and with the true feeling of an artist, he attains the result desired. The story of "The Last of the Morgans" follows:

Colonel Morgan, the last of the Morgans, has finally come to the end of his resources and is compelled to sell his old homestead.

On the day before the sale he visits the grave of his wife and before his vision pass the many happy events of their married life. While he is dreaming, the real estate man brings some prospective purchasers to see the place. Morgan cannot stand this invasion of the spot so sacred to him and haughtily orders them from the premises.

The next day the place is sold and Morgan is forced to leave. His colored servants feel this very keenly and old Peter tells Morgan that if only he could find the jewels which Mrs. Morgan had hidden when the Northern army invaded the town it would enable him to repurchase the old plantation.

Meantime, with the money obtained from the sale, Morgan goes to the city. "Smooth" McGuire, a confidence man, notices the roll of money and with a confederate of his frames up a deal to sell Morgan a street car. They show the old man many passengers riding on the cars and point out that it would be a very lucrative investment. Old Morgan buys the car, but soon learns that he had simply given his money to the stranger. A kindly policeman gives him sufficient money to return to the old homestead.

Old Peter, while ploughing the fields, has discovered the jewels and with the money obtained from the sale of them Colonel Morgan is enabled to buy back the old plantation, although the present owners are loathe to part with it and only do so when Peter threatens to establish a colored church on the adjoining plantation.

LYDIA YEAMANS TITUS MEETS MAXWELL RYDER.

MAXWELL RYDER, one of the directors at Universal City, resumed his acquaintance with Lydia Yeamans Titus at the picture-making studio a few weeks ago while she was playing in "Just Her Luck."

Ryder had not seen the famous singing comedienne for many years, and the last time he had met her was in London, where she was appearing in one of the leading music halls and making the hit of her career with "Sally in Our Alley."

Kind audience, you know that this is all right, but it looks mighty funny to Geraldine in the doorway.

JUST HER LUCK," a two-reel Victor comedy drama, is a little story that is different. There have been so many films of the kind where the hero or heroine has one success after another that they are beginning to pall. The authors of this picture decided that it was about time to have a film that represented more nearly the way that things happen in real life. So they wrote the film, and it is certainly refreshing to see some one have hard luck for a change. Of course, in the end it all comes out all right, but before the audience knows it, there is a great deal of excitement and laughter, too.

The girl who has all this hard luck befall her is Irene Hunt, who recently appeared in the Bluebird "Gloriana," in support of Zoe Rae. In this picture, playing opposite Lee Hill, she gives a charming portrayal of a character that seems to be the only female Jonah on record. The story in brief follows:

Miriam and Jack are lovers who have a slight quarrel and Jack goes to the city without leaving any address. Later Miriam decides she will go to the city also, but finds that she has very little money. To one of the girls in the apartment house where she takes up her abode she gives practically all her funds when the latter appeals to her for help. So Miriam decides to pawn her ring so as to be able to procure a hat and cloak so she can make a presentable appearance when she answers the advertisement for an understudy.

It so happens that the star, Geraldine Gardner, playing at one of the opera houses, becomes temperamental one morning and orders her maid to get rid of a beautiful cloak and hat. The maid takes them to the pawn shop and Miriam exchanges the ring for them.

Arrived at the opera house, Miriam is so busy trying to comfort a girl who did not secure the position that she forfeits her turn and the other girl secures the place. On her way home some crooks attempt to kidnap her, thinking that she is the celebrated Geraldine, but Miriam is rescued by a policeman, and, finding the singer's address in the pocket of the cloak, takes her to the singer's apartments.

When Geraldine returns she is astonished at Miriam's presence, and the next morning, after hearing her story, gives Miriam the position of maid. While Geraldine is absent at rehearsal Jack calls upon Miriam. Geraldine and her friend, Mrs. Vandervelt, return sooner than Miriam expected and she makes Jack leave. Later Mrs. Vandervelt discovers Jack's hat, which he had left behind in his hurry, and Geraldine dismisses Miriam. She sees Jack and tells him that he had better tell his sister the truth, but Geraldine will not believe him.

Returning to her apartments, Miriam finds that they have burned during her absence and she has lost all her possessions. She leaves and falls exhausted in the park, where she is seen by Jack and taken to the hospital. Jack secures a minister and they are at last happily married.

enameled cross hanging from it, is hung around his neck.

The guests call upon the old soldier for a speech. He rises, and speaks to them in words so simple, yet so heart-felt, so charged with poetic meaning, that their eyes are filled with tears. Then the head of the Society announces a surprise. The doors part again, and amid a group of beautifully gowned women, a little old, black-clad lady enters the room. Pierre has a moment of awful suspense. It is Gabrielle, and she will recognize him and expose him as an impostor. She comes forward to meet him, oblivious of the President of France, and of all the gay company. She sees only the form of her old friend, of her girlhood's lover. "I knew thy voice," she says, gazing up at him. "I understand."

After the banquet, so tedious to the old couple, is over, Gabrielle begs Pierre to take her to Anatole. An automobile is placed at their disposal, and the armloads of flowers are piled into it. Pierre takes the morocco case containing the decoration under his arm. He leads Gabrielle to the little cottage, where lies all that is mortal of her brother, and together they pile the flowers around him, and place the decoration on his breast. Then Pierre slowly folds the frail little figure in his arms.

Big Film Thefts from Universal Bared by Arrest

Hugo Mainthal, Owner of Ideal Company, Accused as "Fence" for Dishonest Shipping Clerk. Feature Reels Valued at Thousands Are Recovered From Storeroom by Police.

WORLD-WIDE PLOT SUSPECTED

Prisoner Is Alleged to Have Confessed His Part in Stealing—Other Pictures Are Missing and Company Officials Believe They Have Been Sent to Europe for Disposal.

AN international clique of motion picture film thieves may be revealed as the result of an investigation instituted by the Universal Film Company. This investigation already has resulted in the arrest of two men, one charged with stealing a valuable photoplay, and the other accused of receiving stolen property, being the "fence" for the film filchers.

The Universal Company places the losses due to inroads by theft at thousands of dollars and one official of the company yesterday pointed out that it was altogether probable that other producers had suffered in the same way. The thefts were noted about October 1, and an inventory disclosed that several valuable reels had vanished. Detectives immediately were called and began a thorough investigation.

About October 15 Sam Zierler, manager of the Twenty-third street exchange, is said to have apprehended Aaron Breyer, a shipping clerk, as the latter was making away with fourteen reels of the photoplay serial, "Peg o' the Ring." Zierler immediately had Breyer arrested, and the clerk is alleged to have confessed to stealing the films. Breyer was later arraigned in the police court and charged with grand larceny, held for the October Grand Jury and subsequently indicted. He is awaiting trial on $1,500 bail.

The next problem the detectives found confronting them was to determine the manner in which the stolen film was sold. This proved anything but an easy task, since the system employed offered not the slightest semblance of a clue. However, all independent film concerns in the city were closely watched, and finally suspicion centered upon Hugo Mainthal, who conducts the Apollo Feature Film Company, at 145 West Forty-fifth street. On Monday night Detective Anthony G. Giumta of the Second Branch Detective Bureau, who had been assigned to this locality, went to Mainthal's home in West Forty-eighth street and arrested Mainthal on a charge of receiving stolen goods.

Giumta, it is said, obtained a confession from Mainthal and learned from the latter where the films he had purchased were hidden. After his prisoner had been arraigned in the West Fifty-fourth Street court and held in $5,000 bail for a further hearing to-morrow, Giumta began the search for the stolen film.

He visited the offices of a film company located in the Godfrey Building, the name of which is withheld because it is known that company had no part in the thefts, and searched its storeroom. He was accompanied by officers of the Universal, who were prepared to identify their property. The following pictures were found, all of them five-reel features: "Scandal," "The Earl of Pawtucket," "Judy Forgot" and "Dr Neighbor." In addition there were several single-reel pictures. The property recovered was valued at about $3,000, and the officers of the company are certain that several thousand dollars' worth of other films are still missing.

It is the firm conviction of the Universal forces that the thefts have been larger and more extensive than is now even suspected. They are certain that the band is international in its scope, and that the films stolen here, at least a great many of them, have been sent to Europe and recut. This could be done, they point out, in such a manner as would make it almost impossible positively to identify the picture in its original form.

The object of the Universal is to enlist the co-operation of all film concerns in stamping out this newest and most dangerous menace to the industry. In the meantime the investigation is being continued.

"THE MAINSPRING."

it shall be reported that Larry—in reality Ashmore—and a party will take a yachting cruise. Just before their departure, Shackleton manages to gain entrance to the Craven estate and accosts Edith, with whom he is in love. Ashmore sees the attack and rescues Edith, ordering Shackleton from the place. The latter vows vengeance.

Ashmore and the party leave on the yachting trip, and Shackleton, who has secured the services of the chauffeur of the Cravens, kidnaps Ashmore. Their boat springs a leak, and all are forced to leave the boat to its fate. Ashmore is washed up on the shore more dead than alive.

Edith and the brokers think that Ashmore has deserted them at the crisis. Ramsdale and Creelman give their entire fortune trying to save the Craven interests, but just at the last moment, when it seems that Farnum and Sharp have won, Ashmore walks in almost exhausted. In a short time the two crooks have lost everything.

Farnum and Sharp think that Shackleton has betrayed them when he does not appear with Ashmore. Farnum immediately goes to the Craven offices where he meets Ashmore, Edith and the others. Ashmore denounces him as the man who had committed a forgery and forced Ashmore's father to suffer for the crime. Ashmore has sworn to avenge his father's death and now feels that he has done so.

Meantime, Larry Craven has learned through the medium of the papers of what has been going on, and, after a desperate fight, manages to escape. He arrives at the Craven office just as Farnum is on the point of shooting Ashmore. A policeman is called and Farnum given in custody. Edith recognizes Larry, and the latter immediately offers Ashmore a proposition to manage the Craven interests, which Ashmore accepts when Edith promises to marry him.

ACTRESS LIKES PUMPKIN PIE.

A FEW days ago a number of visitors were in the cafe at Universal City when one woman turned to her friend and said: "Look at that girl with two pieces of pumpkin pie in her hand; she can't be an actress, or she'd be sitting at a table instead of standing up."

It so happened that the girl referred to was no other than Mary MacLaren, the Bluebird star, who is working solely under the direction of Lois Weber. She is working at present in a Bluebird production provisionally called "The Mysterious Mrs. Musslewhite," by Thomas Edgelow, adopted by Miss Weber from a story by the same title in the Live Story Magazine. Mary admits she has a great liking for pumpkin pie.

I am the Printing Press

by Robert H. Davis

I AM the printing-press, born of the mother earth. My heart is of steel, my limbs are of iron, and my fingers are of brass.

I sing the songs of the world, the oratorios of history, the symphonies of all time.

I am the voice of to-day, the herald of to-morrow. I weave into the warp of the past the woof of the future. I tell the stories of peace and war alike.

I make the human heart beat with passion or tenderness. I stir the pulse of nations, and make brave men do braver deeds, and soldiers die.

I inspire the midnight toiler, weary at his loom, to lift his head again and gaze, with fearlessness, into the vast beyond, seeking the consolation of a hope eternal.

When I speak, a myriad people listen to my voice. The Saxon, the Latin, the Celt, the Hun, the Slav, the Hindu, all comprehend me.

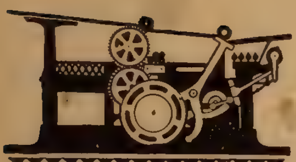
I am the tireless clarion of the news. I cry your joys and sorrows every hour. I fill the dullard's mind with thoughts uplifting. I am light, knowledge, power. I epitomize the conquests of mind over matter.

I am the record of all things mankind has achieved. My offspring comes to you in the candle's glow, amid the dim lamps of poverty, the splendor of riches; at sunrise, at high noon, and in the waning evening.

I am the laughter and tears of the world, and I shall never die until all things return to the immutable dust.

I am the printing-press.

Robert H Davis



The Birth of an Idea

THE lines of this prose-poem were dictated to a stenographer on the spur of the moment by Mr. Davis, of our Editorial Department, to occupy a page printing-press advertisement placed in Munsey's Magazine for July, 1911, by R. Hoe and Company.

Within thirty days after the publication of that issue, over two thousand newspapers had reprinted the Hoe advertisement with editorial commendation.

Shortly thereafter advertising writers began to paraphrase it, and, before the expiration of the year, this form of expression had become the basis of big advertising campaigns throughout America, England, Germany and France.

In response to universal demand, it is reprinted in this form and presented with the compliments of

THE FRANK A. MUNSEY COMPANY

ROBERT H. DAVIS of Munsey's, co-author, with Perley Poore Sheehan of "The Bugler of Algiers," wrote "I Am the Printing Press" and started a vogue on which $40,000,000 was spent in advertising copy.

ROBERT H. DAVIS, co-author with Perley Poore Sheehan of "The Bugler of Algiers," Bluebird release which is occupying so prominent a place in the eye of that organization at the present time, is a starter. He has the reputation in the literary field of starting and developing a great many literary celebrities of to-day who might never have been heard of otherwise. In any event, he accelerated their journey to fame through the advice and encouragement which he has given to so many struggling authors, and has thereby incidentally gained for the Munsey organization a loyal service, and hundreds of clever stories as his reward.

One of the closest friendships which has come to him in Munsey's service was that of Perley Poore Sheehan, and it was to him, even then one of the most dependable contributors to Munsey publications, that Mr. Davis made the suggestion which resulted in "We Are French," the story from which "The Bugler of Algiers" is taken. It was directly following his last visit to France that Mr. Davis conceived the idea of this story, and in talking over the plot with Mr. Sheehan, the main essence of the book very soon formulated itself in the minds of the two men. It was not until some months later, however, that the story appeared in the All-Story Magazine.

As proof positive, if such proof were needed, that this story has no relation to the present unpleasantness in Europe, but referred solely to the war of 1870, one has only to mention that the great war broke out one week after the appearance on the news-stands of the All-Story Magazine containing the first installment of "We Are French." Every endeavor has been made to keep partisan feeling from entering into "The Bugler of Algiers." Certainly none entered into its writing, and none enters into the distribution of the film. It is a story founded on historical facts which took place during the Franco-Prussian War of 1870.

Previous to this, however, to be exact, July, 1911, Robert H. Davis started something else. He started the "I Am" style of advertising copy, upon which it is said that more than forty million dollars in money has been spent by various companies in Printers' Ink for advertisements, copying the style which was first given to the public in the Munsey advertisement of the Hoe Printing Press in the July, 1911, issue. It was entitled, "I Am the Printing Press." Within thirty days after the publication of this issue over two thousand newspapers had reprinted the Hoe advertisement with editorial comments, and shortly afterwards advertising writers began to paraphrase it, some with credit and some without. Newspapers adopted it for an occasional strong editorial. Communities adopted it for their advertising slogan. It has been adapted to almost every form of advertising, and into every known language. Mr. Davis, soon after the publication of the original advertisement, perceived that he had started something, and he has kept a scrap-book containing many of the forms in which the original "I am" has been used. This

What They Are Doing, in S

Laura Oakley's baby son.

LAURA OAKLEY'S NEWEST ROLE.

LAURA OAKLEY is one of the busiest people at busy Universal City. Her avocations are most numerous and most varied. She is primarily a motion picture actress, but acting for the camera is just the beginning of her troubles. Her official title is "Chief of Police." She was elected to this important office some time ago, and has upheld its dignity with honor to herself and to the film municipality.

But besides acting and policing, Miss Oakley is an ardent housekeeper. She could give pointers to a New Englander on the subject, although she was born in California. In private life she is the wife of Milton Moore, head cameraman of Universal City, and the picture shows her newest character of all—that of mother. Her baby was born last month, and is a splendid, healthy boy.

Recently Mrs. Moore was called upon to act in her official capacity. The occasion was the election of the new Mayor of Universal City. The Republican candidate was Herbert Rawlinson, while Ben Wilson ran on the Democratic ticket. The contest was almost as close as the Presidential election, and the ballot box was left in her care overnight.

HERBERT RAWLINSON IS STILL MAYOR.

HERBERT RAWLINSON is still Mayor of Universal City, after a contest that rivalled the Presidential election itself in closeness and excitement. The first count gave him 712, and Ben Wilson, his opponent on the Democratic ticket, 709. The Democrats immediately called for a recount, which was made the following day. They claimed that several extras not regularly employed at Universal City had been permitted to vote at the last minute. As no primary was held this year, there was no means of checking up the votes.

The Republicans finally yielded the point, and a careful recount gave the election to their candidate by a vote of 691 to 687. So that even if the Presidential contest was won by a Wilson, the G. O. P. need not despair, for the representative of the Wilson family was fairly beaten at Universal City.

Rawlinson was informed of his reelection at once, and by his former leading lady, Agnes Vernon. She had to go to him with the good news, for his recent accident still forces him to "go easy."

CARTER DE HAVEN AND HIS FIRST EMPLOYER.

It is a saying well known in Paris, that if you sit long enough at one of the little tables of the Cafe de Paris, on the corner of the Boulevards and the Place de l' Opera, you will see every one you have ever known. Since the war, the force of this saying which really had a good deal of truth in it, is lost. But the place of the Cafe de Paris is being taken by Universal City. In these days when celebrities from all ranks of life are flocking into motion pictures, many unexpected reunions take place in the picture studios. As Universal City is the largest film plant in the world, and attracts thousands of visitors every week, the probabilities of the unexpected meeting of old friends within its hospitable portals are proportionally greater than elsewhere.

The latest reunion of note, was that of Carter De Haven, the Universal's diminutive comedian, with George Middleton, his first employer. A good many years ago, when De Haven was smaller then he is now, in reputation as well as height, George Middleton, of the firm of Cole and Middleton, purveyors of various and sundry forms of amusement, gave the comedian his first job. Carter was just nine years old at the time.

Many years before that, Middleton had once applied for work to De Haven's grandfather, who was a circus magnate in his day. So when the little nine-year-old was brought to him, he remembered his circus days, and gave the little fellow his chance. It is quite a long time since those days, but De Haven's physical growth did not keep pace with that of his salary check. He is still one of the smallest comedians of the screen, though a diminutive adjective cannot be used about any other of his qualifications.

De Haven is now directing himself.

De Haven and his first employer.

Universal City, where they went to arrange for the production of their work on the screen.

These two writers are the youngest American authors whose works have had the honor of acceptance by the Century Magazine as serials. Whitman's latest book "Children of Hope," and Howard's "Francois Villon" stories, written several years ago, both appeared in its classic pages in serial form. The Universal pictured the latter stories some time ago. It is significant of the improvement in the class of production offered to the public by the Universal, that the services of these two men, who stand in the front rank of the younger American authors, should have been acquired.

Mr. Howard's book "Norroy," a story of the diplomatic secret service, will be produced by himself for Universal.

Three fathers celebrate.

THREE HAPPY FATHERS CELEBRATE.

Here is a happy Universal trio. The three men are each celebrating the birth of a first-born. Jack Mulhall, leading man with Ruth Stonehouse in "Constantinople By the Sixth," a Red Feather play which is under production, stands in the middle. He is wearing the smile that won't come off because he has just been informed that "It's a boy!"

On either side are two other happy fathers. One is Milton Moore, chief cameraman of Universal City, whose duty it is to supervise all the problems of camera-work in the film municipality; his wife is Laura Oakley, well known as a screen actress, and even better known as Chief of Police at Universal City. Over on the opposite page is a picture of her, with the nine-and-a-half-pound boy, who has just been enrolled among the population of the film capital.

The man seated on the table is Milburn Moranti, the Joker comedian, who joins the group to receive their congratulations upon the addition of a future leading lady to the ranks of Universal players.

"The People vs. John Doe"

Title of Lois Weber's Masterpiece is Changed to Permit Greater Scope Than the One Immediate Murder Mystery Which Inspired it.

By the ruse of engaging him for another similar case the lawyers force an admission from the detective.

IN deference to compelling arguments by self-sacrificing humanitarians who are at this moment engaged in a movement to secure executive clemency for an unfortunate man standing in the shadow of the electric chair, Argosy Films, Inc., has voluntarily decided to change the name of its tremendously vital and human photoplay that was inspired by a number of celebrated murder cases where innocent men were made to pay the death penalty. Henceforth this thrilling and timely drama will bear the name of "The People Vs. John Doe."

The absorbing story of this picture is more vital than any other before the American people today. It is more potent than any white slave picture and more interesting than any war drama because it carries an appeal directly to the heart and mind of every citizen. In New York State alone it has the indorsement of The Humanitarian Cult with its more than 100,000 members and it has a nation-wide appeal because the attention of the public has recently been directed to the possibility of inflicting capital punishment upon innocent human beings.

What greater motive could be selected for a thrilling photo-drama? Miss Lois Weber who filmed "Where Are My Children?" felt the appeal at once and surpassed all her previous triumphs in the effective and sympathetic manner of treatment in this six-reel sensational achievement. Her purpose was to avoid any direct attack on methods employed in any particular case while at the same time selecting typical characters and telling a story of possible episodes which have been actual happenings in a number of celebrated cases.

The story fairly chills the blood of the audience with an actual picture of an innocent man's narrow escape from the electric chair. It is more than a dramatic dream for the sake of a thrilling "movie." Innocent men have been executed for crimes never committed. The recent Bambrick case in New York State, when a mere boy paid the death penalty for a crime which many believed he never committed is still remembered. There is an historic case in Rhode Island where a man was hung on circumstantial evidence and a few minutes later the real criminal broke down and confessed. Five months later by legislative enactment there was no more capital punishment in Rhode Island.

At this very moment there is a possibility that this tragic story will be repeated. A poor clod of a human being with the mind of a child, stands in the shadow of the electric chair for the fifth time in eighteen months. Although much evidence has been discovered to throw doubt on his guilt, it is not sufficient under present laws to secure a new trial and nothing but executive clemency can save him. He has already escaped the chair so frequently as to make his case one of the thrilling murder mysteries in the annals of jurisprudence of New York State. Yet this is only one of the cases which has inspired the humanitarian movement against capital punishment and which has resulted in the filming of "The People vs. John Doe."

This picture is not only a protest against capital punishment itself, but against the abhorent "third degree" methods which are known to have brought innocent men within the shadow of the gallows. At the last anniversary meeting of The Humanitarian Cult in Carnegie Hall, the founder and leader of the Cult posted conspicuously the following slogan:

"THE TAKING OF LIFE IS MURDER,
WHETHER BY INDIVIDUALS, STATES OR NATIONS."

On this occasion 4,000 people packed Carnegie Hall and 12,000 were unable to gain admission to listen to Judge Wadhams, George Foster Peabody, Misha Appelbaum, Dr. Frank Crane and others who spoke against ill-advised capital punishment. They were applauded by the sympathetic multitude. Each day the movement is growing and spreading to other states. This burning question is interesting humanitarians everywhere and this startling film, which is now about to be exhibited for the first time, has excited a nation-wide sympathy because of its effective argument against capital punishment.

"The People vs. John Doe" is a picture which tells the story of a doomed man who was convicted partly on the alleged confession of his not more than half-witted brother, who himself received a life-sentence.

After relating the thrilling preliminary episodes in the crime for which John Doe was convicted, the picture brings us to the eve of his execution. His mentality is found to be that of a child. It is discovered that although charged with commiting the crime for robbery, there has been no evidence to show he has in his possession any of the funds taken from the house of the murdered victim. He wears a No. 12 boot, yet this fact was not disclosed in his trial when it was shown that footprints of a No. 10 boot constituted part of the chain of circumstantial evidence forged against him.

A Vital Human Drama Launched Against the Evil Resulting From Confessions Obtained by Third Degree Methods and Resulting in Conviction and Capital Punishment on Circumstantial Evidence—Will be Released by the Argosy Films, Inc.—Nation-wide Interest from All Parts of the Country Shown.

Type selected to play the weak-minded countryman who "confessed" under promise of release.

Tortured in mind and body while awaiting his doom he attracts the attention of a prison-keeper, who becomes convinced that he has been wrongfully convicted. At this time a woman lawyer visiting the prison sympathizes with the poor man and inaugurates a movement to save him. Other women join her and under their noble efforts lawyers rake the scene of the alleged crime for further evidence. They uncover important new facts at the last minute and lay them before a humane judge, who is routed from his warm bed at midnight. Their efforts are at last rewarded by a stay of execution only a few minutes before the hour set for death.

The story is told with such sincerity and such seemingly authentic episodes that the audience might believe it is the story of an actual case in the courts. You are shocked at the pictured crime, you are amazed at the manner in which suspicion is made to point at the innocent man. You sympathize with his stricken family when he is dragged to jail, you are horrified at the success of brutal third degree methods, you weep for the poor fellow when he makes his mark to the confession that has been written by the detectives, and while you cannot presume to criticize the court and jury for finding him guilty on the cleverly-constructed circumstantial evidence, your heart bleeds for the accused. You follow the efforts of his self-sacrificing friends to save him and your attention is held to the very last flash of the picture because it is not until then that you know whether or not another innocent man may be made to pay the death penalty.

Realizing that innocent men have been executed, the Argosy Films, Inc., intend giving the widest possible publicity to this picture in the hope that it will help to arouse the public to an appreciation of the movement to do away with capital punishment.

This is truly a "life drama" because through it human beings may be saved. A great reform may be brought about not only in the State of New York, but throughout the country. It will attract attention because of the celebrated case now pending in New York State, but not wholly because of this fact, for it contains a nation-wide appeal. It is simply a sympathetic and dramatic portrayal of an absorbing case of circumstantial evidence reflecting in no way on any case now before the courts. It is believed that every heart desiring justice will throb in sympathy with the tremendous appeal which Argosy Films, Inc., declare is contained in the picture.

No greater reason for the presentation of this picture can be found than that by the National Board of Review after it had passed on the film,

"The Greater Power"

STORY of black sheep reformed. Bandits, cattle rustlers and a fighting sheriff make this Two-Reel Bison drama a play that radiates the red-blooded West.

CAST.

Sheriff Griffith	Harry S. Griffith
Mrs. Griffith	Katherine Griffith
Alice, their daughter	Alice Beice
Ernest, their son	Ernest Van Pelt
Ervin Denny	Ervin Denneke
Al Gordon	Al Ernest Garcia

The Sheriff gets his man.

BECAUSE of the repeated humiliations that he suffers on account of his son, Ernest, Sheriff Griffith decides that he will not run for re-election. When the lawless element finds this out they at once put up the name of Ervin Denny, a gambler and leader of a band of cattle rustlers.

Al Gordon is a wealthy young ranchman who is in love with Alice Griffith, to whom it is very important that the losses stop. At a meeting that is held in regard to the coming election, the sheriff is about to be mobbed by the men who are working for the election of Denny, when Al comes along and puts a stop to the matter. Then the men see that if he is elected there will be observance of the law, so they make him run for the office himself.

At last the election day arrives and in spite of the efforts of the gang to stuff the ballot box, Al is the winner when the final count is made. As he has promised to help reform Ernie, he appoints him a deputy sheriff in the hope that the responsibility will make a man of him. But the election has attracted a great many of the surrounding ranchers to the town and the rustlers have taken advantage of this fact to make a raid. When the newly-elected sheriff hears of this he at once sends his deputy to get the criminals. But Ernie has formerly been a member of the gang and so is afraid to get them. When Al makes up his mind that he will go himself to get the crooks and finds that Ernie has been shirking his duty he is very angry and brings the young fellow back to the jail. Just as he is locking him up, Ernie turns on him and tries to get away. This is too much and Al loses his temper and decides that he will teach Ernie a lesson. He takes off his coat and proceeds to give Ernie the worst licking that he has ever had. This at last makes the wastrel see the error of his ways and he confesses where the secret hiding place of the gang is. Then the sheriff sends out other deputies, and after a desperate battle the bandits are overpowered.

Of course, the picture ends happily as Al marries Alice, and Ernie, who sees the error of his ways, is again made a deputy sheriff, but this time he makes good.

GEORGE HERNANDEZ LOSES HIS TROUSERS.

GEORGE HERNANDEZ, who plays one of the principal roles in the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Shriveled Soul," written and directed by Lynn Reynolds of Universal City, is essentially modest and particular about his appearance, and in addition admits that he has a sensitive skin. In one scene which was filmed in the Grand Canyon, Hernandez was supposed to be suspended on a rope over a chasm several hundred feet deep.

Reynolds was not going to risk the life of his leading man, so he had a dummy built and put Hernandez' clothes on it while the actor remained behind a clump of bushes away from the camera. The constructor of the dummy did not make the backbone strong enough, and while suspended in the air it broke in two, with the result that Hernandez' trousers dropped several hundred feet and caught on a ledge some distance from the bottom. He had no others to wear, and it was not until the next morning that a cowboy and the company property man succeeded in rescuing the wearing apparel.

Even at that Hernandez' troubles were not over. A cactus plant grew on the ledge and hundreds of the thorns adhered to the trousers. The actor had to wear the garment to finish the picture, and he declares that that night his wife stayed up several hours with pincers pulling cactus needles from his flesh.

A scene from the play and our own style of "close-up."

"The Mansard Mystery"

THE trouble with most mystery dramas is that there is no mystery. But "The Mansard Mystery" is one that baffles even the most experienced detectives that are put on the case. It is thrilling because of the horror of it all. The colonel goes to bed on the night before his wedding and the next morning he is in a dying condition. Apparently no one has had access to him during the intervening hours, so that the doctor is at a loss to know what to treat for. It is a situation that is as novel as is the way that the poisoning is really accomplished.

Stuart Paton, the director who has staged this story of Sylvester Jones, has put about the whole a mysterious air that attracts the attention quite as much as does the plot. This is the first of Paton's dramas to be released on the program for a long time, as for the past year or so he has been busily engaged on the great under-water picture, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," that the Universal company staged at a cost of about a half million dollars. Paton was chosen for the directing of this important work, because he has a very fertile imagination as well as a great ability in the direction of melodrama of the high class that interests all audiences.

The story in brief is as follows:

On the evening of the Colonel's marriage he attends a dinner given in his honor. The next morning at the breakfast table he is laughed at by his ward, Brina, and nephew, George Etherbridge, who has just returned from Europe, because he does not seem to relish the dishes set before him. But their laughter turns into fear when the Colonel falls unconscious and they are not able to revive him.

LONG sought revenge culminates in mysterious poison case. Stolen toothbrush furnishes clue to culprit. Imp Two-Reel Mystery Drama. Direction by Stuart Paton. Story by Sylvester Jones. Scenario by Harvey Gates.

CAST.

Geo. Etherbridge	Francis McDonald
Col. Mansard	Howard Crampton
Count Des Auteils	Wadsworth Harris
Brina	Neva Gerber
Butler	William Quinn
Dr. Ballard	Joseph Girard

Dr. Ballard is sent for and he declares that the Colonel has been poisoned. While the Colonel is conscious Count des Auteils, who has been paying court to Brina, is seen to bend over him and whisper something in his ear. Then the Count repairs to the bathroom and a short time later he rushes forth, highly insulted because one of the servants has been spying upon him.

The Count wants to leave the house, but George and the doctor smooth matters over. As they are in the hall they encounter the butler, who has been spying upon the Count. He declares that the Colonel's toothbrush is missing.

The Colonel's fiancee arrives and voices her opinion that some one had poisoned the Colonel to prevent their marriage—some one who would be deprived of their inheritance should the marriage be consummated.

The doctor administers a strong stimulant to the Colonel, who responds, and with great effort orders the Count held. He is not a count at all, but a chap from India, who has come to revenge an ancient wrong done his mother by the Colonel.

The Count had poisoned the Colonel's toothbrush.

DANCERS ON SHORT NOTICE FOR SCENE IN "LITTLE ITALY."

FOR a number of different scenes for his production of "Little Italy," Red Feather production, Hobart Henley of Universal City, who is featured in the photoplay with Gertrude Selby, required several special dancers in a ballroom set.

He found it unnecessary to go outside of the studio for the talent. Miss Selby gave a clever interpretation of an Italian dancing girl with the tambourine. Mayo Fisher won applause from the others in the set for her Dutch dance in wooden shoes, and Alida Hayman did a Russian Cossack dance without even a rehearsal.

Gertrude Selby was trained as a dancer, and has already demonstrated her proficiency in the art. She will be remembered for her clever dancing in the L-KO, "September Mourning."

Chicago Exchange Burns--Every Account Shipped

FIRE early Wednesday morning, November 15th, destroyed a million and a quarter feet of moving picture film, and the entire exchange of the Laemmle Film Service at 205 West Washington Street, Chicago. The loss has not been definitely estimated as yet. But it is neither the loss nor the fire which is the most interesting thing which occurred last Wednesday in Chicago. It is of far greater moment to know that not one single account failed to receive its scheduled allotment of films on scheduled time.

The main business of an exchange is to supply film to its exhibitors, what it promises and when it promises. With its building in smoking ruins, with scarcely a foot of film saved, the Laemmle Film Service set to work at six o'clock to get together their shipments for the day. Fortunately, the order books and records had been saved. It is doubtful if any company less highly organized than the Universal could ever have made it possible to fill every single shipment under such conditions. But such is the efficiency and the foresight of the Universal exchange system, that not a single exhibitor suffered a moment's delay on account of the fire.

Three factors made it possible for the Phoenix-like Laemmle Film Exchange to rise from its ashes, and perform its duties as though nothing had happened. The first of these is the Universal clearing house, the second, the surrounding Universal exchanges, and the third, the Universal factory at Leonia. Wires to the nearby exchanges brought prompt response, and before noon film shipments were on the way to the distressed exchange from eight surrounding Universal distributing agencies. Through the Universal clearing house the entire stock of film in the exchange was able to be duplicated in the emergency, and through dint of working the factory at Leonia as it never was worked before, and through the hearty co-operation which the loyal Universal employees gave to the superintendent in the factory, the destroyed film was entirely replaced in forty-eight hours. This was done, too, without stopping the work on regular releases which had to go out on scheduled time. This is a remarkable tribute to the efficiency and loyalty of the Leonia factory.

Within an hour the film exchange had taken up temporary quarters at 172 West Washington street, and by noon a very systematic office had been created.

Mr. Laemmle took the Twentieth Century to Chicago, and by the time he arrived the temporary quarters had assumed a business-like atmosphere which greatly surprised him.

McRAE SETS NEW PACE WITH CAMERA IN "LIBERTY."

WHEN the Universal serial, "Liberty, A Daughter of the U. S. A.," was turned over to Director Henry McRae following the indisposition of Director Jacques Jaccard, who produced the first twelve episodes, it was found necessary to set a new pace in the production in order to fulfill the demands of the exhibitors.

McRae took off his coat and seized Cameraman Fred Granville, and with the members of the company in pursuit made a dash for the old Universal ranch. Arriving on location, McRae said: "Get set up, Fred, and we'll begin 'shooting.'" This required only a few minutes and then McRae with a clap of his hands, cried out: "Let's go!"

The net result was that in three and a half days McRae had filmed two separate episodes and a total of 4,000 feet of film, all of it full of punch.

CIRCUS IS EDDIE POLO'S HOBBY.

WHENEVER a circus arrives in Los Angeles it is a certainty that Eddie Polo, who is playing a leading role in the Universal serial, "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," featuring Marie Walcamp, is restless until his day's work is over.

Polo, for many years, with his wife and brother Sam, appeared in some of the largest circuses in the United States and the saw-dust ring holds an attraction for him which he cannot overcome.

NANINE WRIGHT, SCREEN FAVORITE, IS UNIVERSAL CITY MOTHER IDOL.

IT is not an unusual sight at Universal City to see a group of young actresses sitting at the knee of Nanine Wright listening to her words of wisdom and suggestions not only for stage work but for the passing of the idle hours away from the studios. "Mother" Wright's life has been full of tragedies, deep sorrow and, at times, poverty, yet she is always smiling, ever with a cheerful word and, as she describes it, her "mother heart" finds solace in loving the boys and girls at Universal City.

Mrs. Wright has been a member of the Universal acting forces for the last two years, and her services are always in demand by directors. She has taken an unusual interest in the welfare of the younger people of the film capital and more than one girl has come to her for advice. The actress never complains about her lot in life or about her work, and declares she proposes to keep herself surrounded by sunshine for the rest of her days.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

ST. THOMAS, Can.—The Hotel Columbia, in St. Thomas, has been transformed into the Columbia Theatre by Mr. McLean, the owner. The new house will seat 700 people, with two simplex machines and a gold fibre screen.

Mr. Gerald Ruck, Special Representative of the Universal Company, in Toronto, has arranged for a first-class service of Bluebirds, and Red Feather Features, and Universal Comedies.

TORONTO.—The Canadian Universal Film Company's Head Office at Toronto has undergone considerable interior changes during the last week. There has been created a Projection Room and General Meeting Chamber. A special machine is in order and is being erected and all of the big features which the Universal Company is now bringing in, will be screened at their own office.

The New Empire Theatre, at Timmins, Ont., had a most satisfactory opening, and Mr. Bardessono, proprietor, states he is more than pleased. Bluebird Features were used at the opening and will continue to be used as a regular program.

Mr. Bud Lennon, Asst. Gen. Manager of the Universal Film Company in Canada, announces that L-KO Comedies will in all probability be showing at Loew's Theatre in this city within a very short time.

Mr. King, of the Aster Theatre, has sold his interest in this house to Mr. Gillies, the owner of the building. Mr. Gillies is retaining Universal Service.

Mr. G. M. Davidson, Accountant for Canada, of the Universal Company, is leaving for an extended trip throughout the Western Provinces, to make arrangements regarding the new accounting system which is being installed throughout the entire Universal Organization.

According to Mr. W. A. Bach, of the Publicity Department, all supplies and advertising details for the new serial "The Purple Mask," will be manufactured in Canada. This will mean that Exhibitors using this serial will receive a much quicker service than ever before.

The Publicity Department is getting out a little booklet entitled "Serial Suggestions," which deals with the handling of the serials in Canada.

A complete advertising plan is also under way to popularize this serial by means of the Exhibitors and the Movie Fans.

The Bulletin, The Trade Paper issued by the Publicity Service Department of Universal Company of Canada, has assumed a new size of sixteen pages and donned the dress of a magazine. It is stated that the advertising now running in the paper is very satisfactory and is producing very respectable revenue. Although issued by a film company, the paper is entirely non-partisan. This fact is responsible for its large success and popularity among the Exhibitors.

Mr. Margetts, the Manager of The Canadian Universal Film Co., of this city, won the one hundred yard dash in a recent meet against Captain Morrow, the "Sporting Parson."

The Doric Theatre Managers have made two interesting business arrangements during this week, which include the taking over of the Park Theatre, Toronto, and also of the Aster.

The Film Trade in Toronto seems to be starting up into a series of small circuits and this combination of Doric, Park and Aster is the newest.

The old King George Theatre of Toronto is now Bluebird Theatre, and the management is arranging to present a Bluebird Feature Program. Assistance is being given to the new theatre management in its publicity by the Publicity Service Department of the Canadian Universal Film Company of Toronto.

At a meeting called by Mrs. Ambrose this afternoon plans were discussed for an elaborate moving picture to be called "What a Woman can Do," to show the women what they must do to prevent the closing down of factories for the want of helpers. Through the whole scenario is an interesting story, and the leading characters will be taken by clever professionals, Toronto women and their work forming the background. If any money is made over and above the cost of production, it is proposed to give it to a home for returned soldiers.

MINNEAPOLIS LETTER.

By FRED S. MEYER.

W. L. Hester, manager of the Universal office at Fargo, N. D., was a Minneapolis visitor last week. He reports business picking up throughout the Dakotas, although the crop is none too good this year.

The Hippodrome, St. Paul, Minn., advertises the Universal Program very extensively in the St. Paul papers. While vaudeville is the feature policy of the house, great stress is laid on the picture program and Mr. Bovey, the manager, believes in securing the best, namely Universal.

S. T. O'Brien, reporter of the Laemmle office at Minneapolis, has gone and done it. What? Been married, of course. In addition to a great many other presents, a number of employees of the Universal office presented the Newlyweds with a beautiful gift. Manager Meyer also gave his salesman something to start housekeeping with.

A very pleasant visit was paid this office by B. Lichtig, father of E. Lichtig, manager of the Universal Exchange, at Havana. Mr. Lichtig says that he is more than pleased to see Universal films so well represented throughout the country; the only places where Universal is not represented is where they have no picture theatres.

The Minneapolis Daily News has one of the most alert Motion Picture Editors in the country and their Saturday edition contains a quarter section devoted exclusively to Motion Pictures.

D. C. McClellan, reporter of the local Universal office is breaking all records in securing new business.

Geo. W. McCloughlin now controls all theatres in Rice Lake, Wis., and uses Universal services in both. A case of good judgment, considering the fact that Mac has been a staunch Universal booster ever since he broke into the game.

Nearly all local downtown theatres ran midnight shows on election night, giving Western Union returns. Unusually good business is reported by the managers.

A great number of theatres in South Dakota are now running Sunday performances unmolested. Eventually the entire state will fall in line.

J. H. Margoles, who handles the sales end of the local Universal office, is kept busy from morn till night looking after new customers. He is a mighty valuable asset to the management of this office and extremely well liked by the exhibitors.

Story by Lynn Reynolds.
Produced by Ruth A. Baldwin.

CAST.

Mother	Mary Talbot
John	Charles Cummings
Mary	Dorothy Davenport
Doctor	George Pearce

Mary Page's two children, John and Mary, have given their attention to making a success, rather than to their mother. Her letters stir their sympathies, yet the two always seem to find some reason for remaining away from home and mother.

As mother's birthday approaches she invites her children to come to see her.

John instructs his secretary to write that he will be unable to come home and Mary sends a card saying that some social event will claim her time. But through some prank of chance the letters were not delivered until the evening of the birthday.

Fate brings Mary and John together at lunch time. Each thinks the other is going home and they decide to break all engagements and surprise mother.

Meanwhile with the dinner prepared and table arranged mother sits down to the table with only the pictures of her children before her. But at last the mother's heart can bear the loneliness no longer—in spite of herself the tears will come.

Suddenly the sound of an auto is heard and joyfully the children rush in and make up to the dear old mother for all the heart hunger which had been hers.

Billy is a ladies' tailor who is blessed with a very jealous wife. Jay is a husband of the type that considers their wives as mere servants. He refuses to allow his wife to buy any new clothes and is a tyrant in his home.

Jay's wife gets an idea and goes to work as a model at the tailor's establishment to get a new dress. The tailor is very much taken with her and they go home to have a fitting. There the hubby comes in and there are a great many complications. In the end, however, the jealous wife and the stingy husband are both cured and the picture ends happily.

The second half of the picture is a series of views of Alaska, in which much of the beautiful scenery is shown, as well as the way that the natives live. The natives are shown at their sports and dances and also in one of their primitive hunts.

STORIES OF THE ONE REEL PHOTOPLAYS

"SCRAPPILY MARRIED."

Joker Comedy in One Reel.

Written by Harry Wulze.
Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

CAST.

Dr. Keen	William Franey
His Wife	Gale Henry
Maid	Lillian Peacock
Her Lover, Bill	Charles Conklin
Cop	Milburn Moranti

It is all a bad mistake because Bill calls to see the maid. The maid is the servant in the home of the terrible doctor, and Bill is just naturally afraid of the doctor. So he leaves a note to the maid to that effect, and it is found by the master of the house. This makes the old man angry, as he thinks that it is his wife whom Bill has come to see.

Bill escapes, but is hurt in getting away. So they take him to the hospital and there he is operated upon by the doctor himself. With fiendish glee he goes to it. But Bill manages to escape from this delicate situation and at last the whole affair is cleared when the old man finds that Bill is attentive to the maid and not to his wife.

"A DESIGNING WOMAN."

Laemmle Drama.

CAST.

Pastor Jones	William Shay
Freda Leary	Jane Fernley
Margaret	Vivian Prescott

Freda is a nurse in a hospital at the front when Margaret is brought in. She is said to be dead, so Freda, who has a past, takes her place and goes to America. But Margaret recovers and goes to expose Freda. There are many complications, but at last Freda finds happiness in the love of Pastor Jones.

Alice Howell in "TATTLE-TALE ALICE."

L-Ko Komedy in One Reel.

Alice is the tattle-tale of the whole village. So when a real opera singer comes to town she has a great deal to do. There are two of the men in the town who are smitten with the opera singer and first one and then the other gets into a compromising situation with her. Alice tells on both of them and in the end she gets the proper deserts for such conduct. There is a motor boat race and then a ducking. Finis.

"SAMMIE JOHNSIN'S LOVE AFFAIR" and "ANCIENT INDIA AS SEEN BY DR. DORSEY."

Powers Split Reel.

In the first part of this reel Sammie has a terrible time. He is in love with a beautiful little pickaninny, but she does not return his sentiments. He buys her all sorts of candy and other goodies, but in the end, after taking all these things, she turns him down in favor of the other fellow. So Sammie vows that never again will he fall for the fair sex.

The last half of this film is devoted to the beauties of old India as seen by Doctor Dorsey, the famous Universal travel photographer. He shows some of the ruins that prove what a wonderful civilization they had in those days. Some of the structures that are shown could not be constructed today with all the wonderful engineering contrivances that we have at our command.

"THE WALL OF FLAME."

Imp Drama.

Wallace is a fire inspector who is in love with the daughter of a wealthy factory owner. The latter says that the match is impossible, as Wallace is incorruptible—and insists that he make his factory fireproof. Then the building catches fire with the daughter in it. Wallace rescues her and then her father consents to the match.

"THE CIRCLE OF DEATH.

Big U in One Reel.

Mona is a little Indian girl who is very friendly to the settlers. When some of the white men infringe on the Indians' reservation rights they go on the war path, but Mona warns the whites in time so that they can escape.

"EAT AND GROW HUNGRY."

L-Ko Comedy in One Reel.

This is the sad tale of a poor husband who is the janitor in a boarding house. His wife runs the house and gives the star boarder all the good things to eat so that all he can get is a little pea soup. In sheer desperation he plans a scheme. He rigs up a string so that he can pull things off the dumb-waiter as they go up to his rival. In this way he is at last satisfied.

RUTH STONEHOUSE ADOPTS BOY.

RUTH STONEHOUSE, star of the Red Feather Production "Kinkaid, Gambler," has adopted a boy. His name is Raymond.

The youngster is just six years old —a pudgy little fellow with light-blue eyes and light hair, and he is the joy of this Universal actress' home—a pretty bungalow in Hollywood.

Raymond's mother passed away when he came into the world and his father died in Los Angeles only a short time ago. It long had been Miss Stonehouse's desire to adopt a boy, and when she heard of this orphan child she made arrangements with the people who were caring for him to take the youngster off their hands.

Raymond is a good little fellow, bright as the proverbial silver dollar, and although he has been with his foster mother only a few weeks already has become greatly attached to her. In the daytime while Miss Stonehouse is engaged in picture making at Universal City, Raymond is under the watchful eye of Sally, a Southern colored woman who is the star's housekeeper and who has been in her employ for a number of years. Sally and Raymond are very good friends, and she says he is quite helpful to her in her work about the house.

SEES PICTURES FOR FIRST TIME

DIRECTOR RUTH ANN BALDWIN while making a number of exteriors with her company for a one-reel Universal photoplay, "Bred in the Purple," near the town of Van Nuys, met Mrs. Samuel Johnson, who, although sixty years old, had not been to a place of amusement for thirty years and consequently never had seen a motion picture play.

Miss Baldwin invited Mrs. Johnson to visit Universal City one day last week and the old lady drove over in her buggy and spent the entire day at the motion picture plant as the guest of Director Baldwin.

Mrs. Johnson enjoyed herself to the full and declared it was the greatest day of her life since the wedding bells joyously pealed for her more than thirty-five years ago.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

FOR some weeks past the Moving Picture Weekly has been carrying this "Putting It Over" page. It consists of suggestions by advertising experts on the various features and single reels of the program. Wherever an opportunity occurs for clever street advertising, lobby display advertising, or newspaper advertising, it is incorporated in a suggestion and put on this page. This is one of the most important pages in the entire Moving Picture Weekly, and the editors wish to call your especial attention to it each week. A number of exhibitors are following these suggestions every week, and looking for them, and ask to have more like them. Some have suggestions of their own, inspired by local conditions which do not exist in other places. We have received several of these suggestions from exhibitors, and in each instance have heartily commended them for their enterprises, and for the energetic way in which they have adopted suggestions outlined in the "Putting It Over" page in the Weekly.

If you have not already tried these suggestions, although it seems almost ridiculous to suppose that wide-awake exhibitors could have read them week after week without making an effort to cash in on them, will you do this: Try to put over one of these stunts from the "Putting It Over" page each week. You will be surprised at the result which will be achieved. One of these stunts a week would be sufficient to make your theatre the talk of the town, and that is exactly what you want it to be. No exhibitor can afford to ignore live, up-to-date suggestions such as these. If you have not tried them, try one today, and see what you have missed.

THANKSGIVING WEEK, folks, and it is up to you to make the most of it. Don't forget that there are Thanksgiving vacations in many sections—possibly in yours, and prepare to get extra admissions from the children and the high school and college boys and girls who are looking for entertainment.

Some of the special Thanksgiving releases are given in this week's stunt suggestions, and from them you can prepare for a well-decorated lobby that should attract the crowds for more than just your Thanksgiving Day performances. Go to it with the intention of doing more business than usual. Use the stunts as suggested and let us hear from you.

THE Thanksgiving Day Special is called "The Mother Call," and is the story of the return to the farm of the two grown children, who have left the old home to make their way in the world. It would be effective to decorate the lobby for this picture with corn stalks, pumpkins, strings of corn ears, bright red apples, and the other things which are typical of such a scene as that of the picture. Special posters advertising the picture, which is one which makes a strong appeal to the Thanksgiving spirit, should be wreathed in colored autumn leaves, or evergreens. This may be done several days before the picture is run, and will surely be an attraction to your house.

"THE Last of the Morgans," the two-reel Laemmle drama for November 29th, is a Southern story. If Southern sentiment is strong in your community, it would be well to emphasize this picture by having two men in Confederate uniform parade the streets with the announcement of it. While the picture is being run, they may stand at attention on either side of the entrance to your theatre.

"THE White Turkey" is the Nestor release for November 27th which is particularly appropriate to this week, with its Thanksgiving festival. If there is a local artist of whose services you can avail yourself, get him to draw a big turkey on cardboard. Then cut it out, and paste a standard on the back of it so that it will stand alone under the announcement of the picture.

IF you are showing the Red Feather "Kinkaid, Gambler," you can attract a lot of attention by dressing a good-looking chap to represent Kinkaid; ordinary business suit, flannel shirt with flowing tie; heavy watch chain, and a big, gray or black sombrero. Hand cuff him, and have a pretty girl with a detective badge on her breast lead him around town. On the man's back have a placard announcing the play, date, etc.

THERE'S a corking one-reel Joker released December 9, called "The Tramp Chef." Get a heavy-set guy and give him a tramp make-up. Have him wear a white coat, apron and cap, and carry in one hand a long butcher knife made of lath. On his back the usual placard.

THERE'S a good racehorse picture on December 15, called "Scratched." Get a little fellow; put him in jockey costume, on a running horse, with regulation racing saddle, etc. Have a placard on the horse's blanket reading: "This is the horse that was "SCRATCHED." You can get the whole story at the Blank Theatre—with date, etc. Let him keep on the streets until he has covered several times, the section from which you draw your patronage and you will add a lot of admissions that day.

MRS. GRUNDY PEDDLES SCANDAL ABOUT ALL THE BLUEBIRDS.

THE GAY LORD WARING," "The Bugler of Algiers" and "Rupert of Hentzau," known as "The Three Godfathers," were caught in "Love's Lariat." Each cherished a "Secret Love" for "Undine;" but when "The Eye of God" searched their "Naked Hearts" it was disclosed that they were seeking "The Unattainable." Being variously known as "The Love Girl" and "The Flirt" her conduct reflected "The Evil Women Do."

Before meeting her "The Great Problem" with them had been to solve "The Secret of the Swamp," where "Elusive Isabel" "Wanted a Home" at "The End of the Rainbow." "The Social Buccaneer" was their rival. He was nicknamed "The Yaqui" and had defeated them every time in "The Silent Battle"—for "Bettina Loved a Soldier" and our heroine was likeminded.

Being "A Son of the Immortals" he could take "The Measure of a Man" and knew that "Love Never Dies." Likewise it was easy for "The Shriveled Soul" to ensnare their "Tangled Hearts" in "The Grip of Jealousy." He induced "A Stranger from Somewhere" to send them "The Sign of the Poppy" in a bouquet of "Black Orchids," stating that a pair of "Shoes" was "The Price of Silence" he demanded.

Discovering that they were in "The Grasp of Greed" they sent for "Jeanne Dore"—but she was "The Wrong Door." Finally they sent "Bobby of the Ballet" with a note to "John Needham's Double" with a request that he come from "Behind the Lines" for the purpose of "Saving the Family Name." But their messenger drank from "The Chalice of Sorrow," containing "Hop, the Devil's Brew," and while in a stupor was bitten on "The Crippled Hand" by "The Gilded Spider;" went insane and killed their enemy. They rejoiced because of their "Broken Fetters" and to celebrate they found "Little Eve Edgarton," who had been "The Girl of the Lost Lake," and she joined them in "A Christmas Carol" entitled "Gloriana."

UNIVERSAL CITY RECOGNIZED AS A WORLD CAPITOL.

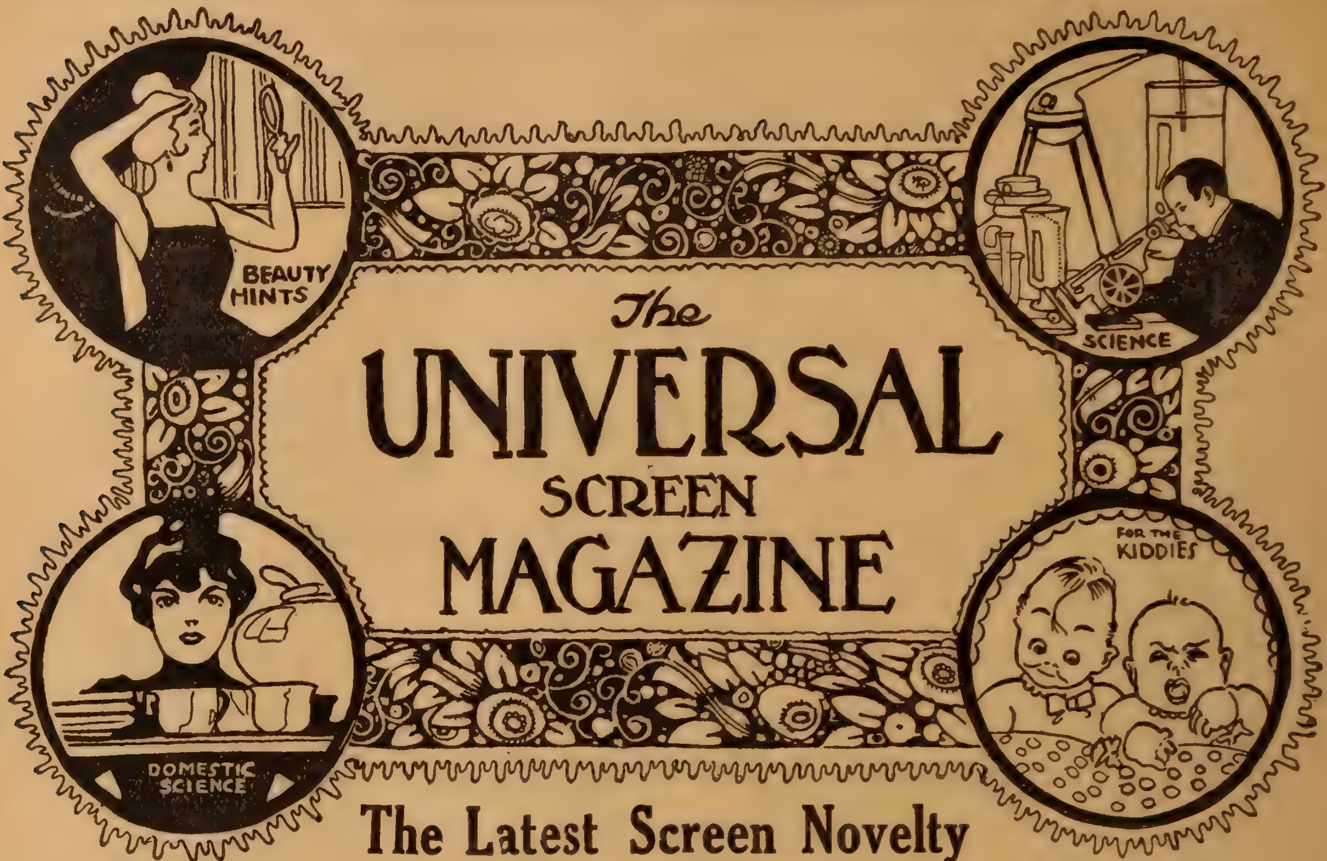
When the car drove into the gates of the unique municipality, it was surrounded by the members of the serial "Liberty," all on horseback, and all armed with many weapons. The air was filled with the sound of shooting, from the formidable array of armed men, with the intrepid Amazon, Marie Walcamp at their head.

The Hupmobile was roped by Pedro Leon, champion roper of Universal City, and of the whole Pacific Coast as well. A yelling mob of cowboys encircled it, whirling their lariats, and firing in the air. Later the same company escorted the car to Los Angeles, where the tourists were received by the Mayor and other officials of that city. The "Liberty" company was at the reception.



The UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE

The Latest Screen Novelty

The Universal Screen Magazine is made for the fans; it is edited along the lines of a popular illustrated magazine; the subjects are varied enough to please everyone that comes to your theatre,

There are Beauty Hints and Domestic Science for the ladies; the endless activities of the world's workers for all; there are brief juvenile subjects that please young and old; instructive bits that tell how to do things; it is so packed with novel ideas that it is positively years ahead of anything now released.

The Universal Screen Magazine is in one reel, released on the Universal Program; it gets right close to the fans. The trailer asks them for suggestions of subjects; it asks them to help edit the Screen Magazine. It is unique; it will draw business on the dullest day.

What the Universal Animated Weekly is to a newspaper the Universal Screen Magazine is to a popular periodical. You need it. Write for full particulars to any one of the 73 Universal Exchanges, or which has not a record of 110 miles an hour to its credit will be entered for the Universal trophy. Every effort to smash the Sheepshead Bay Speedway records will be made.

UNIVERSAL GIVES CUP FOR AUTO RACE.

Among the drivers entered are Hughie Hughes, in his Sunbeam-Hoskins, in which he has made 130 miles an hour; John De Palma, brother of Ralph, who will drive a Packard Greyhound; George Buzane, the greatest speed driver in France, who has just returned from the French front; Art Klean, world's greatest dirt-track driver, the only Jewish driver in the world, who will pilot a Crawford; Frank Galvin, winner of second place in the Harkness Trophy 100-miles race at the Sheepshead Bay track, who will drive a Premier; Charles Devlin, millionaire sportsman, who will drive a Dusenberg; Ira Vail, winner of third place in the Astor Cup race, who will sit in a Hudson; George Adams, with an Adams Special; Bill Chandler and Barney Newgard in Crawfords; and Newton McBride and Bert Watson in Olsons. Jack Lecain and Jules Devigne have announced their intention of entering their massive Delage cars in the race.

A peculiar coincidence in connection with the race is the fact that Jimmie Benedick, unknown to the Bluebird Company, has entered his special car, "Bluebird," in the race. This car is described as "something new," and as a special racing creation embodying new ideas on the part of the driver.

President Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane and Pat Powers have been appointed judges by the Uniontown Speedway Association in the Universal Trophy race. President Laemmle is considering adding a cash prize of $5,000 to the first winner of the cup in the event that the driver breaks the world's record in competition for the Universal Trophy.

The second race for the cup will be held at the new speedway track now under construction at Philadelphia, which will be completed early next year, while the third event will be run off at the Indianapolis track.

THE FIGURE THIRTEEN.

Director Lynn C. Reynolds of Universal City is a very superstitious man, and above all things he has a horror of the number 13. There is never a scene of that number in any of his productions.

Reynolds recently wrote a one-reel story entitled, "The Mother Call," which Ruth Ann Baldwin produced. After the script had been prepared for production Miss Baldwin submitted it to Reynolds for his inspection. When he found scene 13 in it he gasped: "Cut it out; it will be unlucky! This in one of my stories, too! Better forget scene 13 and make it 14 instead."

Miss Baldwin did so, being a bit superstitious herself and this being her first production.

The figure 13 has figured successfully, on the other hand, in the life of Dorothy Davenport, who played the lead in "The Mother Call." Miss Davenport was born on March 13 and married on October 13, 1913. In private life Miss Davenport is the wife of Wallace Reid, one of the idols of the screen.

The Reids only recently celebrated the third anniversary of their wedding, and the celebration took place on October 13. Strange to say, when the guests at the festal board were counted—some one always counts them, you know—it was discovered that exactly 13 were at table.

"Don't be alarmed," said the hostess when the discovery was made, "13 is our lucky number," and then she called attention to the fact that the little party was taking place on Friday, October 13.

The party broke up at one o'clock in the morning. "You see," said Miss Davenport, "13 followed us to the end of the evening, for 1 o'clock is 13 o'clock in many countries in the world."

Then it was explained to him that he was to work in the company of Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, who has joined the production forces at Universal City.

"I AM THE PRINTING PRESS."

By Robert H. Davis.

scrap-book contains one on the moving picture, among other things.

It is an interesting commentary on all of this flattery of imitation, that all that Mr. Davis ever got out of his much-copied idea was a five hundred dollar check from the National Cash Register. Mr. Davis wrote a very polite letter, calling attention to the fact that he was the author of the great, only, and original "I am," whereupon they promptly sent him a check for $500, which is the only money he has received for the idea. Its genesis came about in this way, and the writing of the advertisement was merely a courtesy to an advertiser, as far as Mr. Davis was concerned. A page of copy calling attention to the particular merits of the Hoe Press was submitted to Munsey's, and came under the notice of Mr. Davis. In his usual editorial thoughtfulness he suggested to the Hoe people that an advertisement picturing the remarkable influence of the printing press upon civilization, and describing in the copy the influence which any printing press had upon humanity, would be not only an unusual but a very striking and beneficial kind of advertisement. The advertiser agreed that this would be so, but admitted at the same time that no one in their office could write such an advertisement. The matter was left in abeyance until fifteen minutes before press time, when Mr. Davis was asked if he would not write such a page of copy, and inside of fifteen minutes he had dictated to his stenographer the prose poem which is reproduced on page 23, and it is interesting to note that only three minor corrections were made in the copy before it made its final appearance.

PEOPLE VS. JOHN DOE.

and which has been incorporated in the main title of the picture as follows:

"There are in our broad country hundreds of thousands of intelligent and reputable citizens who are bitterly opposed to capital punishment and to third degree methods of examination of alleged criminals.

"The law ought not, nor does the spirit of the law intend, to punish persons with undeveloped minds with the same severity as those having normal minds.

"This drama is inspired by many celebrated murder cases, but does not purport to be an accurate narrative of any particular case.

"No attack is made upon our courts, but it is shown that officers of the law may at times do irreparable injustice by their methods."

The Show That ALWAYS Gets the Money

The show that "any one can see and enjoy at any time"—no matter how much or how little time he may have—that's the Universal Program, that gives the movie fan more for his money than any other screen entertainment on earth. It is the entertainment that is making money for more Exhibitors than any other on earth. It is the sterling program of varied interest—scientifically balanced—short subjects—one-, two- and three-reel features; educationals, The Universal Animated Weekly with all the world's best news first; The Universal Screen Magazine, just like a popular illustrated magazine—with every subject shown in moving pictures; the Universal Comedies—Nestor, L-Ko and Joker—unequalled as money-getters; Alaskan scenes that would cost you big money from any other producer; travel, educational and juvenile subjects—something to please every kind of movie patron. If you want the one sure fire profit maker for your theatre write or wire to your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars regarding the mighty UNIVERSAL Program, or to

"THE EAGLE'S

A Thundering Drama wi

From the Virile P

A great world-drama, with an all-embracing appeal. A stupendous and lavish production based on a theme of nation wide interest. A thrilling and absorbing drama of action. A brilliant cast of players presenting a story of National Defense. Unusual, overwhelming in its bigness; masterly in its realistic portrayal of existing conditions. Will grip the patriotic emotions of every American. One of the greatest box-office attractions of the century. YOU NEED IT.

a Thundering Message of Rufus Steele

BLUEBIRD Exhibitors will please take notice that "The Eagle's Wings" is not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program. Originally intended for a State Rights production, this magnificent drama made so strong an impression that BLUEBIRD secured it at an enormous sum for BLUEBIRD and other Exhibitors. You must expect to pay good money for this, because it will mean capacity houses to you. Special paper, including magnificent 24 sheet. Book now. Your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Three Weeks from this Week

Ruth Stonehouse in "Kinkaid, Gambler." A Romantic Drama of a woman's love versus the Law. Forty-fifth Red Feather Production. Directed by Raymond Wells. Released Dec. 4. It wouldn't be so bad to be shadowed, or even "hounded" by a detective, if Ruth Stonehouse was doing the pussy-footing. And that's what Kinkaid thought, when, through womanly wiles, Ruth lured him from his gambling house on the Mexican side across the border to the U. S. A., where three big, strong male sleuths nabbed him. But he had faith that Ruth would "run true to form," and she did. She loved him well enough to help him escape from the hoose-gow, and after that—"Innocent!"—and wedding bells. The kind of a Red Feather that will tickle your audiences and make your ticket rolls fade away at every performance.

"The Shadow," with Allan Holubar and Neva Gerber. Two-reel Victor Mystery Drama. Directed by Allan Holubar. Maybe it was because he's so big and dashing and handsome—and they wanted to take him down a bit; anyway, the fellas at the club bet Allan he couldn't attend a swell ball, swipe all the jewels in sight and get away with it. So your audiences will learn at the end of the picture. In the meantime they are completely mystified. Allan not only wins the bet, but steals Neva's heart besides, and all ends—well, it isn't the police station for Allan.

"The Call of the Unborn," with M. K. Wilson and Edith Roberts. Two-reel Romantic Drama. Directed by M. K. Wilson. Released December 8. Unfortunately for themselves there is a class of Exhibitors who judge a picture only by its length and PRICE. The longer and costlier, the better the picture. There are others, thanks be, who grab a picture like "The Call of the Unborn," ON THE REGULAR UNIVERSAL PROGRAM, confident that they can play to better business and greater profits than the theatre across the street which is showing a similar subject in five reels at a price that cuts out the profit in advance. That'll be about all.

"The Penalty of Treason." Two-reel Military Drama. With Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford. Directed by Douglas Gerrard. Released December 10. We know that "gold lace has charms for the fair," but perhaps Ruth never heard the saying. At least when the gallant Captain Guido meets and kisses her she slaps his face. In revenge her lover Campi (Douglas Gerrard), is seized and thrown into prison. In attempting to rescue him Ruth learns that the captain is a traitor. So again love laughs at bolts and bars, and the close-up fadeout makes the fans as happy as it does the lovers. If you would rather pay a lot more money for a five-reeler and make a lot less, that is your unchallenged privilege, but if it's good acting and strong stories and varied subjects, and full houses and popularity and prestige and profit you want—well, ask any Exhibitor showing the UNIVERSAL Program.

Advance Notices

Every Exhibitor should read every word-every week

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Morals of Hilda," with Gretchen Lederer, Emory Johnston and Lois Wilson. Forty-sixth Red Feather Production. Directed by Lloyd B. Carleton. Released December 11. Simple faith and honest hearts, guided by love alone, may never be recognized by the austere laws of the land, but somewhere the divine law of compensation is always working. Hilda found it so, though sorrow and loss were her portion. Hilda and August, simple peasants, come to the land of the free to make a home. They are not married; they have no means, but their love is pure and true, and they are to be wedded as soon as they can. But August dies and little one comes. Then poor, bewildered, innocent, ignorant Hilda is condemned; she cannot get work. Her story is against her. At last she prepares to end all, and how the child is saved, reared by wealthy people, becomes a great man, and later learns that Hilda is his mother, makes a story of tremendous appeal; there's a tug at the heartstrings that gets over big and makes "The Morals of Hilda" a remarkable Red Feather production.

"The Two Roads," with Edna Flugrath and a big cast. Three-reel Gold Seal Heart Interest Drama. Released December 11. Edna's father is a crook. A man of brains. He has made Edna his assistant. One night she is caught, while he escapes. She goes to prison, where she learns of the "straight and narrow way," and determines to go straight. Many dramatic situations disclose how she is haunted by her old life, and of the tremendous sacrifice her lover makes for her. This big picture was cut from five reels and is packed full of incident and action.

"Murdered by Mistake." Two-reel L-KO Tittilater. With Dan Russell in a screaming double role. Released December 13. Sure, sure, we know the title is funny, but let's tell you about the picture. Yes, Dan Russell is just as funny in one part as another, but the story is—What's that? How could any one be murdered by mistake? Easy. They intend to kill Dan—please stop interrupting—they intend to kill Dan and they kill Dan by mistake. Now the story is—well, if you know so much about it, tell it yourself. But anyway we beat you to it. We saw it first. And we know it's a darned sight funnier than anything you ever saw at that.

"The Lawyer's Secret," with Jack Nelson and Molly Malone. 2-reel Lost Heir Drama. Directed by F. A. Kelsey. Crook lawyers are over-reached by the long arm of coincidence in this corking picture. If the lost heir does not appear at a given time the estate goes to Molly. So they go East and pick up a down-and-out to pose as the heir. After six months he is to sign over the estate to them, accept $5,000, and disappear. But they happen to make their proposition to an old chum of the missing boy (who is dead), and he goes through with it in a way that surprises them as much as it will your delighted audiences. Don't worry about the ending. It's a little bit of all right.

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

That the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. has done more for the exhibitor by furnishing a machine for his booth at a great saving than any other similar company in existence? If you did not know this we wish to impress upon you that the above is a fact.

We fear no competition when it comes to COST OF UP-KEEP and SIMPLICITY of machine, nor is competition plentiful when considering exactness of machine.

The MOTIOGRAPH is in a class by itself.

With a combination of accuracy— simplicity—economy service and satisfaction, and the comparatively small initial cost the MOTIOGRAPH is the biggest buy today.

The MOTIOGRAPH is not intended to merely produce an excellent picture for a short time, but to continue to give unexcelled projection for years. The material used will not wear out with continued use.

The price is within reach of every conservative buyer.

The performance of this machine, with exceedingly low cost of up-keep and extremely long life, are things that every exhibitor should take into consideration. Just give our dealer a chance to demonstrate its superior qualities.

UNIVERSAL

(No. 152. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

ON and after January 1st we will advance the rental price on our one and two-reel L-KO comedies, Joker comedies, Nestor comedies, Animated Weekly, Dorsey Expedition pictures and certain other SPECIALTIES to all exhibitors who are NOT regularly booking the ENTIRE Universal Program.

All exhibitors who ARE booking the ENTIRE Universal program will be protected. They will continue to receive all of our program pictures, including the above specialties, as a part of their service. Of course our serials are not included in this.

Thus, an exhibitor showing an all-feature program and coming to the Universal exchanges for only a few reels such as those mentioned above must not expect to get these subjects at the same proportionate price as the regular Universal customer who is using our entire output.

We make a program of thirty-one reels every week. When an exhibitor selects fifteen from the thirty-one he must hereafter expect to pay some portion of the cost of releasing the other sixteen reels that he is not using. He benefits through our releasing thirty-one because it gives him a wide range to choose from.

Never since the feature business gained a foothold has the Universal neglected its program. On the contrary it has continued to search the world for the best possible stories, the best directors and the best players for one and two-reel pictures. Had we become panic-stricken by the feature business, as some concerns did, the exhibitors of this country who wanted and had to have program service would have been in a tight hole. BUT NEVER FOR AN INSTANT DID WE LOSE FAITH IN THE SHORT SUBJECT OR THE PROGRAM.

But, during this time, many exhibitors who formerly used our whole program dropped part of it and filled in with features. This they had a right to do. We told them it was a mistake and that the feature craze would eventually hurt their business terribly.

Hundreds of them have found, to their sorrow, that we knew what we were talking about. Meanwhile we have continued to pour money into our short subjects as well as into our features. We have allowed the exhibitors to take their pick from some thirty-one reels of program pictures every week and have thus found out that the crying demand was for good, clean comedies and novelties of various kinds known as "Specialties."

We have therefore strengthened our comedies and our novelties so much that we think they FAR SURPASS ANYTHING ON THE MARKET.

It has cost us a pile of money to do this and we feel that it is time for us to begin to get what these specialties are worth.

Let me make it clear again that we intend to protect our regular customers AS LONG AS THEY BOOK THE ENTIRE PROGRAM EVERY WEEK. But when exhibitors ask for the privilege of SELECTING only the cream of the program they must expect to pay for the privilege.

Every day new evidence pours in to prove that I knew exactly what was talking about when I said, week after week, that the public would tire of features and that the VARIED PROGRAM would come back. It has come back, stronger than ever, and in many cases the exhibitors have swung back to it JUST IN TIME TO SAVE THEMSELVES FROM RUIN:

Those of you who have not yet made up your minds to come back to the ENTIRE program are more than welcome to come back to any part of it, under the terms outlined in the foregoing.

"Liberty"

Universal Serial Is Proving Itself a Startlingly Realistic Drama of Warfare Along Mexican Border.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

INSTEAD of a slackening interest, which is sometimes felt in a long serial photoplay, "Liberty" has exceded all promises and is now sweeping its way into the hearts of observers. Nothing has been done in the way of thrilling warfare and adventure to overshadow this production. Its thrills are the genuine outgrowth of a well-sustained plot, and each instalment, with its vivid pictures of conditions on the Mexican border, raises rather than lowers the high standard of the serial. The thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth episodes are wonderful, indeed.

More Evidence : "'LIBERTY' is O. K. I wish there were 40 episodes. Average to date ove 600 sold tickets—played last night to 700. Pretty good for small town an run-down theatre."—Fairfield Theatre, Fairfield, Iowa.

"'LIBERTY' is the best-drawing feature I have had up to date. The business increases with every episode and th capacity of the house is taxed on 'LIBERTY' night."—Savoy Theatre, Springfield, Ill.

"'LIBERTY' is going fine with me. Book me for your next serial."—H. C. Whittmann, Muscatine, Iowa.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?"

WITH DIALOGUE BY

H. C. Witwer AMERICA'S LATEST AND FUNNIEST HUMORIST

H. H. Van Loan THE FUNNIEST OF ALL SCREEN WRITERS

Every one who has seen this remarkable comedy-burlesque is asking, "Where DID you get that stuff?" At the big down-town Stanley, catering to Broadway patrons, this picture was a knockout. It set everyone to talking. They want to know why a big FIVE reel comedy with a hundred punches has never been released before.

Uptown at the neighborhood NORTH STAR Theatre 2000 people sat glued to their seats while the mirth and revelry and laughter amounted almost to a riot.

That's what we are offering you, Mr. State Rights Buyer—a novelty that has proven its box office value. You are not only getting a big, fine 5-reel production, a complete entertainment, but you have EDNA AUG, famous musical comedy star; Witwer and Van Loan, the funniest guys in the business; an all star cast of individual star comedians; interpolated novelties that put this picture in a class by itself.

Read what the manager of the North Star Theatre says in the box below. He said a lot more, but this is all we have room for.

GRETCHEN LEDERER, EMORY JOHNSTON & LOIS WILSON

How "The Eagle's Wings" was Produced

TO THE FRONT

Allegorical Illustration from "The Eagle's Wings" designed to show the industrial mobilization necessary to keep one soldier in the field

WHEN most of us mention "Industrial Preparedness" we imagine we have said a chairful and sit down. Certainly it is a resounding expression and there are many thousands among America's millions who have scant ideas of just what it's all about. For the purpose of illustrating in clearest details what "Industrial Preparedness" really signifies, the exploiters of Bluebird Photoplays have prepared a photodrama under the title of "The Eagle's Wings," to be released as a "Bluebird Extraordinary."

Trust the moving picture magnate to keep abreast of the times, and trust the millions of "movie fans" to look to the screen for enlightenment on obscure subjects. "The Eagle's Wings" is a non-political, strictly patriotic appeal to every man, woman or child who shall gaze upon it. Rufus Steele, formerly Sunday editor of the San Francisco Call, and a prominent magazine contributor, prepared the story and supervised the production.

With a squad of expert cameramen Mr. Steele, by consent of the authorities, entered government preserves and plants now employed in producing munitions on European orders and secured authentic pictures of practically every move that is made in turning out projectiles, making cannons and manufacturing field equipments for every branch of the militant service. And it is an illuminating fact that these pictures were secured in arsenals where a cemera has never before been admitted.

The Naval Consulting Board of the United States, of which Thomas A. Edison is chairman, is now distributing through state organizations blanks upon which data is being based to show just what Uncle Sam may expect from the mills and factories, shops and foundries of the Union in the line of co-operation should necessity at any time demand quick and concerted action. It is believed that "The Eagle's Wings" will facilitate response.

Certainly showing the industrial resources of America, in authentic moving pictures, will be immensely interesting, and the illuminating facts will hold attention beyond the effectiveness of the average picture-story shown upon the screen.

"The Eagle's Wings" is a regular "movie," with a gripping plot, full of sustained interest in the outcome of an exceptionally good love story. Thus will the appeal be made general and engaging—for your "picture fan" likes his pictures served to him in story form, whenever it is possible to do so—whirring spindles and leaping lathes are all right when they are incident to "heart interest" and visions of thrilling exploits.

Rufus Steele can spin a good yarn, and better still, he understands, as do few authors, the technique of writing for the screen. He proved that in the former Bluebird, "Hop, th Devil's Brew," which dealt with the problem of opium smuggling, and was produced by the Smalleys. In this picture, he enlisted the assistance of the United States Treasury Department, obtaining permission to film the actual operations of the search of a vessel just arrived from China, and using real U. S. Customs officers instead of picture actors. An incident of the making of this picture was the fact that, though no opium was discovered during the search of the vessel, the introduction of Cooper-Hewitts into the hold of the ship, in order to make pictures, was the means of unearthing no less than eighty-seven smuggled Chinamen, who went scuttling away from the lights like rats, only to be caught and shipped back to the Celestial Empire.

Mr. Steele has found Uncle Sam so approachable in this instance that he determined to ask his aid again. He became obsessed with the idea of "Industrial Mobilization," which is the basis of the picture, "The Eagle's Wings," after talking to Franklin T. Miller, head of the F. W. Dodge Company, whose business it is to supply statistics to the building world. Mr. Miller it was who coined the expressive phrase, and who conceived the idea of an inventory of all the industrial plants of America, with a view to adapting them, at the shortest possible notice, to the manufacture of munitions, in time of need.

Mr. Steele, fired with the idea, and realizing that the screen offered the ideal medium for creating interest in the scheme, determined to set to work at once on a feature film which should outdistance anything that he had yet done in the way of motion pictures. After much trouble, the doors of the War Department were opened to him, as those of the Treasury had been, and he was enabled to take the pictures of the actual manufacture of munitions, Remarkable Scene at New Haven. 80,000 People See Yale Defeat Harvard for the First Time in Nine Years.

ALL THE WORLD'S BEST NEWS FIRST EVERY WEEK IN MOVING PICTURES

FLASHES FROM THE NEWS WEEKLIES

100,000 SEE FOOTBALL GAMES.

FOOTBALL is king! It is estimated that over one hundred thousand persons braved the Arctic cold in New York and New Haven to see the two great football events of the year, the Army-Navy, and the Harvard-Yale contests, which took place on Saturday the twenty-fifth. The Animated Weekly men were on hand at both events, and secured splendid pictures. The rights to photograph the Army-Navy game had been sold to another company, but notwithstanding this fact, the intrepid camera squad of the Animated managed to secure wonderful pictures of the event. As the boast of the Weekly is the exclusive showing of pictures, as far as possible, the films from the Harvard-Yale game, which few others secured, are chosen for inclusion in the Animated Weekly No. 48, instead of those of the Army-Navy event.

New Haven harbored nearly 80,000 persons for the big event of the sporting year. Judging by the pandemonium which broke loose when Joe Neville scored the history-making touchdown in the second quarter, they were mostly Yale sympathizers. But the Crimson men themselves had to applaud Neville. It was the first time since 1907 that the Blue had crossed the Crimson goal-line. The final score was 6—3, Harvard scoring its three points by a field goal, kicked by Robinson from Yale's 28-yard line in the first quarter. The Yale boys, already keyed up to top-notch, were turned into fighting demons by this score against them. They out-generaled and out-fought the Crimson at every point from that moment on. Football experts declare that Yale's victory was well-deserved. The town went entirely made after the game, taking full advantage of the first chance in nine years to celebrate a victory over Harvard.

GLIMPSE OF GERMAN WARSHIPS.

VIEWS of German activities in the great war are rare. Therefore special interest attaches to the pictures of battle cruisers "somewhere off Heligoland," which are shown in No. 48 of the Animated Weekly. The big guns, ready to hurl death, are seen from an advantageous viewpoint. The never-ceasing work of keeping the monsters in perfect condition by the most rigid inspection is illustrated. One of the victims of the huge guns is shown driven ashore after a sea-battle, pathetically pounding to pieces on the rocky shore.

THE VANDERBILT CUP RACE.

ONE of the big events of the automobile world is the Vanderbilt Cup Race held at Santa Monica, Cal., on November 16th. This year there were nineteen starters for the classic event in which all records were shattered. Sixty-five thousand persons were on hand to watch the speed demons' dizzy whirl over the course. The most famous drivers competed for the magnificent cup and were cheered by the immense crowd as they made their appearance in their racing cars. The event was won by Dario Resta, the Italian speed wizard, in his Peugot car. His time was 3 hours, 22 minutes and 48 2-5 seconds. The 294 miles were covered by Resta at an average speed of 87 miles an hour.

Earl Cooper, in his Stutz, was second, his time being 3 hours, 30 minutes and 40 2-5 seconds. William Weightman, in a Duesenberg, was third; time 3 hours, 42 minutes and 2-5 second. After the race Cooper congratulated Resta for his record victory. Splendid views of the race and the winners are shown in the Animated Weekly No. 48.

TURKEY OR FLIVVER, WHICH?

THE price of the holiday bird is almost equal to the price of a flivver in these days of the high cost of living; and yet, what is Thanksgiving without a turkey? Timely views of one of the greatest turkey farms are shown in the Animated Weekly No. 48. Texas is the chief source of supply for the rest of the country, and the birds are shown, driven in droves to market from a farm at Meyersville. A scrapping gobbler struts across the screen, and is then shown lying beautiful in death and ready for shipment.

LONDON IN WAR-TIME.

A GLIMPSE of London in war-time, shows that the people have not lost their cheerfulness. These views, which are shown in the Animated Weekly No. 48, were taken in the English capital on one of the numerous "Flag days," when the women sell small flags for different charitable purposes. A very popular souvenir is a small model of a Zeppelin, which was sold as well as the flags. All sorts and conditions of people take a hand in the disposal of the souvenirs. One of the conspicuous figures is the "Pearly" King of the Costers, those unique vendors who traverse London in donkey carts, selling all sorts of things in the streets. The "King" is almost covered with buttons sewn on his clothes in rows. He sold hundreds of souvenirs.

"The SIGN of the POPPY"

A BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written by J. Grubb Alexander and produced by Charles Swickard, with Hobart Henley in a dual impersonation, supported by Gertrude Selby. A mystery story of mistaken identity with the sinister atmosphere of Chinatown and the revenge of the Tongs.

CAST.

Alvin Marston Chang	Hobart Henley
Edith Marston	Gertrude Selby
Hop Li	Charles G. Briden
Rex Durant	Robert Clark
Helen Durant	Mina Cunard

HOBART HENLEY'S first Bluebird is a thrilling story of twin brothers, one of whom was stolen at birth by Hop Li, the Tong leader whom the father of the babies had mortally offended. The child is brought up as a Chinese, and has no idea of his white blood until he is grown. The other lives the life of a man of affairs, and marries a charming wife. The life story of these two, so strangely different from each other, develops into a situation of thrilling intensity, and the portrayal of both roles taxes the entire resources of the seasoned actor to whom the task has been entrusted. The play was written by J. Grubb Alexander, and produced by Charles Swickard.

The complicated story is given in shortened form.

It is with great anticipation of happiness that Alvin Marston and his wife, Edith, contemplate their return home from their honeymoon to the home of Alvin's father, Jerry Marston, who had acquired a considerable fortune in trade along the Chinese coast.

While Jerry is reading the cablegram announcing the arrival of his son, he becomes conscious of another's presence, and glancing up, beholds the leering face of Hop Li, the leader of a Chinese tong. Jerry turns out the lights and when Alvin and Edith arrive, they find Jerry dying and trying to tell them about the significance of the red poppy he holds in his hand. From that time, Alvin is a changed man and although he tries to simulate happiness when in his wife's presence, she sees that something is preying upon her husband's mind. On their wedding anniversary he presents her with a beautiful string of pearls.

Alvin is alarmed at his father's apoplectic condition.

Hop Li ostensibly conducts a store, but in reality he operates an opium den, virtually owning the men who are addicted to the drug. Hop Li reads the announcement of the death of Jerry Marston, gloating over it with great glee. Chang, resembling Alvin very closely with the exception of his evil leer, is one of Hop Li's drug victims, hating him with all the fervor of his distorted brain.

Inside Hop Li's establishment.

One evenng Alvin discovers an opium pipe which had belonged to his father. He is unable to account for it, and this causes him uneasiness. This feeling becomes intensified when he receives a mysterious note saying that other things which have been lost will be returned also. Edith becomes greatly worried about her husband and lives in constant fear of something unknown and undefinable. One morning she discovers that her pearls are missing. The night before she dreamed that Alvin, with a very evil face, was bending over her. In reality Chang had entered her room and Alvin appeared in response to her wild cry of fear. Alvin promises to get her another string of pearls.

One night Edith is astounded at the strange behavior of her husband. She tries to phone for a physician, but he angrily prevents her and then flings the pearls at her feet. In fear she rushes to her room and locks herself in.

The next night she is astonished by the sudden appearance of her husband at the window, blood stained and dishevelled. Soon the police are knocking at her door, but when she brings the officers to the library, there is no one to be found. The next morning, Edith reads of the brutal murder of Hop Li, and the burning of his opium den, the chase of the officers, and the final capture of the murderer, who had absolutely refused to give his name.

Edith feels sure that her husband has committed this dreadful deed. Since the prisoner so steadfastly refused to give his name, she feels herself safe in giving out to the public that her husband has gone to a sanatorium. Later, with much anguish, she learns that the prisoner has been condemned to death.

Sometime later, Edith returns to society, where all accept the lie about Alvin. Rex and Helen Durant are fast friends of the Marstons. One day as they are driving they overtake Alvin, who looks as if he were dazed. They take him home and inform Edith that her husband has escaped from the sanatorium. Carrying out the lie, she accepts the stranger as her husband before the public, but keeps him at arm's length. He begs to be told who he is, and she always answers that he is Alvin Marston—her husband. Finally love springs up in their hearts for each other, but with the memory of her husband ever before her, she cannot accept the new love.

In his cell, the murderer is cunningly devising a means

"LIBERTY"

EPISODE SEVENTEEN

The torture of Liberty and her faithful Pedro.

DIRECTOR HENRY McRAE, who took over the filming of "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," upon the retirement of Director Jacques Jaccard, has been putting into the various episodes thrilling battle scenes and fistic encounters between the principals. No director of motion pictures understands the staging of battles or fights better than McRae, and he is putting punches into the big Universal serial entirely new to pictures. McRae declares that he stakes his reputation as a producer on making each episode stronger than the preceding, notwithstanding the fact that he has had to work at top speed to keep up with the releases.

The 17th episode opens with Liberty and Pedro in the dungeon looking for some way to escape. Eddie finds one of the stones loose and with his wonderful strength he removes it. He then lifts Liberty on his shoulder and helps her through the aperture that is formed and then follows himself. But the loose stone is only a ruse and outside there are a couple of soldiers watching. They are now in a steel room and as soon as they are seen to enter the chamber the guards give the signal and a fire is started under the room.

Pedro and Liberty begin to get warm and do not know what is happening. Then at another signal from the guards the walls of the room begin to close in on them. The two of them are really terrified and Liberty falls on her knees and prays that they may be delivered. The walls are by this time very close together and Pedro plants his back on one and his feet on the other and by his sheer strength holds the walls apart.

The men at the windlass are afraid as they cannot hold it any longer and the handle is slipping. They call for help and the men who are below at the fire leave their posts and come to their assistance. But Pedro has forced them to let go and the walls rush away from momentum. They are going so fast that they go beyond the point from which they started and leave an opening through which Liberty and Pedro start to make their escape.

GREAT Universal serial, now in seventeenth two-reel episode, brings Liberty to the Spanish torture chamber. Produced by Henry McRae.

CAST.

STIRRING SCENE IN "LIBERTY."

WITH the filming of each new episode of "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," being produced at Universal City by Director Henry McRae, and featuring Marie Walcamp, additional thrills are added.

Not content with battle scenes, burning whole towns and taking dangerous risks over cliffs, McRae built a cabin at the film capital and after placing his star inside, applied the torch to the building.

As the flames were rapidly eating the structure Eddie Polo, well known Universal actor, stripped to the waist, dashed into the flames and carried Miss Walcamp out. They were both scorched, but obtained the scene which is shown in the tenth episode of the serial.

In the 16th episode a tremendous test of courage was demanded of Marie Walcamp. She had to work in a dungeon with live snakes, rats, snapping turtles, and gila monsters.

Nellie wins Lefty's confidence.

“Kinkaid, Gambler”

Written and Produced By Raymond Wells

SCENARIO by Fred Myton, and sta ring Ruth Stonehouse. The story the age-old contest between love an duty fought out in a woman's soul. The situation of the woma detective who falls in love with the attractive criminal she has bee sent to “get” is worked out in original fashion on the Mex can border.

CAST.

Nellie Gleason	Ruth Stonehouse	Lefty Frank	Harry Man
Jim Kinkaid	R. A. Cavin	McPherson	Harry Griffit
George Arnold	Raymond Whittaker	Murphy	J. H. Knowl
Romero Valdez	Noble Johnson	Nochita	Cleo Lorin

RUTH STONEHOUSE appears for the first time, in “Kinkaid, Gambler,” as the star of a Red Feather photoplay, but all those who see her in this picture will hope that this Red Feather will not be her last, for the little actress gives a most convincing portrayal of a role which is full of difficulties. She has to depict a mental conflict, the fight between love and duty, which is waged in her own soul. The contest is as old as womanhood, but its setting in this photoplay, written and produced by Raymond Wells, is brand new. “Nellie Gleason” the girl in the case, is a detective and is sent to the Mexican border to “get” a notorious gambler who has robbed the head of a land company of $10,000. Nellie's duty is not some obsolete dictum of conscience, but the very modern and highly responsible one of rendering services to her employer in return for the salary she receives from him.

Timeliness stages this drama on the Mexican border, where the woman detective goes to get her man, but loses her heart instead. Nellie Gleason is an employee of the Burton Private Detective Agency of New York City. She is put on the trail of Lefty Frank, a second-story man. She finds Lefty in an East side dance hall, and by playing the part of a fellow crook, she wins his confidence, secures evidence from him, and sends him to the penitentiary. She is complimented by the chief of the Agency for her work, and promised advancement.

George Arnold, head of the Paradise Valley Land Company, has been robbed of $10,000 by Jim Kinkaid, who has fled the country. Arnold secures the services of the Burton Detective Agency to get Kinkaid. Nellie is put on the case and goes to Kinkaid's gambling house across the border.

Her ignorance of gambling very nearly betrays her. Romero Valdez, Kinkaid's right hand man, feels that everything is not on the square in regard to this woman and tries to tell Kinkaid so. But Kinkaid, by this time, has become strongly attached to Nellie and will listen to nothing against her. Nellie, by different ways, becomes aware of the

SOMETHING ABOUT THE HEROINE OF THE CURRENT RED FEATHER PRODUCTION.

Nellie Gleason plays her role well.

FACETIOUS persons when asked their favorite book are apt to reply with "Pocket book" or "Bank book" or some such witticism, but if you asked the classic question at Universal City, just now, nine actors out of ten would respond without hesitation, "Eat and Grow Thin." Players, scenario writers and directors all go about with copies of the authoritative work in their hands, and peruse it faithfully in odd corners. At the restaurant during the luncheon hour, you will see devoted lunchers, religiously consulting its pages instead of their own fattening preferences. Among the directors there are no more devoted disciples than Henry McRae, who has taken over the direction of "Liberty," and Fred A. Kelsey, who is directing Harry Carey in Western pictures. But among the players, Ruth Stonehouse bears away the palm for rigid adherence to the dictates of her mentor.

The little actress—she is only five feet two inches tall—has a passion for thinness. When she arrived at Universal City last spring, from Chicago, where she had made a big reputation as an Essanay star, she was horrified to find that the change of air had given her a most unaccustomed appetite. She weighed herself in alarm, and discovered the dreadful fact of an increase of two ounces in two weeks. This was most disconcerting, and something had to be done about it at once. Her normal "lightness" (one cannot call it weight) is about ninety-five pounds, and she can't sleep at night if she finds herself nearing the three-figure mark.

Miss Stonehouse replies to all inquirers who demand why she is so severe with herself:

"Well, you see, I want to be ready for everything. If my director says, 'Miss Stonehouse, creep into my pocket,' or, 'Slide through that knothole,' or 'Slip into that cigar-box,' I want to be ready to obey him. And just think how I would look, at my height, if I were fat. A puff-ball would describe my figure!"

Since her arrival at Universal City, the little actress has made herself exceedingly popular, by her friendliness, and imperturbable good nature. She won her first engagement by smiling and looking pretty while feeling very determined inside; and she has stuck to this method of procedure ever since, finding it most satisfactory. She was only a school girl when she decided that she could not be happy off the screen, and she used her school friendship with the daughter of the president of a big film company in order to land the coveted position. She got herself into his august presence by making capital of the fact that she was a close friend of his daughter, and she simply refused to leave until he promised to give her a try-out in the studio. Then she went in as an extra, kept her eyes open and her mouth shut, absorbed all she could, and when the chance of a better role came, she was ready for it, and made good. That has been the history of her career—a series of opportunities which came to her after patient waiting and studying for them, and then the improvement of each of them to the utmost, and promotion to something better. And all the way up to stardom she has never neglected the chance to hold out a helping hand to the one below her on the ladder of success. There is probably hardly a player in the profession who has reached the top with fewer enemies and more friends than the heroine of the Red Feather Photoplay, "Kinkaid, Gambler."

McCULLEY BACK FROM MEXICO.

WHEN William T. McCulley drove into Universal City on day this week on a big truck after a long, hard ride from the Mexican border, where he had been serving with the troops in the quartermaster's department hauling supplies to General Pershing from Columbus, New Mexico, to the General's headquarters at Mexico, he was given a rousing welcome by the automobile drivers who had veen advised of his coming.

McCulley has long been in the motion picture game and at one time was the director of Cleo Madison.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff"

A FEATURE film burlesque, with Edna Aug in the lead. Written by H. C. Witwer, of Saturday Evening Post fame, and H. H. Van Loan, humorist of the film world. Something entirely new and a scream from start to finish.

AT last the critics of motion pictures are completely at sea. The answer is "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" the special five-act feature of the Argosy Films, Inc., the craziest picture ever filmed. This celluloid nightmare was written by H. C. Witwer, whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post and other national magazines have amused thousands, and H. H. Van Loan, who is recognized as the greatest humorist in the film world.

It has been asserted time and again by eminent authorities on motion pictures that it was absolutely impossible to produce a feature film burlesque that would ever be a success.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff-" was produced entirely with the object of creating laughs, which it accomplishes tenfold, and it is a very distinct departure from the hackneyed slapstick, custard pie, funny walk type of comedy.

The first showing of the picture was made at the Stanley Theater to an audience of blase Broadwayites. It was received with enthusiasm, and the hardened theatergoers of that section enjoyed their first hearty laugh in months. The management commented most favorably on the merits of the picture, and declared it should prove one of the most successful films ever released from the exhibitors point of view.

In order to give it a thorough test it was projected at the North Star Theater, 5th avenue and 116th street, on Thursday evening, before an audience of nearly two thousand, and never in the history of the theater has there been such a spontaneous outburst of laughter. This is a typical neighborhood house and caters to people in the immediate vicinity who are regular patrons of the theater. The audience of this house is representative of the majority of picture houses.

Mr. Levine, manager of the North Star Theater, says that "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" is the funniest picture he has ever seen and declares that his house fairly rocked from constant laughter, which was continuous throughout the showing of the picture, and which drowned out at times the orchestra of twelve pieces.

"Never in all my experience in the picture business," said Mr. Levine, "have I seen such a demonstration as was accorded to "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" when it was shown at my theater.

"It is something the people and the exhibitors have long looked for—a new kind of picture comedy. Funny is too mild a word to describe it, and hundreds of my regular patrons have told me that they consider it the greatest laugh producer they have ever seen."

If the first of the Argosy comedies is a criterion of what is to follow, it is freely predicted that they will not only prove a tremendous success, but will serve to revolutionize the making of all future film comedies.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" will be the first production to be released through the Argosy Company on the State right basis.

Here is the story, or something like it:

Sally lives somewhere in Succotash Crossing, Pennsyltucky, and spends her spare moments stalling the fresh necktie drummers and milking the town cow. She is crazy to go on the stage—so is anybody—but that don't stop Sally.

One day, two big events happened in Succotash Crossing. The first was, a train stopped there, whereas, as a usual thing, they never even hesitated —and the second was, someone aside from the regular mail got off. The papers have been kiddin' the natives about the white slavers, and the poor hicks naturally think the newcomer is about to separate the town from its future chorus girls. As the stranger, whom we'll call Stupid, passes along the boulevards of Succotash Crossing, he whiles away the time by giving each pretty girl he meets a card. As he would have disposed of only one of the pasteboards had he stuck to that system, he switches and lets the medium pretty and seconds have a card.

The Village Cut-up, Alligator Joe, at first thinks the stranger is crazy because he cannot see any other reason for any one giving away somethin' for nothin'. It affects Joe so much that he shoots a quarter on a wire to the city for something extra special in the detective line to capture Stupid.

Jimmie, the well-known cub reporter (we dragged him into the thing, he's got beautiful eyes and—you know) is in dutch with his boss. He's told that unless he can get a good story somewhere the paper will leave him flat, so James grabs up his trick pencil and pad, rushes madly from the office and—

"The Shadow"

Dick captures the burglar.

The shadow records every word.

Dick meets the belle of the ball.

VICTOR Two-Reel Comedy-Drama. Story by Eugene B. Lewis; Scenario by E. Magnus Ingleton; Produced by Allan Holubar. A novel plot of the crook variety with a surprise ending.

Dick	Allan Holubar
Mary	Neva Gerber

Hostess	Helen Wright
Husband	William Canfield

ALLAN HOLUBAR is another example of the wisdom of the Universal policy of promoting actors of proved ability to the rank of producers, instead of bringing new talent in from outside sources. Some of the best pictures appearing on the program have been produced by the young actor, Allan Holubar, who has been directing himself at the Coast since his work as "Captain Nemo," in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," was completed. A clever impersonator of both straight and character roles, Holubar has the faculty of preserving that sense of balance and proportion which is essential to the production of a well-constructed picture. In "The Shadow" he achieves marked success in his mastery of dramatic suspense. The story, an unusually good one, runs as follows:

Dick attends a very fashionable party as one of the guests—but to all appearances is a very clever crook. He removes different pieces of jewelry from the guests, and even the host and hostess are not exempt.

But it is noticed that whenever he annexes a piece of jewelry a shadow of a young man is seen to make a notation in a notebook. Dick takes Mary, easily the most popular girl at the ball, out into the garden.

The shadow is seen to make many signs, all of which Dick completely ignores. Mary confides that all of their jewelry is kept upstairs in a wall safe.

Dick takes Mary back to the reception room and soon is wending his way upstairs. As he enters the room in which the safe is located, he finds a burglar already at work and cleverly binds him in a chair. Later the guests discover the loss of their jewelry and Dick is suspected. Mary is deeply grieved over this as she has become quite interested in him. He tells her that he will see her on the morrow and leaves. Meantime the crook upstairs is discovered and he informs them that a swell crook has all the jewelry.

The next day in Dick's rooms are gathered several of his friends and then it is discovered that Dick had played "Raffles" on a wager with his friend who acted as the "Shadow" to record that he actually took the articles. But the shadow thinks that Dick overstepped his bounds, as he had won the heart of Mary when the shadow considered her his rightful property. But the terms of the wager are that he "should take anything he could get his hands on." All the jewelry is returned and Mary gives her heart into the keeping of the gentleman burglar, feeling that he has already taken possession.

"PRETTY CHICKENS."

"Yes," said Wallace Kerrigan, superintendent of the Universal ranch, the other day, "Baby Virginia Richdale Kerrigan is almost a year old, and is commencing to talk quite volubly for an infant. She surprised me the other day when I had her out in the barnyard by say, 'pretty chickens.'"

"Maybe she heard her dad talking in his sleep," remarked Charles Oelze, Kerrigan's assistant.

LEE MORAN ILL WITH PNEUMONIA.

A SEVERE cold which Lee Moran contracted recently developed into pneumonia and the Nestor comedian was forced to remain in his apartment at the club, where he makes his home. It was found necessary to give him serum injections in order to obtain relief from the disease.

In the meantime Eddie Lyons has been working without his film partner and with Edith Roberts playing opposite in place of Priscilla Dean, who has been transferred to dramatic productions.

Snapshots at Universal and Bluebird Beauties

Some of the prettiest actresses of the film capital caught by the camera in recent and coming photoplays.

Catherine Calvert.

Myrtle Gonzalez.

HERE is a beauty from the legitimate stage who was persuaded to pose for the screen for the first issue of that motion picture innovation, the Universal Screen Magazine. She is Catherine Calvert, widow of the playwright Paul Armstrong, and herself a star of some magnitude. She is showing us how she preserves her beauty, with the aid of cream and powder scientifically applied. Reader, go thou and do likewise.

MYRTLE GONZALEZ has recovered from the illness which was caused by working at the top of a mountain, in the Bluebird Photoplay "The End of the Rainbow." Her heart became enlarged on account of the altitude. Those who know the Bluebird actress intimately, declare that this is impossible, as her heart was almost too big already. She is wearing a coat of rare Alaska pelts. Her next picture will be "The Man With the Shriveled Soul," in which she was content to give the stellar role to George Hernandez. It will be released January 1.

NO, Ella Hall is not learning to skate. She is practising for her newest creation, the name-part in a five-reel Bluebird feature with the curious title "Mary, Keep Your Feet Still." In this the dainty little star, whose last appearance was the role of the French peasant in "The Bugler of Algiers," the wonderful Bluebird of the Franco-Prussian war, is working under a new director. Jack Conway whose latest production was "The Mainspring" with Ben Wilson, is producing the picture with the strange title. Apparently Mary is a dancer, and certainly her costume is attractive.

CLARE DUBREY, the charming actress in the white wig, is playing an important role in the forthcoming Bluebird, "The Reward of the Faithless," which is being produced by Rex Ingram, director of "The Chalice of Sorrow," and "Black Orchids." Miss Dubrey is a recent recruit to Bluebird, but she has been connected with several film companies, including Universal. She had small roles in "Idle Wives," and "The Place Beyond the Winds." Miss Dubrey has auburn hair and brown eyes, and is rather above medium height.

A Chat With Hy Mayer, Wizard Caricaturist

By PETER PEPPER

AMONG the most popular features of the justly celebrated Universal Animated Weekly, are the cartoons by Hy Mayer, whose drawings are known in every part of the world. Mr. Mayer was one of the first artists to see the possibilities of the topical drawing which grows as if by magic before the eyes of the audience. He has been asked many times to tell how he accomplishes his surprises, but he is like the gentlemen from Virginia—he won't tell.

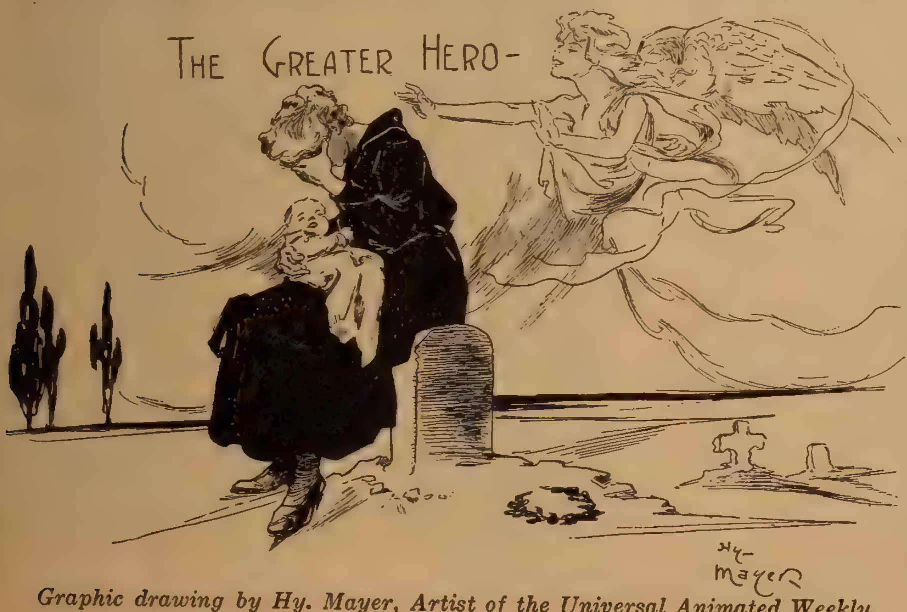
"I used to be so sunburned by the lights I used," he said to this representative of the Weekly, "that people thought I was a champion golfer, or an athlete of some kind. I used to work in the full blast of three banks of Cowper-Hewitts, and a lot of overhead lights as well. The fierce glare began to affect my eyes, and then I discovered another way of reaching the same result. But I am not telling what it is.

"There are lots of tricks of the trade of an artist, and all of them legitimate. The cartoonist's problem, in working for the camera, is not so much the drawing of his conceits, as the method of presenting them. I am enough of a showman to think first of all of making my drawings palatable. It takes thought to keep the audience interested in the growth of a picture, never letting the final result be known. All the theatrical tricks of suspense, development, and climax must be employed. All my life I have been a professional artist, but I have divided allegiance with another hobby—that of parlor magic. This has been very useful to me in working for the screen. The magician has two things to juggle, you know, his trick and the mind of his audience.

"I try always to have a thought behind my work, so that it shall not be the mere buffoonery of the Sunday supplement. On the principal that it is much funnier to see a serious man take a tumble than an impossible figure from whom one may expect anything. The cartoons which appear on the screen to-day over my signature are the digested work of three years experimentation and experience."

Hy Mayer's work has appeared in every comic paper in the world. He is a well-known contributor to the "Fliegende Blaetter," to the "Figaro Illustre," and "Le Rire," to "Black and White," for which English publication he was the cartoonist during the Boer war, to "Punch," and innumerable others of like reputation. He has published many books, including "A Trip to Toyland" and "The Adventures of a Jap Doll," which had a wide circulation. It has been said of him that he has never made a specialty of anything, for his specialty is versatility.

Hy Mayer in his studio, where he executes his drawings for the Animated Weekly.



Graphic drawing by Hy. Mayer, Artist of the Universal Animated Weekly.

Mr. Mayer is a real cosmopolitan. His Travelogues have been shown all over the world. An incident which occurred in London in connection with one of these Travelogues is told by Mr. Mayer very amusingly. It seems that in London it is the custom to close every exhibition of motion pictures with a portrait of the King. On these Travelogues the film ends with a portrait of Mr. Mayer. Some of his friends saw one of his travel pictures advertised at a London motion picture theatre, and knowing that his portrait always closed the film, they made up a large party of Hy Mayer admirers to go and see the picture and applaud the artist at its end. They waited through a long five-reeler, through a comedy which they found it impossible to smile at, and at last the announcement of the travelogue was flashed on the screen. All through the picture they were getting their hands ready to applaud vigorously when the genial countenance of the artist should appear at the close. What was their disappointment to see, instead of the smooth-shaven face of their friend, the well known bearded countenance of the, to them, quite uninteresting King of England! They had started to applaud before the portrait appeared, and, having begun, they were afraid to stop, lest the waiting audience should take them for spies of the Central Powers.

INTRODUCING A NEW

Phil Kelly (Francis Ford) and his assistants.

THE path of the celebrity is hard. It is a struggle to become famous in the first place, and it is even harder to stay so. Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are confronted with this difficulty. They have made their names known the world over as producers of tip-top serials, and now the Universal turns around and asks them to beat their own record. Well, they've done it. The first four episodes of the new “Super Serial,” “The Purple Mask,” have been shown in the projection room, and “Lucille Love,” “The Broken Coin” and even “Peg o' the Ring” pale into insignificance beside the sustained interest, novelty and dramatic power of the new continued picture.

It just happens that the first episode of the new serial will be released on New Years' Day. Could anything be more appropriate as a New Years' gift from the Universal to its loyal exhibitors than the first episode of the greatest serial yet? The last episode of “Liberty” will be released the last week in December, at which time it will be suitably inscribed on the roll of honor of past performances, which is so full of Universal accomplishment—gone but not forgotten. Father Time will stretch out a loving hand for this honored war horse and the New Year will have all the more confidence in being introduced to a waiting world because it will lead by the hand onto the stage of life “The Purple Mask,” which will bring joy to millions of picture lovers throughout the world. A Universal serial is one of the most truly universal affairs in the world to-day. The sun never sets on it for a moment.

Ford and Cunard always surround themselves with the best of casts and in “The Purple Mask” there will be the largest and most brilliant assemblage that they have ever collected. The sets and accessories are also of the finest and most appropriate kind and no expense has been spared in turning California into Paris for this New Year's gift

The titles of the first four episodes are as follows: "The Vanished Jewels," "Suspected," "The Capture" and "Facing Death."

A remarkable combination is the firm of Ford and Cunard. Artistically, they supplement each other like the two halves of a whole. Miss Cunard furnishes the inspiration, the first illuminating flash of vision which prophesies what the completed product will be, and Francis Ford furnishes the persistence, the sustained effort, the painstaking attention to detail, while preserving the balance and proportion of the thing as a whole, which are the almost superhuman requirements of the successful director of serial pictures. Both are actors of proved ability, and both possess that subtle something, called "magnetism," or "personality" that brings about the intimate relationship between the actor and his audience which goes to make a popular favorite the idol of his public.

"Lucille Love" was made in the days when serial pictures were looked upon as more or less of an experiment. It was one of the very first pictures to exploit the idea of a series of stories following each other in weekly releases, and concerned with the same set of characters. It had an overwhelming success in this country, a triumph in Great Britain, and is still running in remoter parts of the globe. It made literally millions of friends for its two authors; in England they are still known as "Lucille" and "Pierre Lobouque," and advertised as such in remembrance of the serial. From far Japan the Universal receives magazine articles and reproductions of the portraits of these two actors whose names are as familiar in the Flowery Kingdom as they are in California.

"The Broken Coin" followed "Lucille" and increased the reputation of the pair. This also enjoyed world-wide popularity and is still running. Then came "Peg o' the Ring," a circus story which set new standards for this type of photoplay. The Universal departed from tradition in the next serial, choosing a topic for its subject which was part of the current news of the day, and reflected the happenings which are making history in our country. All records have been broken with "Liberty," the story of the Mexican border, with all the incidents of its tangled situations reproduced and presented in the most dramatic and pictorial form. The Universal, making such a sensation with this serial, were to a certain extent "up against it." In order to run true to their policy of continuous improvement, they were confronted with the tremendous problem of beating perfection itself.

In this extremity they had resource to the acknowledge leading serial players of the motion picture business. If any one could equal or exceed the former Universal serials, Ford and Cunard were the pair to do it. Ford and Cunard were ready to undertake the seemingly impossible task, and set their wits to work, the result is "The Purple Mask."

There is provocation in the very title. Mystery, that standby of the serial, is suggested by it, and romantic adventure lurks in every syllable. There is a novelty in the form of the presentation of the episodes. Each two-reel release is a complete story in itself, so that casual visitors to the theatre which is running the serial will be able to enjoy the picture with complete understanding of its incidents, while to those who are following each episode there will be plenty of that suspense which brings a patron back each week on the day that "The Purple Mask" is shown. Extraordinary variety has been introduced, while the continuity of the story has been consistently preserved. The sewers of Paris, a smart restaurant, a studio in the Latin Quarter, an imaginary principality—these are some of the backgrounds of the first few chapters. Best of all, Ford and Cunard have each a real character to portray, not a puppet which is just a peg to hang adventure on. Detective Kelly, known as "The Sphinx," will be as real a personage to movie fans as Sherlock Holmes was to the millions of readers of Conan Doyle's great stories. And Patricia Montez is not a mere dressmaker's model, she is a real flesh and blood girl.

An idea of the story is furnished by the following synopsis. As usual, it is the work of Miss Cunard.

Patricia Montez, in Paris, a society girl and niece of the wealthy Eleanor Van Nuys, takes her aunt's jewels to fool Detective Kelly who has snubbed her at their introduction. Going to her room to return her aunt's jewels, Pat notices the butler sneaking down the hall. On entering her room Pat discovers that the jewels have been stolen from her. Suspecting the butler, she disguises as a girl of the slums and follows him to the Latin Quarter.

"Pat" again. And here she is assuming the Purple Mask as a regular business. See it in her left hand. And don't forget that Grace is some class in this Lady Raffles rig.

Detective Kelly, hired by Mrs. Van Nuys, and knowing nothing of Pat's part in the jewel theft, follows the butler to the Apache den. Pat, with her aunt's jewels recovered, bumps into him, dropping the jewels at his feet. Pat gives Kelly the slip by taking shelter in a poor tenement family's home. The Apaches escape the gendarmes through the sewers of Paris, and Kelly, satisfied with the recovery of the jewels, returns home.

The next morning Kelly returns Mrs. Van Nuys' jewels and meeting Pat, remarks on her likeness to the Apache girl. Some time later Mrs. Van Nuys loses her fortune. Pat comforts her aunt and promises help. Paris is startled by a series of clever thefts by a female Raffles. Detective Kelly is again summoned.

The Apaches admire the thief's exploits and try to locate her for their chief. Kelly is informed that the that's giving away the cards. You see, the plot in this picture gradually thickens until it sickens—but, anyhow—when Stupid gets around to Sally he is all out of tickets, and, although she goes so far as to flirt with him, he refuses to fall for her. When he leaves Succotash Crossing, Sally packs up a clean shirtwaist and a change of hairpins and follows him.

The mysterious stranger turns out to be a married man. What d'ye think of that, eh? Going around giving girls cards and him married! But cheer up, wait 'til you see what they do to him in the fourth reel. He's married to Madame Cascarovitch, the famous dancer. That name sounds phoney, don't it, eh? I never heard of her, did you? Heh? You never go to a circus? What d'ye mean, circus? Well, Cascarovitch (I can't get over that name, I'll bet it's phoney) calls in three of the funniest looking Hicks I ever saw in my life. I don't like to kid anybody, but take it from me, these guys are rich. Wait till you see 'em! They all get together and in order that the picture can be stretched out to five reels they plan to blow up a duke. Clever idea, eh?

Meanwhile, Sally (I'll bet you thought I forgot about her, eh?) stays on the train and arrives in the Cruel City. She ain't been there a day before she's doin' a dance that—well, take it from me, it's some dance—I went back twice to see that and met people that had been sittin' in the theatre for a week. Sally gets kidnapped and in the fifth reel they take her over to——

But, there I go again, I nearly gave it away.

Thinkin' Sally is Cascarovitch, the plotters give her a bomb with which she's supposed to blow up the count—or was it a duke, wasn't it?—Well, whatever it was, Sally not only blows up the king—I mean the duke, but she blows up——

Say! This is the best part of the picture! Believe me the way they all chase around and then when the thing goes off it——

As I was sayin' that's in the fifth reel and then Sally finds out that the whole thing was nothin' but a—

Three views of the lovers in four exciting situations.

DOUGLAS GERRARD is adding many inches to the stature of his reputation as a director. He has been producing for only a few months, yet none but successes have as yet been credited to his name. One of the best things he has done is this swift-moving story of Sicily, written originally by Helen Jonas, and put into scenario form by Maie Havey. The character of an Italian, of a son of Southern Europe, is a particular favorite with Gerrard, and he portrays it with all the finesse of his artistry.

In his recent releases he has been supported by Ruth Clifford, one of the prettiest as well as the most talented of the younger actresses at Universal City. She made her first appearance in the Bluebird Photoplay "Behind the Lines" with Harry Carey, in the difficult role of the heroine's younger sister, who was made a hostage by the Mexican bandits. The role called for strong emotional acting, and every one remarked that Miss Clifford brought to it the qualifications of a true emotional actress. In the present picture, she has another fine opportunity, and meets it finely. Her appearance in boy's clothes is just as attractive as it is in petticoats, and that is saying a great deal. The picture, besides the fine work of Gerrard, and Miss Clifford has the advantage of a real plot, which runs as follows:

Francesca, known as the prettiest girl in Caliente, is very much in love with the violinist, Campi, and the two are betrothed.

There comes through the town one day Captain Guido and several of his men. As the captain is passing down a street he notices a couple of his men talking with a very pretty girl and determines to investigate. The two men leave and he makes love to the girl, who is none other than Francesca. But she resents it and slaps the captain's face.

When she tells Campi of the occurrance he straightway seeks out the captain, intent upon avenging the insult. Campi is taken prisoner, and later when Francesca discovers his plight she dons boys' clothes and acts as a servant to Guido, who, with some of his men, is on the point of betraying the government.

Finally, through the efforts of the girl, Guido is made to suffer the penalty of his treason, together with his confederate, and the girl and her lover are once more happy.

MAKING UP WITH BRAINS

Bell, while that veteran actor was playing in a feature production at Universal City. After studying these two cuts we can easily believe them. Chaney makes no secret of the methods of his art, and is always willing to give the benefit of his experience to others. When asked how he manages to accomplish these extraordinary results, he gives the celebrated answer of Sir Joshua Reynolds when he was asked with what he mixed his paints—"With brains, sir."

Chaney is interested in faces as other men are interested in fine pictures, or beautiful china. An unusual countenance gives him something of the pleasure that a collector experiences in a rare specimen of the art which he collects. He studied the remarkable face of the bandit leader in the reproductions which appeared in the newspapers, and just as a tour de force, decided to imitate them. The result was so extraordinarily successful that he was persuaded to preserve it by photography.

Chaney appears in the forthcoming Bluebird photoplay "The Price of Silence" in the support of Dorothy Phillips. He has to portray a doctor, first in youth and then in middle age. He does this without the use of white wig, whiskers, beard or overhanging eye-brows, yet there is easily thirty years difference between his looks in the first reel and in the last. He accomplishes this difficult effect "with brains."

Chaney used to be famous as an eccentric dancer, and has never lost his love for the art. Whenever there is a dance scene in a photoplay under production, he is pretty sure to be found an interested spectator. Dorothy Phillips realized this, and asked his advise and assistance in the new De Grasse picture in which she has to dance.

"ASHES"

Ashes and "Yukon."

"Yukon" finds a treasure.

Ashes is happy.

IN "Ashes," the Gold Seal three-reel drama, another Mersereau makes a most successful bid for "Universal" popularity. The play, which was written and produced by Robert F. Hill, serves as an excellent medium for Claire, the little sister of Violet, to show that she possesses her share of the family talent and charm, as well as the family blondness.

Claire comes to the screen with plenty of experience on the legitimate stage behind her. She was one of the army of stage children, and says that she cannot remember when she was not appearing on the boards. One of her pleasantest memories is the "command" performance before the King and Queen of England, which was played in London, while Claire was a member of the all-star company of the beautiful Maxine Elliott. Some of Claire's stage successes were the name part in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Toto" in "Zaza," "Flora" in "The Clansman" and dozens of children's parts. She brings to the screen a large measure of charm, as well as an abundant technique and bids fair to follow close in the footsteps of her celebrated sister.

Ashes is the maid of all work in a second-rate boarding house that is run by a Mrs. Topin, formerly of the burlesque stage. She has a rather hard life of it, too, because she is ordered around by everyone in the house.

At the time that the story opens out in the gold fields of Alaska there are two pals who, after many years, have at last struck it rich. But before they can enjoy the fruits of their good fortune one of them, Jim Shannon, dies. With his dying breath he makes his pal promise that he will go to New York and look up a certain Ashes Shannon and give her his share of the mine. This the pal, Smith, agrees to do.

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, with Claire Mersereau. Written and produced by Robert F. Hill. A little maid-of-all-work turns out to be a real Cinderella in disguise, and wins fortune and happiness.

CAST.

Ashes Shannon	Claire Mersereau
Mrs. Topin	Nellie Slattery
"Yukon" Smith	Stanley Walpole
Jim Shannon	Fred Hearn
Harry Davis	Joseph Granby
Glory La Rue	Helen Slosson

At the house where Ashes lives there is a composer, Davis. He is in love with a certain woman by the name of Glory La Rue. But he is not averse to a little flirtation with Ashes. One day in the paper he sees a notice to the effect that if a certain Ashes Shannon will come to the office of a lawyer she will receive a fortune. Instead of showing it to Ashes, however, Davis himself goes to the office and tells the lawyer that he is the cousin of Ashes and would like to take the inheritance for her.

But the lawyer is wary and refuses to give away the money on such flimsy evidence. He writes to Smith that one applicant for the fortune has applied, but that he is doubtful as to her identity and Smith, when he receives the message, decides to go to New York himself.

In the meanwhile Davis approaches her and wants her to go before the lawyer and swear she, Ashes Shannon, is his cousin, but she refuses to tell a lie. When the landlady, who is in the scheme, threatens her, the girl, she leaves, and gets employment in a restaurant as a dishwasher. But before this she has heard Davis and the landlady plotting as to how they are going to get the money.

When Smith arrives in New York he at once goes to the office of the lawyer and asks about the heir. The lawyer tells him all the particulars about Davis and his cousin, whom he claims is the heir.

But while in a restaurant Smith overhears a girl by the name of Ashes getting a scolding. It is a rather uncommon name, so he asks her if she is Ashes Shannon. She says that she is, so he takes her to the lawyer's and the next day they go to the office, so that the deed of the property can be made out to her. As they are in the office the clerk announces that Ashes Shannon and her cousin are there to claim the inheritance. So Smith and Ashes go out and the others come in. They are asked questions and at last the policeman, who has been sent for, arrives and the whole crowd is arrested.

Ashes is happy in her new found fortune and friends, but rebels at the idea of going to school, as she is in love with Smith. In her naive way she tells him so and as he has grown to love her, too, there is a marriage and the two of them return to the west to live out their days in the happiness of each other's affection.

Our Japanese Correspondent

OUR Japanese correspondent, Mr. Kintaro Sakamoto, of Tokyo, this week sends the translation of an article of his which appeared in the "Katsudo No Sekai," or Japanese Moving Picture Magazine. Written originally in the Nipponese language, the "interview" with Miss Grace Cunard, was then "janked back" into English, in the fashion which made Mark Twain's "Jumping Frog" one of the wonders of literature. Perhaps we may be pardoned for thinking that this masterpiece out-Marks Twain himself.

A JAPANESE VIEW OF MISS CUNARD.

By KINTARO SAKAMOTO.

Tokyo, Japan.

Miss Grace Cunard is pretty girl of twenty-three, and her sister twenty years old. With their mother who has about fifty years, they lead a happy life in Hollywood, a town about an hour's ride from the Universal City, So. California.

At twilight when crimson light is seen through the trees, it impresses us that this is the very kind of a house where all the first class actors should live in.

There are seven or eight servants in the house in addition to themselves. When at home, the thing she enjoys most is physical exercise. Her home is well equipped with all sorts of athletic instruments. When she gets up early in the morning, the first thing to do is to go right up to the exercise room and engages in the heaviest kinds of work—an exercise even most men would hardly care to.

She does not take exercises only because she enjoys it, but she considers the health is most essential to be successful in stage career, and that is why she takes such a hard exercise so as to get accustomed to any kind of task when presented.

She is very pretty, but not doll-like beauty. She is lively. Her complexion and cheek flesh is splendid. Her eyes and pearl-like teeth is very attractive. Her manner is very charming, but has a temper—but temporary one. Her expression is abundant, besides she has magnetic power which other American actresses not posses. This probably can be due to French blood inherited by she. With expression of French beauty mixed with natural beauty of American fair, she is really ideal movie actress.

Miss Cunard is very intelligent lady. When she joined with the Universal Film Company, some five years ago, she was still innocent girl of eighteen, and was hardly woman then. After meeting with president of the Co. she started her first week at $40 per week, but with the result of a short serial film produced during the first week, she was offered $1,000 a week in the following week. This has attracted a great attention from the people, and this proves that she is really genius.

One day she told president of Co. that she wanted to produce by herself a play in which she takes part. Hearing to this the president readily consented. Since that time on, any play she takes part was written by personally self. Every production made great hits and thus, she was recognized as an leading playwriter. $600 was the price of each play; to this weekly salary of $1,000 making up an income equal to any first class actors, but this did not delighten her to any large extent.

The real motive for producing serial films by the Universal Film Co. attributes to her suggestion. The first taken was "Lucille Love" shown at the Teikukukan, Asakusa, Tokyo. The play was produced all by her own hands. She herself have role of principal, and had Francis Ford as her enemy role. When the film was shown in New York and London, her reputation was so greatly that her name became known all over the world. With the result of this successful production, the Universal Film Mfg Co. has produced "Black Box," "Heart," and "Master Key" plays, and later completed "Broken Coin."

The most important attention she pays regarding the serial films, is the magnificent ending of each act, and the scenes and photographing is supervised with utmost care by well-known manager—Francis Ford, so that her serial film always proves tremendous success.

It was great blessing to her that she had Francis Ford as her advisor. With his unassuming tactness and ingenuity, she can prove her real worthness, and his geniusity.

Among the Universal Film Co.'s actresses, Cleo Madison and Ella Hall are considered as the stars, but as to the tactness, coloring and popularity none of the above three could surpass Miss Cunard. Honestly, she really gives interesting play.

"Peg o' the Ring" was the next serial film produced after "Broken Coin" and which will be shown at a certain theatre at an early date. We all expect that it will really prove more successfully to be than that of "Broken Coin" even was.

goodness of Kinkaid's heart and finds the job of betraying him very distasteful.

She, however, forces herself to the work and has succeeded in getting Kinkaid accustomed to cross the border with her. She then wires to New York for them to send the men to make the arrest.

Lefty Frank, a convict with a grudge against Nellie, manages to escape and goes to Mexico. He reaches Kinkaid's gambling house and recognizes Nellie as a New York detective. Kinkaid is told. Nevertheless, he takes his usual walk with her that evening. Seated on their accustomed bench, he tells her how he had discovered a number of foreigners on the desert absolutely destitute; they told him of how they were robbed of their life's savings by Arnold, through a crooked real estate deal. Kinkaid took care of the people and went to New York to see what he could do to get their money back. Upon asking Arnold to refund the money, he was laughed at, for the transaction was perfectly legal. Kinkaid, by force, took the money from Arnold, escaped into Mexico and returned it to the immigrants.

Kinkaid is arrested by Arnold and the detectives and Romero coming up with assistance, is deserted by his followers at a critical moment, and he is also arrested. In the jail, Kinkaid and Romero again become friends and Kinkaid wagers his entire possessions that Nellie will "run true to form."

In her room, Nellie sees a way out of her difficulty. She steals the keys of the jail from the sheriff and opens the door.

At dawn, Kinkaid, Nellie and Romero enter the town from the desert and are met by an ovation from their friends. Kinkaid gives to Romero the gambling house and everything connected with it.

MINNEAPOLIS LETTER.

By FRED S. MEYER.

Ruben & Finklestine have opened their latest and most beautiful play house, the New Palace, at St. Paul. While a feature policy has been inaugurated for the present, a great many one-reelers are used to diversify the programs.

Pat Rooney, well known Universal star, appeared at the Orpheum Theatre, Minneapolis, and was cordially received by a score of Movie Patrons who came to give Pat the glad hand.

Billy Watson, manager of the New Lyndale Theatre at Minneapolis, is one of the best known live wire managers throughout the Northwest. Billy has greatly increased the box office receipts of the New Lyndale since assuming the management of that house.

F. M. Rehfuss, proprietor of the Star Theatre at La Crosse, Wis., has always used Universal service exclusively despite heavy feature competition and seems to be none the worse off financially for pursuing this policy, as he has just taken over the Majestic at Wausau, Wis. That makes two, Fred; keep it up.

W. C. Clavier, of the Savoy at Fargo, N. D., is another to stick to the program. He has been a user of the Universal program for a great many years, and is the only one to survive recent revolutionary conditions in Fargo Amusement circles.

At last Minneapolis has completely abolished its self-constituted censor board. Mayor-elect Thomas Van Lear would have done so anyhow on the first of January, and when Mayor Nye told them that he thought he could manage very nicely between now and the expiration of his term, they decided to disband ON ACCOUNT OF INSUFFICIENT FINANCES. Anybody want to buy a machine cheap?

Wm. Koening of the Bijou is minus, and Mr. I. Ruben of the R. & F. houses very much PLUS since the election of President Wilson has finally been conceded. If we—meaning the state of Minnesota—can't break into national print any other way, we can at least hold our votes back long enough to give you something to talk about. And the greater majority of exhibitors and film men are just beginning to celebrate, while the minority is tasting a new drink invented here in town entitled ESSENCE DE CONDOLENCE.

Mayor-elect Van Lear is expected in New York just about the time we go to press and, unless something unforeseen occurs, the Animated will take a picture of him and the Mrs. while they are in the big town. Incidentally Mr. Van Lear will learn a great deal about the UNIVERSAL and its wonderful organization.

In leaving the Universal office we wish to take this occasion of extending to our many friends and customers our heartiest thanks for the business thrown our way. We trust you will extend the same good will toward our successor, Mr. Cubberly, who will gladly and willingly give you his best of services and attention.

Scenario by Bess Meredyth.
Produced by L. Chaudet.

CAST.

Jack Crarrymore	Eddie Lyons
Culdoon	Lee Moran
Mary	Priscilla Dean
Father	Fred Gamble

Culdoon operates a sanitarium which is warranted to cure all ills no matter what they be. To him come the fat and lean, the weak and the strong, the old and the young. But for all Culdoon prescribes the same treatment, a set routine of exercise and diet.

There comes incognito the matinee idol, Jack Crarrymore. He somewhat resents his treatment until the arrival of Mary and her father. Then the routine assumes a different aspect. Mary is not taking the treatment, so has plenty of time to prepare toothsome edibles for Jack, whom she immediately recognizes.

Culdoon is somewhat smitten upon Mary himself and it does not portend well for Jack when it is discovered that the girl favors him. Her father lights his cigar — which is strictly prohibited. But Jack manages to slip the father one and also to win the good graces of the old man. Jack impersonates him, taking his place for the exercises.

Then the trouble starts. Jack and Culdoon start boxing, but Jack is too much for Culdoon. Father hears the commotion and comes out in the hall to see what is going on and at that moment Culdoon spies him, and, taking him for Jack, starts pummelling him unmercifully, when Jack comes to the rescue and—of course, comes out victorious.

"A STORY FROM LIFE."

Rex Drama.

Jane, an actress, resting in a fishing village, flirts with a fisherman to get atmosphere for a new role. When matter becomes serious, she sends for her husband and child. Undeceived, the fisherman seeks revenge. The child saves Jane's husband from death and the picture ends happily.

"THE CHILDREN SHALL PAY."

With Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley
Laemmle Drama.

Phillip and Lois are married and have a little girl. But Lois feels that she is neglected, so she starts to run away with another man. The machine breaks down before they have gone very far and she comes back home. But her husband will not believe that she has not been untrue and so turns her out of the house.

In after years the little girl gets to be incorrigible. So Lois writes to the old nurse to bring the child to her and she will reform her. This the old nurse does, telling the master that she is taking the girl to a school that specializes in bad children. Lois at last with her mother love succeeds in reforming the child and then the father comes to visit. When he sees that it is his own wife who has brought the child he forgives her and so the picture ends happily.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE ISSUE No. 2.

The first article in the Universal Screen Magazine is about the old horses that are used in the making of valuable serums. These animals are of no use in the doing of work, but are innoculated with diseases and then make serums which save thousands of lives and are worth thousands of dollars. One "worthless" horse has produced, since 1911, $185,000.00 worth of serum.

The next article is on the boy scouts' work. It shows how the lore of the woods is taught and how it is practiced by the disciples of Ernest Thompson Seton.

The building of a portable house is shown. This is a way that the summer hotel bills can be saved.

Then the many labor-saving devices that have been invented for the housewife are shown. Housekeeping is not as strenuous as it used to be in the old days. There are electric percolators, cream whippers, silver polishers, meat choppers and dish washers.

Then as a closing feature Willie Hopkins, the world-renowned sculptor, is shown in some of his wonderful animated sculpture.

Nestor Comedy.

Written and Produced by Leslie T. Peacocke.

CAST.

Bert Marsh	Willard Wayne
Amy Marsh	Alida Hayman

Bert Marsh and his blushing bride, Amy, start out on their honeymoon well advertised as "Newly-weds."

Arriving at a hotel, the bellboy showers them with attentions until the anticipated tips are noticeably lacking. Then Bert and Amy become the victims of their practical jokes.

The bellboy and porter have arranged a clever scheme, and when the couple enter their suite, the fun begins. Hurriedly changing the bathroom sign to the bridal door, the boys anxiously await developments. Presently Bert is seen to saunter down the hallway in the direction of the bar. A moment later a fat man, in bath array, hurries into the newly designated "bathroom."

The next instant, however, a frightful noise in Amy's vicinity is too much for her nerves and she bounds to the bathroom door. Mr. Fat Man, now thoroughly angry at such a disturbance, lets forth a torrent of curses, which so shocks the bride, that she decides to go right back home to mother.

Hastening to the railway station, Bert comes upon Amy; explanations ensue and both discover they have been innocent participants in a comedy of errors.

"TRIALS OF A MOVIE CARTOONIST" and "SUPERSTITIOUS CEYLON."

Powers Split Reel.

The first half of this film shows the trials and tribulations of a movie cartoonist at work. The figures that he draws get rebellious and refuse to act as he wants them to, so he has a terrible time to make them do his bidding. They answer back and say that he has no right to make slaves of them even if he is their creator.

The second part of the film shows more of the wonderful land of Ceylon as seen by Dr. Dorsey. Here the religious side of the people is shown and they are revealed in their devotion to the God that they worship.

Mayor	Al. Moranti

After completing their morning toilet the two "gentlemen of fortune" decide to rustle some breakfast. Patsy starts off, but is seized by the village constable and lodged in jail. The constable, while an excellent guardian of the law, is a poor cook and suffers accordingly. Patsy sees this and asks permission to cook the breakfast. The constable agrees and finds that Patsy is a culinary genius.

Meantime, Spike has become impatient and gone foraging for himself. A lady gives him a pitcher of milk. He thanks her and is about to leave when she confronts him with a formidable-looking revolver and marches him out to the wood pile, where he proceeds to get busy.

Finally Spike becomes exhausted and walks to the gun to plead with Amanda, but finds that it is nailed to the side of the house; he pries it loose, intending to hold up Amanda. She, however, pulls the gun away from him and marches him off to jail.

The mayor sees the two prisoners go to the lockup and demands that they be let out. The constable reluctantly turns them over to the mayor, who runs them out of town. Then the constable finds that in Amanda he has a cook engaged for life and all ends happily.

EDDIE POLO IS HURT.

AFTER having worked before the camera at Universal City in its biggest serials and performing feats which appear very nearly impossible, Eddie Polo at last has been injured. These injuries were sustained while working in the fourteenth episode of "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," featuring Marie Walcamp with Jack Holt and Polo. During the filming of several scenes under the direction of Henry McRae, Polo was sat upon by a number of men and as a result dislocated one toe, sprained his wrist, put one finger out of joint and sustained several cuts and bruises on his legs.

These did not deter him from continuing his work in the next scene.

"The High Diver's Curse"—L-KO

TWO-REEL L-KO Komedy of the "Behind the Scenes" variety brings all kinds of trouble to Dan Russell and Fatty Voss and all kinds of laughter to any kind of an audience.

DAN has the position of property man in a theatre that is used as a vaudeville house. He does not have a very hard time doing the work, as he has a private beer fawcet where it is handy. But the trouble that he does have is in keeping all the stars contented. They all want to have the star dressing room and he has a hard time to make them all satisfied. In the end he has to take the star and shift it about from one door to another in order to make each one think that he, or she, as the case may be, has the star room at the time.

Dan is annoyed a great deal by the actor's about the place. He thinks that there ought not to be any actors in a theatre, so he tells this to one of them as he is rehearsing for a new part. But the other cannot see it just that way and an argument follows. Dan vows that he will get even.

At last the show is on. In the second act there is a place where it is necessary to have rain. But that is the act of the enemy. So when the actor on the stage calls for the rain Dan is asleep. There is no rain forthcoming. That is, there is no rain at first. Then Dan in order to give a great deal of rain turns on the hose and there is rain galore.

Another of the acts is a fake acrobatic act. The men are supposed to be holding each other up, but in reality it is Dan who is doing the supporting by means of a rope from behind the scenes. But just at the critical moment he lets the fly slip and the audience is allowed to see that the act is a fake.

Then comes the dance of the dying duck, a very touching little piece. But at his point in the performance Dan is standing behind the scenes, eating a banana. He carelessly throws the peel out on the stage and the dance of the dying duck turns into a farce. The actors cannot keep their feet and slip so badly that the audience is about to leave when the curtain is pulled down.

But the finale of the evening is when the high diver comes on. He is going to dive from the top of the theatre into a little bucket of water. All goes well and the diver is just about to take the fatal leap when Dan nonchalantly takes the bucket away and the actor cannot hold himself back and so dives into the floor. This is not a very pleasant experience, so the diver is justly peeved. He comes after Dan hot foot and Dan takes to flight. He calls for the police and these gentlemen arrive in a buggy. But by this time Dan has taken flight in a big car and the diver is following in a flivver. After a long chase it all ends when Dan throws his enemy into the river and then himself makes a hurried exit.

HENLEY TO FILM FEATURE DRAMA

In order that he might direct and play the lead in "A Child of Mystery," a five-reel Red Feather production, Hobart Henley has been transferred from the direction of Charles Swickard at Universal City.

Gertrude Selby also has been transferred from the same company to play opposite Henley. The story is by Willard Mack, the well known playwright and actor, and is laid in the Italian quarter of a big American city. A strong company of players was assigned Henley as his support, and special sets and costumes were prepared for his use in the coming production. Henley is directing.

ACTRESS HAS FINE WARDROBE.

It is doubtful if any actress at Universal City spends more money on her wardrobe than does Maude George, who appears in "The Right to Happiness," the Bluebird Christmas release.

One of her chums was in her dressing room a few days ago and remarked about the number of clothes. They made a count and there were thirty-five gowns, all of which had been purchased within the last few months exclusively for pictures.

"THE GOOD WOMAN"

BISON Two - Reel Western Drama. Written and produced by William V. Mong, who also plays the part of "Kansas" Reeves. A Bret Harte-like tale of the days when the West offered a new field to adventurers who made their own laws.

CAST.

"Kansas" Reeves	Wm. V. Mong
Joseph Allen	Harry M. Holden
Bessie	Nellie Allen
Pratt	George Pearce
Tim	Frank Whitson
Molly	Annabelle Maurese

The two women confront each other.

Kansas' dream is over.

WILLIAM V. MONG, who wrote and produced this Bison two-reel drama, must have studied his Bret Harte to good advantage. He has written a story which reflects the spirit of the great portrayer of the West, when the West was new. The curious and beautiful chivalry of the plains is reproduced in this tale of the champion of a "good woman," and his disappointment in his idol. Nellie Allen plays the part of the woman, who is driven by extremity to claim a position that she does not posses; Harry Holden plays the miner who finally wins her heart, and Frank Winston succeeds in hiding his identity absolutely, in the role of the drunken wretch who deserts the woman in the first place. Mong has a part which suits his talents of characterization, as "Kansas," and demonstrates his remarkable quickness with a gun in convincing fashion.

The tale runs like this:

"Kansas" Reeves, a born gambler, is informed that a certain gambler named Pratt has been winning from all the miners and he decides to return to the mining town. On the way back he meets with a peculiar circumstance. As he is riding along he hears the terrified scream of a woman.

Upon investigating he finds that it is Bessie, a strange woman, who is being attacked by wolves. He rescues her and she tells him that she had been deserted by her husband and that she is innocent. As a matter of fact she had been living with the man, Tim, who in a drunken fight had left her to shift for herself.

Kansas takes her with him to the city and announces that she is a lady. This is scoffed at by all until Kansas' gun enforces acceptance of his word—if not belief. Especially is it scorned by Molly, who formerly has been a sweetheart of Kansas.

For some time Bessie remains at the mining town and soon has the respect of all the men—but the enemity of the women. Pratt, the gambler, who has been winning all the money, is bested by Kansas. Then one day Joseph Allen, a miner, comes and Bessie is introduced to him; he falls in love with her and she promises to marry him. Kansas has by this time discovered that he is in love with Bessie, but does not give her the note he has written, when he finds that she is to marry Allen, but he asks her when she will get her divorce. Then she has to confess the truth to him.

Sometime later, Tim arrives in town and, seeing Bessie, starts making love to her. This is seen by Mollie and she so informs the men in the saloon. Kansas is angered and goes to Bessie's cabin, where he finds her in a struggle with Tim, whom he finally compels to leave; she tells Kansas that this is the man with whom she lived. While they are struggling, Allen comes in, but Kansas tells him that he has just driven away a man who insulted Bessie and then he leaves the two together.

UNIVERSAL CITY NOW HAS POLISHED STAGES.

HEREAFTER it will not be necessary to stain a number of the stages at Universal City for special elaborate sets, as has been the case in the past. H. H. Barter, head of the Technical Department, has devised a plan whereby the stages are being made as smooth as a ballroom floor and completely colored.

Barter is using an electric machine which sandpapers and thoroughly scrapes the floors, after which they are treated by a secret process, giving an absolutely smooth and permanent surface.

In addition one of the large stages has been entirely covered with canvas treated with parafine for the wet weather. Under this covering a large number of companies can work with the aid of mercury or carbon lights during the heaviest rains without injury to the properties and scenery. This stage can be used in addition to the two electric light studios.

ACTORS' FIGHT ALARMS POLICE

DIRECTOR F. A. KELSEY aroused the suspicions of the Hollywood police force a few days ago while filming a street fight for his Universal picture, "The Goat." In one scene Millard K. Wilson, who plays the leading role with Agnes Vernon, was required to battle with revolvers against Fita Wilson, Earl Page, Vestar Peg and Lou Short, and the noise they made attracted the attention of a policeman who promptly turned in a riot call. On the arrival of the patrol wagon, however, Kelsey explained it was merely a "reel" battle, and nobody but his actors stood a chance of being hurt. The men themselves were bruised in body, but delighted at the joke on the police.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO.—The recent announcement in Toronto papers that soldiers in uniform would not have to pay the war tax on admission to places of amusement, has been denied by the Hon. T. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer. The war tax ticket idea has been a great success, but has involved a tremendous amount of work and it has been intimated by the Government that they have a plan under way by means of which the tickets will be abolished and the tax levied on theatres according to their box office receipts. This idea it is believed, will be much favored by the exhibitors as a whole.

The Ontario Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association is to have another film ball in Toronto this year. The last function held in the winter of 1915 proved a tremendous success.

The members of the Toronto Exchangemen's Association have decided to hold a social evening very shortly, which will be a relaxation from the businesslike attitude of all their meetings up to date. There is no doubt that this recent co-operation of the exchangemen is proving of value to every one and the barriers of competition outside of business have been completely broken down so that the industry as a whole in this territory is progressing much more rapidly than heretofore.

The Regent Theatre of Ottawa has re-organized its staff and at the present time the new manager is Mr. Roland Roberts. Mr. Brick formerly in charge resigned to accept another post in Philadelphia. The new musical director is Mr. John Arthur, formerly of Loew's Winter Garden of this city. There are now sixty employees in the Regent of whom thirteen are members of the Symphony Orchestra.

Owing to the decision of the Government to allow only 1 per cent. commission on War Tax Tickets sold, the exchanges which were handling these tickets have decided to leave them alone in the future. This action of the Government will mean a serious inconvenience to the exhibitors who have been able to secure their War Tax Tickets by wire, phone or letter from the exchange without delay.

A noticeable feature of the Canadian film industry, is the steadily growing demand for films that are more British in their nature.

The Canadian people have no objection to watching any kind or type of a drama and comedy so long as it is impartial and does not cater to any one nation too much, but prefer the British flag as is natural, and it is to be noted with interest that war films are reaping a wonderful harvest in Canada at the present time.

Educational films promise to enjoy greater popularity in Canada from now on. Ladies' organizations all over Ontario are taking up the subjects of films and are organizing to show special matinees for children at various times. This is directly a reflection of a similar movement in the States.

Miss Clara Byers, late star of the Universal Film Co., is now located in Winnipeg, playing in stock with permanent players. The Starland Theatre issued a special invitation through its manager, Mr. Hill, to Miss Byers and her company to see the Red Feather feature "Half a Rogue," starring Miss Byers and King Baggot.

To build a new theatre seems to be the aim of every theatre manager in Toronto, the latest to be stricken by this pleasant malady is Mr. Marvin of the Strand Theatre, who it is said, will build a most pretentious new house on a location not yet announced. Mr. Marvin is already interested in three theatres situated in Camp Borden, Angus, and Toronto.

A notable booking on the Pavlowa picture is reported by Mr. Harry Price, of the Universal Company, who is now in Regina. This is the Lyceum Theatre, in Winnipeg, which house it is stated will show the picture some time in October.

Haileybury.—The Bijou Theatre, Haileybury has been remodeled and re-opened by its owner, P. H. Jory.

Oshawa, Ont.—The Grand Theatre, Oshawa, has been re-opened by Miss Conlin.

Leamington, Ont.—H. W. Purcell has taken over the Lyric Theatre at Leamington.

Ridgetown, Ont.—G. Flaharty, formerly of Detroit, has assumed control of the Star Theatre, Ridgetown.

IOWA NOTES.

By C. S. STEVENSON.

IN order to get in personal touch with conditions in his territory and to get the salesmens' side of the game, D. B. Lederman, manager of the Des Moines Universal office, spent the entire month of November with his salesmen. The first part of the month he went with R. F. Crawford into the northeast Iowa. The following weeks were spent with Nicholas Amos, in southeast Iowa; W. R. Shea, in the northwest part of the state; and William O'Hare, in southwest Iowa. Mr. Lederman met with much success in his new policy and he makes it an annual affair.

The Des Moines branch of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., still comments on the unusual volume of Bluebird business being done. "We get new accounts every day," said N. Amos, Bluebird manager, "and I am confident that before the last day of November rolls around we will have set a new record. We sent out a special letter telling our customers of 'The Eagle's Wings' and we got a lot of answers, which makes us think that this special release will be a mighty popular one."

Even before official announcement of the new Universal serial, "The Purple Mask," had been made known to D. B. Lederman, manager of the Des Moines Laemmle Film Service, he had started advertising the same. Where the Des Moines office had previously used yellow stationery it abandoned that color and got some very good-looking white paper with a purple head. In the left-hand corner were printed the pictures of Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. His first act, however, was to send out a neatly printed letter with the words "Announcing our newest serial," and then a cut of a purple mask, followed by the words "It means sixteen weeks of profit, popularity and prestige for you." Two days after this announcement had gone out three bookings were reported, plenty of evidence, says Mr. Lederman that you cannot start to advertise too early.

In addition to his position as manager of the Des Moines office of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., Nicholas Amos is proprietor of the Nicholas Theatre, the largest moving picture house in Council Bluffs. Mr. Amos takes the trip half-way across the state at regular intervals to keep in touch with his business.

which expert engineers, mechanics and manufacturers have pronounced to be the best machinery pictures ever taken.

Mr. Steele risked something in going into the Government arsenals to photograph these processes, as, of course, in order to obtain close-ups of the machines, he had to introduce artificial light. Fortunately no accident occurred, although there was a slight explosion in a neighboring room, due to the astonishment of the operator at the presence of cameras in the sacred precincts of a Government plant. These industrial pictures in themselves are enough to carry the picture, but it offers far more. There is a thrilling story, of breathless suspense, acted by some of the best players who have appeared in recent Bluebirds, together with others of proved ability. Herbert Rawlinson has the lead, the role of the young engineer whose scheme for Industrial Mobilization saves the country. Charles Hill Mailes, a distinguished screen actor, has the role of the Senator whose opposition to preparedness breaks down under his experience of warfare on the Mexican border. Grace Carlyle, one of the classic beauties of the films, plays his daughter, who is converted with her father. The other parts are in the care of well selected players who carry out one of the cardinal principals of Bluebird, the casting of a play according to special fitness of the actors to take the parts.

The raid scenes reproduce the now historic descent of the Villistas on the town of Columbus, and were supervised by men who had actually been present at that outrage, and enabled the incident to be staged with the utmost fidelity. A Mexican who resembles Villa closely enough to be his blood brother was found to take the part of the head bandit.

Reproductions of the Senate and the House of Representatives were specially constructed for the picture, with such careful attention to detail, that one of the national law-givers would find himself quite at home in them. No trouble or expense was spared to make this a production which marks a new epoch in the development of the motion picture as a reflector of the most important and burning questions of the day, as well as a provider of first class entertainment for all sorts of people. The critics are loud in their praises of the advance showing of this triumph.

GIFFORD PINCHOT ENJOYS VISIT TO FAMOUS U CITY.

GIFFORD PINCHOT, former national forester, gave up a political meeting in Los Angeles to visit Universal City one day before the election.

"Tell them to postpone it until tomorrow," said Pinchot to Mayor Lissner, well known Republican leader of the Southern city, after he had started on his journey around the film capital, "this is so interesting that I do not care to leave now."

Lissned did so and the well known forestry and conversation expert remained several hours longer, deeply absorbed in the operation of the cinama art.

When Pinchot visited the Universal zoo he met Joe Martin, the orang-outang actor, in whom he took an especial interets because of the fact that he bought an orang-outang in Borneo some years ago, later presenting it to Mrs. Taft, the latter's husband at that time being the Governor General of the Philippines.

Director Henry McRae filmed a number of unusual scenes for the serial, "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," when Pinchot and Lissner visited the sets upon which he was working with his big company.

ROMANTIC AND DRAMATIC MOTION PICTURE SITUATIONS

THE Film Director, unfortunately, does not as a rule consider music in "assembling" his pictures; hence it is all the more necessary for the musical leader to consider the pictures in adapting his music, on the principle that "Since the mountain did not come to Mohammed, Mohammed went to the mountain." Romantic and dramatic photoplay situations are in the most cases either psychic (emotional, without much action), or physical (in which emotion is expressed in movement). In "romantic" situations, where love, hatred, anxiety, despair, horror, ecstasy, etc., are shown by facial registration and with little or no bodily movement, dramatic maestosos, lentos, adagios or andantes are best employed; while in scenes of physical violence or agitation, bodily struggles, encounters, ets., agitatos, "hurries' and furiosos are the proper musical medium of expression. In both "loves scenes" and fighting "scenes" absolute synchronization, it need harly be said, is a first requisite. In the last-named fifteen second "let downs" with only a dynamic change in the music are often decidedly effective.

Music can properly interpret and emphasize practically every human emotion portrayed in the photoplay. And it is the place of the orchestra leader to immediately recognize the dramatic musical possibilities of a picture and to "augment and support them through the medium of his art." The leader who is content to select a musical number more or less appropriate and merely "time" it through is, nine cases out of ten, losing admirable chances of intelligent synchronization of music and pictures. And in the love scene and action drama in particular the right music, rightly presented, is of the greatest importance in making the emotions registered in the films "get over" to the audience, and in winning their interest and appreciation.

of escape. One night the whole town is startled by the call of the siren which announces that a prisoner has escaped. The whistle drives Edith to distraction. The stranger tries to comfort her, following her to her own room, where she finally allows him to soothe her. They are standing near a mantel upon which is a queer Chinese vase. Suddenly a pistol shot breaks the vase, which falls and strikes the stranger upon the head. Then he cries out that he remembers who he is, and he and Edith turn to the door, where they see the image of Alvin in prison raiment.

The sounds of the police and bloodhounds is heard below, and the prisoner shoots himself. The two run to him, and he tells them that he is Alvin's twin brother, Chang, when Hop Li had stolen to be revenged upon their father. Hop Li had implanted in the heart of Chang the desire for revenge upon the name of Marston; hating Hop Li for his control over him, he had killed him, and then had changed clothes with Alvin while he was riding in a taxi, hitting Alvin over the head and dropping him from the machine. Then he had attempted to take the part of the husband, but had been repulsed by Edith, fled, and been captured. Before the police gain entrance, Chang dies.

Alvin then recalls the ride in the taxi cab and the spending of many days with some people in the country until restored to health. He remembers leaving, still dazed, and being picked up by the Durants and returned home. Once more happiness reigns in the Marston home and Edith and Alvin are even more devoted for all that has passed.

GRACE CUNARD IN TWO PURPLE MASK DISGUISES

Apaches are going to crown their new leader, a woman, and tries to gain an entrance but is overheard by Pat and the Apaches, who escape.

Pat, through her desire to help the poor and needy and to keep her promise to her aunt, passes through many adventures, either outwitting Kelly or helping them out of tight holes. Enroute to America after straightening out a situation in an imaginary principality and helping Kelly escape when ordered to prison by the ruler, Pat meets a young mother and her baby who is following the father of the child and his new bride, a wealthy society girl. The girl tells her story to Pat, who helps her by taking the wife's pearls and making the husband buy them back from her for ten thousand dollars which Pat turns over to the young mother toward the education of the child.

In her new home in America Pat starts out with a new system, that of helping unfortunates by stealing from the rich, turning the proceeds over to the unfortunates and keeping out a small part as her "commission." Her adventures put her in all sorts of perilous situations, as they are not entirely "within the law". Pat's system would have involved others who were innocent, so she always left a Purple Mask after each theft or adventure so the police would know that it was done by one person.

Pat later regains the largest part of her "commissions," she repents and casts aside her "system." "The Purple Mask" becomes a nonentity and the highly respectable Mrs. Philip Kelly takes her place. It will be seen that this outline supplies Ford and Cunard with a wonderful medium.

FROM ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 48.

GREEK DANCES IN ST. LOUIS.

THE entire student body of Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., nearly went on strike when the order was received that they were to remain cooped up in their classrooms while the Morgan dancers gave an exhibition in the sunken gardens of the university. The art class was the only audience. Miss Morgan led her girls to the green in diaphanous draperies which must have been very chilly. However, they received a warm reception from the art students to make up for the coldness of the air. Classic Greek and Roman ballets were performed by the dancers, amid "Ohs" and "Ahs" of enthusiasm from the delighted audience.

CONGRESSMAN FLIES 135 MILES

THE first Congressman-elect to make the trip to Washington in an airplane, arrived at the national capital on November 20th, after a speedy flight of 135 miles from Philadelphia. He is Congressman O. D. Bleakley, of Franklin, P. A. He was piloted by Sergeant William C. Ocker of the Army Aviation Corps. Leaving Philadelphia at 2.30 in the afternoon, he arrived at 5.15, landing on the big polo field on the bank of the Potomac. Mr. Bleakley declared that they would have made the trip in two hours, if time had not been lost while in the mist above Baltimore, where Sergeant Ocker temporarily lost his bearings. The machine was a 75 horse-power Curtis biplane owned by the Congressman, who declared that he would make the flight again in the day that he assumes his seat in Congress. Views of the event are shown in the Animated Weekly No. 48.

ixed Blood." With Claire McDowell, George Beranger and Roy Stewart. A exican Border Drama. Written by William Mack, Broadway author and actor. Forty-seventh Red Feather Production. Directed by Charles Swickard. Released Dec. 18. If it was senoritas like Claire that the Mexicans were fighting for you couldn't blame them, could you? Don't know? Take a slant at this picture and you'll jolly well know, Oh, yes! Trouble with Claire was she couldn't make up her mind. Joe wanted her and Carlos wanted her, and Big Jim, the sheriff, wanted Carlos, and after he got him and discovered Claire he wanted her, too. Carlos shoots Jim and abducts Claire across the border. Jim's wound doesn't prevent him from taking up their trail, and what happens when he finds them is one of the biggest climaxes you ever saw in a last reel. And the photography. Oh, man; wait till you see this picture. There are lighting effects and big stuff that will make you holler your head off for "Mixed Blood."

The Ivy and the Oak." From the story by Reginald Wright Kaufman. With orothy Davenport and Lee Hill. Two-reel Rex Love Rivalry Drama. Directed by Donald McDonald. Released Dec. 21. I ought to start writing about this as if it were a five-reeler. Think of it! Kaufman wrote the story and Dorothy and Lee are pretty big names in stardom, yet here you have them all in a punch picture on the regular Universal Program; where's the features producer that could hand you more? Lee loved two women. One of them proved to be the parasitic, ivy kind that cling and cling and smother the sturdy oak—man. A big drama with a most unexpected ending.

In the Dead o' Night." With Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Cliffard. Two-reel mp Poison Plot Drama. Directed by Douglas Gerrard. Released December 22. There aren't many star players like Douglas who would consent to play a villain in their own picture. Sh'd say not. But Douglas seems to get a lot of pleasure playing the doctor who changes the old man's will in his own favor; sends the rightful heir to prison on a forged check charge of which the doc is guilty; tries to steal Ruth, and incidentally to poison the old gentleman. How the boy escapes and turns the tables makes one of the most tense and gripping two reelers we have seen for many a day.

Fighting Joe." Two-reel 101 Bison Western Drama. With William V. Mong nd Maud Emory. Released December 23. When the Parson announced there would be doings at the church, Fighting Joe changed the sign to read: "Booze sold in this church." And when the festivities were about to begin, everyone was in fear of Fighting Joe, who carried notches on his gun. But Joe had met a little widow, and her kid kind o' got to the real man in him, and—that's a good place to advise you that you must book this and enjoy the big punch when you see it.

What They Say About the Universal Program

LETTERS from pleased Universal Exhibitors who appreciated the efforts of the Universal to help them satisfy audiences with single-reel, double-reel, triple-reel and Red Feather features.

LIKES THE REAL HARD HITTING OF "BROKEN COIN."

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—You will no doubt be pleased to hear of the continued success of the T. A. serials. The only slack one we have struck was "Under the Crescent," which was released over here as "The Purple Iris." We had no lack of bookings on it as we gave it some tremendous boosting, but without a doubt "The Broken Coin" made them dissatisfied with anything that humans could give them in the serial way. That was a film which it is up to you to beat with "Peg o' the Ring," and I have every confidence that you will do so. No film in the whole of my experience has ever sent up box office receipts like that one. Our returns were enormous, and since theatres have finished it their takings have shown what the film was doing for them. They all say that if it had lasted for 100 weeks it would have continued to do the best of business.

We have a trade show of the first five episodes of Terence O'Rourke in Cardiff last week and it went "Thumbs up." We put out some voting cards and all were marked in the two top and one bottom line. I am showing it in Bristol, another big industrial center in the West of England, on Tuesday next. The bookings on it are already big and we shall squeeze out all those "other-make" serials.

I am just busy raking up some good stunts for "Peg o' the Ring," which I hope to make an even bigger success than the "Broken Coin." I have an artist drawing up a sketch for an immense 80 sheet poster which will go on our stand in the center of this city. I shall send you a photo of same when it is up.

I have just had a customer in who has five large halls. He has not yet missed one of the Universal serials, and will do anything to get them for his towns before his opposition. He has just returned from a two weeks' viewing of films in London. He states that 80 per cent of the new releases lack the great punch that is needed to satisfy patrons. When one actor strikes another it can be seen that it is a stage punch. We want the real hard hitting of "The Broken Coin." Yours sincerely,

CAN'T GO WRONG ON PEG.

Universal Film & Supply Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen:—I ran the first episode of "Peg o' the Ring" last night. I figured this serial would undoubtedly prove a winner. A look at the box office receipts for last night would prove that I was not mistaken. In fact, I was very agreeably surprised at the return for the opening chapter, and every indication points to its proving one of the best paying, as well as the most interesting of the many serial subjects we have ever run.

In conclusion I wish to add that no exhibitor will make a mistake by booking "Peg o' the Ring." Peg is splendidly cast, replete with strong dramatic climaxes and in short, entirely different from the many serial subjects. Yours very truly,

INTEREST IN SHORT REELS.

Universal Film Exchange,
Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen:—We note with interest the efforts of the Universal Film Company to popularize the shorter reels in preference to the present tendency for five-reel features.

We are in sympathy with the movement and hope for marked success along these lines, but we realize that it will take some time to gain the objective point, and believe it can only be done with the support and help of your company. Yours very truly,

HERE'S A PAT ON THE BACK FROM MADISON, NEB.

Laemmle Film Service,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen:—I am today commencing on my eleventh week of service with Universal, and I am candid to admit that I have pleased more people and have enjoyed the varied programs a great deal more than any I have ever shown in my house. It appears to me that the longer I use Universal the better I am satisfied. The dramas are good, the comedies exceptionally funny and clean. The programs are diversified enough for the most fastidious and have had no complaint, rather words of commendation on the program. It makes an exhibitor feel good to have your patrons come around and pat you on the back, and I am one of these exhibitors who believes in admitting the pats and giving credit where credit is due.

For week of October 16th to 21st you will please send for Saturday similar to program sent to me for last Saturday. This Saturday program seems to be a very satisfactory one as I cater mostly to the country people who come and go and the program does not tie them up for an hour or so. Kindly arrange this program as stated above.

I would like to get in on the Carter De Haven series of "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me." Believe this would be a good one to replace Peg when it is completed for Monday. If possible, would like to have you include in the program of next week one of the Dorsey education pictures.

Anything that you do for me in making me a better and bigger program will be appreciated, and the better it gets the harder and longer I will stick to Universal.

Yours truly,
(Signed) OTTO WOLF,
Madison, Neb.

PEG WAS FINE.

Gentlemen:—"PEG O' THE RING" has surely been fine. Held the crowd, in fact, crowds have gotten larger every night I run it. Everybody is sorry it is not longer. Hope "LIBERTY" is as good.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS"

With RUPERT JULIAN—ELLA HALL—KINGSLEY BENEDICT—LITTLE ZOE RAE and a brilliant cast.

A screen version of the novel "WE ARE FRENCH" from the All-Story Weekly Magazine, by Robert H Davis and Perley Poore Sheehan.

Tearful—Joyful Thrilling—Sublime

This beautiful drama is positive proof of the fact that BLUEBIRD means an evening of delightful entertainment. It means that no pains are spared to make story, cast and production everything that the public expects them to be. It means that we do not make BLUEBIRDS for the Star's benefit, but rather the benefit of the public on the theory that "the play's the thing."

The term BLUEBIRD means more than the brand of an advertiser. It definitely exemplifies quality because no second-rate picture can possibly be a BLUEBIRD. It has got to be highest-grade, cleanest in tone, most comprehensive in plot and utterly fit for the whole family, Father, Mother, son and daughter.

BLUEBIRD in the concrete means "the best in motion picture plays." And when you have learned the fact you will begin to demand that your favorite theatre show BLUEBIRDS. Be sure to see "The Bugler of Algiers" and—

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

THERE'S great business ahead for you wise Exhibitors who have been noticing the calendar lately.

Thanksgiving is a universally observed holiday. It comes on Thursday as per usual. That means a mid-week attendance that you can make the biggest of the season if you go at it right.

We ought not to have to tell you that you should ballyhoo every one of your Thanksgiving pictures and your heart-interest dramas. But there's one thing to bear in mind. You will always notice the reliable Universal Program is right there every holiday with the good special stuff—seasonable and right up to the minute. BUT—it may have escaped your notice that the Universal never forces releases on you that you can't play a week before a holiday and a week after or any other time that best suits YOU. That's worth remembering. So go to those specials strong and ballyhoo and boost them for all you are worth. You won't have to worry that they are so strongly seasonable that the folks won't come to see them any time that you show them.

Again the Editor of "Putting It Over" asks you to send in suggestions for stunts that you have tried out and found helpful. If you do it the other fellow will and you will be helping each other get the crowds at the box office. Write whatever you have to say, telling what you did for any picture, how you did it; include a photograph if you have one, and tell us the results. Thank you. Address EDITOR, Moving Picture Weekly, 409 Pearl Street, New York, N. Y.

ON Thursday, December seventh, there is a Victor two-reeler called "The Shadow" which suggests a method of advertising it, for it is surely worth a boost. You have noticed the effect of having some one pass before the projection booth, throwing his shadow on the screen. This gives an idea of arranging something of this kind intentionally. Have a man pass, so that his shadow falls on the screen, between the showing of two pictures. He should creep across, in a stealthy fashion, as if with criminal intent. After him comes the form of a policeman, easily arranged by means of a club and helmet. Then when the two shadows have passed slowly across the screen, run a slide announcing the picture and the date of its showing at your theatre.

ON December eight there is a Nestor Comedy, with the attractive title, "Oh, You Honeymoon!" Have a local artist, or a sign painter, if you don't know any one who possesses the divine spark of genius, make you a big crescent moon out of cardboard. Hang it on your lobby, and have the name of the picture and the date painted on it, or hung from it in banner form. If you have a Japanese lantern with an electric light bulb inside it, suspended from each tip of the crescent, it will attract all the more attention and be a very handsome ornament to your lobby.

THE Red Feather for December eleventh is a wonderful picture and tells the story of the effect of our uncomprehended laws on the immigrants who flock to our country. You could not advertise this great feature in more effective manner than by dressing a pair, a young man and a young woman, in typical immigrant clothes. The woman should wear a short skirt, with an apron over it, and a three-cornered handkerchief, of bright color, tied over her hair. Put wooden shoes, or heavy man's shoes of some kind, on her feet, and a bright-colored shawl around her shoulders. The man should wear a shabby, shapeless suit, heavy shoes on his feet, and a woolen scarf around his neck. He should carry a big bundle. On his back he may wear a placard advertising the picture. They should walk through the streets, bewildered and lost-looking, staring at the building, and acting as two peasants from a far land, would behave in a strange country. The picture is called "The Morals of Hilda."

ON December twelfth there is a Victor Comedy called "Billy the Bandit" which tells the story of a young chap who decides to hold up his girl because she declares that she could love a brave bandit. He kidnaps her in a very up-to-date way in an automobile. Have a young fellow who can drive a car well, dress in Wild West togs, and put him, with a handkerchief tied over the lower part of his face, at the steering wheel of a small car. Beside him should be a pretty girl, with her hands tied with a large and conspicuous rope. She must look as terrified as possible. Then they drive through the town together, with a placard on the back of the car with the usual announcement.

THE Gold Seal for December twelfth has a remarkable plot. Many pictures are stretched out into more reels that the story can carry, but this one was cut from five reels, because the Universal thought that it would make a stronger picture released in that length. It is called "The Two Roads," and the story centers around a counterfeiter who makes gold coins which cannot be detected from the real thing. He puts the secret into the form of a chemical formula and sells it to the Government, which buys it in order to protect itself. It is then stolen and its recovery makes the story. It would arouse a lot of interest in this excellent picture, if you had your local printer strike off some slips of paper with a meaningless jumble of signs on them, for example:

Secret Formula.
x—¼—N2—s4—@

Pass these out with the tickets purchased the day before you run the picture, and on the back have the title, date, etc.

ON Sunday, December seventeenth, there is a two-reel Rex called "Love or an Empire," with Leah Baird, which was directed in the city of Berlin itself by Herbert Brenon. If there is a good deal of German sentiment in your community it would be well to advertise this fact, though the picture is absolutely non-partisan in every respect and has nothing to do with war. It is the story of the heir to a foreign throne who renounced his honors in order to marry the woman he loved, who was an opera singer. If you can hire a handsome foreign uniform, it would be a good idea to get a fine-looking chap to parade in it. He would be sure to attract attention, and he should return every now and then to the theatre and point dramatically to the announcement of the picture and its date which is displayed in the lobby.

The Bluebird's Policy and Plays

EVIDENCE OF SOUNDNESS OF THE BLUEBIRD POLICY

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen—As each forthcoming Bluebird production seems to afford excellent publicity possibilities it is but another evidence of the sound policy of "the play's the thing."

It is gratifying to the live exhibitor to note the policy of the Bluebird people, which assures plays that are worth-while productions and not mere makeshifts hung around the neck of the some so-called star.

Our success with the Bluebird productions, in which we have been favored by the advertising value of the play and not tied to simply a star, has been so remarkable that we feel a word of commendation to the concern to be very much in order. If the Bluebird people continue to serve their clientele with meritorious plays cast with actors and actresses who fit the various roles, they cannot help but be a splendid success.

Respectfully,

Gentlemen—I desire to compliment you on your last release, "Love's Lariat." It certainly should be a winner.

One gentleman stopped on his way out and stated that it was the finest picture that he had ever seen. He returned to the evening show, bringing a party of seven. That is the best proof.

Gentleman—I have just witnessed "The Eagle's Wings," and without a doubt it is one of the most interesting and instructive subjects, it has been my fortune to look at.

Without a question, it will establish a precedent in the recognition of the screen as an educational medium to discriminate information of every character.

It should be witnessed by every man, woman and child in the United States, as through preparedness only the United States will be able to keep out of war. Yours very truly,

GLUED TO THE SEAT.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York.

Gentlemen—Will you kindly accept criticism of your picture, "The Flirt," which showed here at the Princess Theatre last night?

The acting in this "movie" is nothing short of wonderful—so realistic, so lifelike. A friend and I sat glued to our seats during the entire show, magnetized.

If unfavorable criticism is due, I would pick Miss Walcamp, from the fact that her "almost" laughter got the better of her when she was telling Corliss her opinion of him. She, for some reason or other, could not repress a decided smile, in fact, almost a giggle.

From the ordinary show-goer's standpoint, however I wish to compliment you and the cast for putting up such a splendid production.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) E. C. MOTE.

APPRECIATES BLUEBIRDS.

Consolidated Film & Supply Co.,
New Orleans, La.

Gentlemen—You are well aware that I have never fallen for the feature game in the past, but have been content to let the other fellow play the features and pin my faith on the good old Universal Program.

However, I must express my appreciation for the features put out by the Bluebird. I have seen practically all the features put out by the other concerns, and have no hesitancy in saying that in my humble opinion, the Bluebirds have been backed off the board in every respect.

For strength of story, capability of acting and excellence in photography they can't be beaten.

Wishing you the continued success you deserve and with best personal regards, beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

QUEEN OF THE SCREEN.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen—We have now been running Bluebird features for over a month, and have found them to be the acme of picture plays.

We are showing two Bluebirds a week and we are always sure of a big house on these nights, and never fail to play to a capacity house whenever we feature Violet Mersereau, as she is certainly the queen of the screen.

Trusting that we will be able to secure the same high-class Bluebird features in the future as we have in the past, we beg to remain.

Yours very truly,

CAN'T RESIST BLUEBIRDS.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen—I wish to say a few words about your photoplays. I have seen a few of your photoplays, one of them only yesterday. It was called "The Girl of Lost Lake." I certainly enjoyed it very much.

I look forward to the time when I can see another Bluebird. The scenery and beautiful colors of this production was just wonderful, and I consider it a treat when one comes to town. I remain respectfully, (Signed) FREDERICK I. ABBOT.

236 Indiana Ave., Providence, R.I.

P. S.—I do not care much for the "movie" as a rule, as there are some movies that I do not enjoy, but I cannot resist the Bluebirds. Wishing you the best of luck.

EVERY ONE A STAR.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—You may not be interested in hearing from a mere citizen, but I have just witnessed a showing of "Little Eve Edgarton," and the acting made such a distinct impression on the rest of the audience, as well as myself, that I could not help but write you a word of appreciation.

I have become so thoroughly disgusted with the present-day exploitation of "stars" in plays (?) wholly unsuited, that it is indeed refreshing to see one that is a real play, with actors cast to fit the characters.

I sincerely hope that I may have the opportunity to see more of plays like this one; "Bettina Loved a Soldier," and some of the others you have produced.

Again let me say that for individual acting, I think every man and woman was a "star" in "Little Eve Edgarton." Very sincerely yours, (Signed) RAYMOND FUSON.

MOST REMARKABLE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,

Gentlemen—Allow me to express my keen appreciation and also express the feelings of practically every one who witnessed the initial showing of "The Crippled Hand" last night. In my humble opinion it is the most remarkable production of the year, bar none. The theme is beautiful. The combining or blending of the allegorical or fairy tale to the modern drama is to my mind very original. Mr. Leonard is to be more than congratulated. The scenes, interior and exterior, general costuming, the photography, the direction, and last, but by no means least, the superb work of Miss Gladys Brockwell and Miss Ella Hall was, in my opinion, the best of their careers.

The picture is a gem. It starts off by giving you a sort of creepy feeling around the heart, and then finishes, leaving you in the same mood. It is a masterpiece.

NOTHING BETTER.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Gentlemen—I want to compliment you and all concerned or connected with Bluebird features. Tell them all to keep the good work up. There is nothing better or finer made, if I am a judge, and this is the verdict of myself and patrons. Nothing but praise for Bluebird. Your scenery and photography is the finest made. No exceptions.

LIKED "THREE GODFATHERS."

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen—I wish to congratulate you on your fine picturization of "The Three Godfathers." It was excellent, and in spite of a revival, a lecture on Christian Science, Anniversary Ball and another movie show we did a nice business at ten and twenty-five cents.

Yours truly,

HAD THEM GUESSING.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen—Allow me to congratulate you on your production, "A Secret of the Swamp." It surely lived up to the advertisement, "a new kind of mystery play," and had them guessing for four and a half reels. The print is in excellent condition, and I might say we could not hope for a better program than to-day's.

Wishing the Bluebird the best of luck, I am,

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

That the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. has done more for the exhibitor by furnishing a machine for his booth at a great saving than any other similar company in existence? If you did not know this we wish to impress upon you that the above is a fact.

We fear no competition when it comes to COST OF UPKEEP and SIMPLICITY of machine, nor is competition plentiful when considering exactness of machine.

The MOTIOGRAPH is in a class by itself.

With a combination of accuracy— simplicity—economy service and satisfaction, and the comparatively small initial cost the MOTIOGRAPH is the biggest buy today.

The MOTIOGRAPH is not intended to merely produce an excellent picture for a short time, but to continue to give unexcelled projection for years. The material used will not wear out with continued use.

The price is within reach of every conservative buyer.

The performance of this machine, with exceedingly low cost of up-keep and extremely long life, are things that every exhibitor should take into consideration. Just give our dealer a chance to demonstrate its superior qualities.

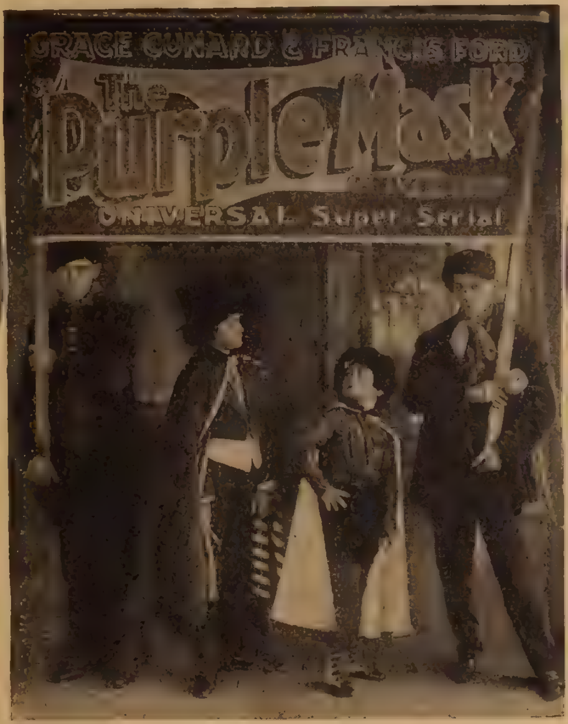
"THE PURPLE MASK" at the Ball

Lois Alexander as Grace Cunard in "The Purple Mask."



The unique advertisement of "The Purple Mask" serial which made a hit at the ball.

Madeline Barrett as Francis Ford in "The Purple Mask."

LITTLE LOIS Alexander and Madeline Barrett assist Violet Mersereau in gracing the Exhibitors' Ball. Unusual parade of Purple Mask Principals by Proxy opens the Ball.

THOUGH all but a few of the Universal players are working at Universal City, two of them made an appearance by proxy at the Exhibitors Ball held in Madison Square Garden on November 29th, which would have been a credit to the principals themselves. When Grace Cunard and Francis Ford learn how well their new characters, Patricia Montez and Phil Kelly in their latest serial, were carried out by two child actresses, they will feel highly flattered. The praises of this clever pair have been sung in almost every country where the photoplay has become a factor but they never were sung to better effect or in better harmony than at Madison Square Garden on November 29th.

The Exhibitors' Ball is an occasion at which most of the releasing companies spring surprises in the shape of parades, novel introductions, character imitations, floats, bands, dances, and other things. Most of the releasing companies have actors working in New York studios. The Universal at the present time has no company working in the East, and its big studio at Leonia is being occupied by the Bluebird Company, in which Violet Mersereau is working under the direction of Edwin Stevens. In this extremity, and desiring a showing for the new serial "The Purple Mask," which will be released throughout the country Christmas week, recourse was had to two Universal juvenile players. One of these Universal actresses was little Lois Alexander, who played with all of the Eastern Universal companies under the direction of Stuart Paton, King Baggot, Allan Holubar, Ben Wilson and Hobart Henley, and whose latest and greatest appearance is as the daughter of Prince Daakin in Universal's tremendous production of Jules Verne's famous novel, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which will open at the Broadway Theatre, New York, soon. The other was Madeline Barrett, who has played extensively in Universal companies, and is one of the cleverest juvenile performers in motion pictures.

To Lois Alexander fell the pleasurable task of representing Grace Cunard as Patricia Montez, the Lady Raffles character which is bound to be a revelation even to Miss Cunard's most enthusiastic friends. One of the disguises which Miss Cunard assumes in the role is that of an Apache, with black tights, black waist, a large black cape, with white silk lining, a velvet tam-o'-shanter, and a purple mask. It was this costume which little Lois copied so effectively, and which is shown in the illstration above. Francis Ford's part is that of a detective, and he dresses it like a fashionable French gentleman of leisure, and rather extravagant tastes. The most notable feature of his dress is an opera cape lined with black and white silk. Little Miss Barrett copied this, and also wore the regulation evening dress of male attire as though she had been brought up in it.

Ten thousand people are said to have been present in fornia, in which four were killed and three injured, are included in Number 49 of the Animated Weekly. A number of records were broken in the great event, but at the cost of four lives. The start of the racing monsters is shown, with Jackson of Los Angeles, in his Marmon, the first to leave. Jackson, going at a speed of 100 miles per hour, later struck a tree and was instantly killed. The car then hurtled into the crowd of spectators, killing L. V. Jenkins of Hollywood, motion picture cameraman, and two others, and injuring three.

Eighty-five thousand spectators viewed the longest race of the year, which was over 403 miles. A. H. Patterson of Stockton, California, went the entire distance without a stop, thus establishing a world's record. The winner was Johnnie Aitken in a Peugot, his time being 4 hours, 42 minutes and 47 seconds, an average speed of 85.59 miles per hour. Earl Cooper in a Stutz was second, and A. H. Patterson third. Pictures of the winners, of the wreck of Jackson's car, and of the famous curve are shown in the Animated.

SEVENTH REGIMENT RETURNS.

NEW YORK welcomed the gallant Seventh back to New York this week, and the Animated Weekly filmed the ovation which was extended to the boys from the border. Looking very fit and soldierly they landed from the ferry and marched up Fifth Avenue, which was lined with cheering spectators. They looked as pleased to be home again as the crowd was to see them. Governor Whitman reviewed them.

able to make the long runs common to the Rugby game. The spectators, while much puzzled by the new rules, enjoyed the exhibition, and cheered the players enthusiastically. The Animated Weekly cameraman secured fine views of the novel form of the grand old game as played in the Antipodes, which are shown in Number 49.

CALIFORNIA STAYS "WET."

ONE of the great questions of the recent elections in California was that of prohibition for the State. At Universal City feeling for and against ran high on the subject. Both sides worked hard to make converts before November 7th, and even the "wets" won, the "drys" continued their propaganda. On November 21st they held a striking parade, in which 20,000 people took part. The Animated Weekly cameraman secured good views of it, which are shown in Number 49 of the Weekly.

HOUSECLEANING A CITY.

A NEW kind of parade was held in Philadelphia recently, in which a public health propaganda was presented in a fashion which is quite new. Seven hundred children walked through the principal streets carrying placards, banners and other insignia advocating sanitary living. The line was headed by a division of the boy scouts, and then came the members of the "Junior Sanitary League." The purpose of the parade was to have the children demonstrate what they have learned of the principles of civic health.

Aline comes home from school.

THE story of "The Price of Silence," Dorothy Phillips' first Bluebird Photoplay, was written by W. Carey Wonderly and published in a popular magazine last summer. It was adapted for the screen by Ida May Park and produced by Joseph De Grasse, who has directed several successful Bluebirds, notably "The Grasp of Greed," and "Bobbie of the Ballet." It serves as a splendid medium for the introduction to Bluebird patrons, of Dorothy Phillips, one of the most talented of film actresses, who, besides this gift, is richly endowed with beauty and charm as well. In her support appear many well-known screen players headed by Lon Chaney, the wonderful character actor, who needs no introduction to Bluebird audiences, who remember his work in many releases with Louise Lovely. Frank Whitson, Jack Mulhall, and Jay Belasco, who are all quite accustomed to the leading role, appear in the support of these two players in this splendidly cast play.

Both Miss Phillips and Mr. Chaney are called upon to perform the difficult feat of growing old before the camera. Many years elapse between the first reel and the last, "Helen Urmy" played by Miss Phillips, develops from a schoolgirl into the mother of a seventeen-year-old daughter; and Mr. Chaney turns from a young physician, with a soft heart and ready sympathy for the suffering, to an elderly man, embittered by lack of success in life, and envious of the happiness he does not share. Both accomplish this effect without exterior aids in the use of make-up, and give a striking proof of their high grade of artistry in so doing. The story runs as follows:

Helen, an orphan, with an income sufficient to keep her from starving, lives with her aunt and Cousin Emily. For an offense committed her aunt sends her to the country to stay with a very strict family. She falls in love with Ralph and meets him secretly. Ralph's mother does not like Helen as she has made other arrangements for her son.

Helen and Ralph go for a long ride in a buggy. They arrive in a lonely spot by the sea in a furious storm and take shelter in a small inn occupied by the old proprietor who takes them to be man and wife. He tells them that it is impossible for them to leave that night on account of the storm.

He builds a fire in the room and shows them to bed. During the night lightning strikes the house and Ralph is killed. Dr. Stafford is sent for and finds Helen almost crazy. She confides in him, telling him that she and Ralph loved each other and were to have been married the next day, but that she was not yet his wife. He pities and advises her. She leaves without knowing his name. She writes to her aunt telling her that she is with her old nurse as the family was too strict with her. She goes to her nurse who has a married daughter. She stays there for some time and then returns to her home.

Later meets Oliver Urmy, a young millionaire, and they fall in love. She promises to marry him, when she realizes that she is about to become a mother. Oliver's father is ordered West and the former begs Helen to marry him and go with them. She refuses, promising to marry him upon his return. She goes to her old nurse and confides in the daughter, Jenny. A son is born to her and she leaves him with Jenny and sends her a weekly allowance. Oliver returns and he and Helen marry and have a little daughter.

Emily, Helen's cousin, in the meantime has married. Her husband dies and Helen and Oliver decide to try to find her a good husband. Arline, the daughter of Helen and Oliver, now seventeen, is sent home from a school on account of an epidemic. She has met and fallen in love with Billie Cupps, Jenny's son, but keeps it secret from her mother. Oliver invites Dr. Stafford to visit them, thinking that he will make a good husband for Emily. Stafford recognizes Helen, but he is so changed that she does not remember him.

Stafford falls in love with Arline and threatens Helen with exposure unless she allows him to marry her daughter. Arline confesses her love for Billie, who proves to be her mother's son who has been educated according to his mother's orders. Arline elopes and marries Billie and writes her mother to that effect. Her father, however, gets the letter as her mother had received a wire from the old nurse telling her to come to her at once.

Oliver and Dr. Stafford follow her in the machine, and, on the way, Stafford insinuates something against Helen. Oliver lets go of the wheel to attack him. There is an accident. The doctor is killed and Oliver injured.

The daughter of the old nurse tells Helen that her son had died a short time after she had left him with them, but fearing the loss of the income she had substituted her own boy and had educated him with the money. Billie is the boy, and he is such a fine fellow that Helen welcomes him as Arline's husband.

As Dr. Stafford and the old nurse are dead Helen keeps her own secret. She returns to happiness with Oliver.

GEO. COCHRANE BELIEVES HE HAS A CHARMED LIFE.

GEORGE COCHRANE, director of "The Lawyer's Secret," Rex two-reel drama, is beginning to believe that like the proverbial cat he has nine lives.

While at Huntington Lake with his company several weeks ago, little Molly Malone, his leading lady, saved him from certain death under a falling giant of the forest.

And this same leading lady killed a rattlesnake which was about to strike at him near Hollywood a few days after the return of the company from the north. For the third time within a few weeks Cochrane's life has been saved. Jack Nelson, who plays oppsite Miss Malone, prevented the director from being washed overboard from a launch at Balboa while the company was making scenes for the production, "The Beach Combers," last week.

A heavy sea caught the launch broadside and then swept over the boat, the water killing the engine. Cochrane was on the edge of the launch giving instructions to Miss Malone, who was swimming through the breakers, when the boat commenced to keel over. Nelson leaped to Cochrane's side and seized the director just as he was about to go over the side. At the same time the launch fortunately righted itself. Cochrane, Nelson and Cameraman Peck were drenched to the skin and work had to be suspended until all could secure dry clothes.

Cochrane declares that he must have been born under a lucky star, as three escapes from death, coming so close to each other, prove that some more than usually fortunately auspices must have watched over his birth.

"Aline has eloped with Billie," said Oliver.

The Universal Trophy.

Hughie Hughes, killed.

FIVE killed and twenty injured in Uniontown inaugural track race for silver cup.—Hughes, Galvin and mechanician in fatal accident.

THE first running of the Universal Film trophy race at Uniontown, Pa., on Saturday, December 2d, was attended with more thrill and excitement and loss of life than any other race which has been run on automobile courses this year. The inauguration of the new Uniontown Motor Speedway has been marked by an almost unbelievable number of accidents. Five deaths and a score of injured is the toll which the big race has exacted so far, and there are several of the injured whose lives are despaired of.

The two killed during the actual race on Saturday are Hughie Hughes, known through the world for his daring, and for his success with racing cars, and Castle Weigle, the mechanician of Frank Galvin's car, which dashed into the stand before which Hughes was standing, killing Hughes and Weigle instantly, destroying the press stand, injuring seven well known newspapermen, and fatally injuring Galvin, who died Monday in the hospital. The accident was all the more deplorable inasmuch as Hughes himself had sacrificed his chances of winning a leg on the Universal trophy cup by driving his car through the barrier fence around the inside of the track rather than crash into James R. Mayer, in a Pugh Special, which had crowded into the middle of the course, and threatened a bad collision, but Hughes, with lightning wit, diverted his own car. This was on the sixty-second lap of the one hundred lap race, and Hughes was second at the time, having all but lapped Mayer. Hughes miraculously escaped injury in his dash through the track fence, and after leaving his car with the mechanician at the opposite side, walked back across the track to the press stand, where J. E. Hoskins, the Chicago millionaire, and owner of the Hoskins Special in which Hughes was driving, was seated. As he was standing in front of the stand receiving congratulations from all for his miraculous escape, and was being filmed by J. A. Buchanan ,of the Universal Animated Weekly, and telling Hoskins why he voluntarily gave up his chances in the race, Worth Caldwell, a New York newspaperman standing at Hughes' side, saw Frank Galvin's Premier dashing wild up the track.

"Duck, Hughie," shouted Caldwell, and both he and Hoskins darted to one side. Hughes statred to jump, too, but was a second too late. The brakes on Galvin's car locked in his effort to gain control, the car spun around the track for an instant, and backed like lightning into the press stand, catching the ill-fated Hughes, who had escaped one accident five minutes before, and breaking every bone in his body before demolishing the press stand, and injuring eight newspapermen who were reporting the race.

Incidentally, Galvin's car snatched the camera, the crank of which Buchanan was turning, from his hand, and destroying all of the mechanism with the exception of the film box itself, with its precious negative. This film was later recovered, and was only released by the authorities of the track after a great deal of discussion. It is one of the most remarkable pieces of film ever taken in view of the attending circumstances.

Among the injured in the press stand were Edward F. Korbel, a well known New York automobile newspaper reporter and press agent, who had charge of the press stand; D. W. Boss, correspondent of the Pittsburgh Press; Donald Beamer, of the Uniontown Herald, and C. H. Ruse, of the Point Marion, Pa., Eagle. The list of injured might have contained the name of several officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who attended the big race as representatives of the doners of the cup, had they not changed their seats in the press stand for a box in the grand stand ten minutes before the catastrophe happened.

The fatal accident during the Universal cup race was not the only one with which the Uniontown Speedway has been associated in its very brief life. The race was to have been run on Thanksgiving Day, but the track was so slippery that the officials did not want to take the chance which a slippery track involved, and the wisdom of their course is quite evident now. Their decision followed several accidents which had occurred during the preliminary trials on the track, in which two lives had been lost on Monday, namely, C. M. Heist and Frank E. Busch, of Pittsburgh, killed less than an hour after the trials began, and three injured, among them the correspondent of the Moving Pic-

"THE TWO ROADS"

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama. Written by Ben Landeck, produced by Harold Shaw, with Edna Flugrath and Douglas Monroe in the principal roles. A strong story of the regeneration of a criminal's daughter by a prison reformer.

Linda chooses her road.

Linda as a thief.

EDNA FLUGRATH and Douglas Monroe are names which are well known to patrons of Red Feather photoplays. Miss Flugrath was the heroine of that excellent five-reeler, "The Heart of a Child," and Douglas Monroe had the male lead in the surprise crook drama, "Under Suspicion," and both won laurels for themeslves by their work. In this splendid Gold Seal three-reeler, written by Ben Landeck and produced by Harold Shaw, they appear together in a story which has an unusually good plot to recommend it. Miss Flugarth is the elder sister of Viola Dana and Leonie Flugarth, and the names of all three sisters are well known to the screen. The role of "Linda" gives Miss Flugarth an opportunity for the same sort of characterization which won her so many friends in "The Heart of a Child." She puts her whole soul into the part of the criminal's child.

Toby Murdock, played by Douglas Monroe, has used his talents for a career of crime, and has trained his daughter Linda, played by Edna Flugrath, to be his assistant. Taplow, a waster, has thrown in his lot with the Murdocks. Together they go out on a job, Linda in boy's clothes. They are unsuccessful, as they are overheard at work by the police. Linda is captured, and the officer discovers that she is a girl. She is taken to prison. Toby, at a loss without her, takes up the study of counterfeiting.

Linda meets the prison chaplain, Basil Edgerton, who exerts a tremendous influence for good over her. She chooses the straight and narrow road, and resolves to lead a new life. She returns home, on her release, but only to tell her father that she has finished with the old life. Toby has found the secret of making gold coins, but he is arrested, soon after, by detectives who have traced him through Linda. Linda fails in all her efforts to find honest work and finally goes to the chaplain to ask him to release her from her promise of going straight.

The Chaplain remembers that his aunt in the country has complained that she cannot keep a maid. He has confidence in Linda and determines to offer her the situation. His uncle is Sir Cuthbert MacLain, who holds office under the government. He receives a letter from the prison where Murdock is awaiting trial, which informs him that the man has the secret of making gold coins which cannot be detected. He sends for the man, and offers, on behalf of the government to buy the secret of the alloy. He converts the formula into cipher and puts it into his safe. Murdock tells Taplow of the transaction and Taplow determines to steal the formula.

The Chaplain comes to spend his vacation with the MacLains. Taplow threatens Linda that he will expose her if she does not bring him the formula. At the same time, the tinker friend of the butler persuades the servant to try to get him a glimpse of the formula. Through a false key, the butler removes it from the safe. Linda steals out to meet Taplow and refuse his request. Taplow enters the house and the butler shoots him fatally. Basil sees Linda stealing out of the house and thinks she is going back to her old life. The butler and the tinker accuse Linda of the crime, and arrange that she shall be thought guilty. They lock her up, but she escapes and tells the Chaplain her story. He believes her, and when she is accused of the murder, he lies to save her and says that she has spent the night in his room. The tinker has forced the butler to write a confession of the crime. This is found and Linda says, "Then there is no longer any need of your sacrificing yourself to marry me." But the Chaplain assures her that he wishes to carry out his bargain.

WALTER BELASCO PREFERS FILMS.

ONE of the well-known character actors at Universal is Walter Belasco, who for years played on the legitimate stage before he appeared before the camera.

A few days ago he received a telegram from his brother David, noted New York producer, asking him if he would come East and take a part in one of the New York productions. However, Walter decided he preferred films and he therefore declined the chance to go back on the speaking stage.

"The Lawyer's Secret"

Bob receives the welcome meant for Walter.

Bob confesses to Beulah.

THE complaint of the weakness of the plot cannot be made against this excellent Rex drama, which was written by Harvey Gates of the Universal staff and produced by George Cochrane, with Molly Malone and Jack Nelson in the leading roles. The story is logical, with sustained and cumulative interest, and plenty of suspense. For purposes of their own, a firm of unscrupulous lawyers induces a young fellow, whom fate has treated shabbily, to assume the name of his dead friend. Their scheme is to gain control of a large property by means of the substitution, and then to divide with the impersonator. Of course, this nefarious plan is brought to naught, and it is the very charming heroine of the play, delightfully portrayed by pretty Molly Malone, whose influence acts against the lawyers and saves the young fellow from the crime.

The story runs as follows:

Walter seems to be always in mischief and Andrew Slocum, his father, is very stern with him. Even after Walter has grown to be almost a young man he still punishes him as if he were a child. Walter resents this and, taking a few of his trinkets and his mother's picture, runs away.

After several years, Andrew Slocum dies, leaving a will which decrees that the entire fortune is left to Walter providing he is found within a year of the death of his father, and then for a period of six months proves himself worthy. Otherwise the fortune is to be given to his ward, Beulah Dawson.

The two attorneys handling the case scheme to get the property themselves. Burke makes a trip to the city, discovers Bob Murdock, who had been Walter's chum in the West, and upon Walter's death, had received the mother's picture and trinkets. Bob is in poor circumstances and accepts the offer of Burke to impersonate Walter and then turn the property over to them. Of course they do not know that Bob knew Walter.

Burke takes Bob home with him, where he is received as Walter Slocum. Beulah falls in love with him and confides to him that even if he had not shown up in the stipulated time, she had intended saving the inheritance for him. Bob determines that she shall not be cheated out of the estate.

The six months' period is up, and the whole estate is turned over to Bob. Burke and Fenton want him to sign it over to them as originally agreed, but Bob, being sure that he has the estate in his own name, turns them down. The three men fight, but Bob is victorious.

He returns home and tells Beulah the true story of Walter's death, and his assumption of his name. The girl, realizing she loves him, asks him to remain.

A Doggy Universal Party

Grace Cunard the hostess and her dogs.

BELOW is the unusual invitation which reached the home of every dog-owner in the Universal and Bluebird studios, the other day. The announcement was printed on a piece of cardboard, cut out in the shape of a big beef bone and colored realistically. It was delivered from an automobile in which sat Miss Cunard herself surrounded by a selection of her fifteen canine pets. As each bungalow was visited, one of the dogs, a big collie, jumped out of the car; then his mistress carefully put an envelope in his mouth, and sent him up to the door with it.

They visited the brand new bungalow of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Reid. In public life, Mrs. Reid is Dorothy Davenport, you know, the star of innumerable Red Feathers, and an ardent lover of pets. Dorothy should name her place "Millenium," for although the lion and the lamb have not been asked to be housemates, she has managed to bring her Spitz dogs and her Persian cats into such marvelous agreement, that her household menagerie is the wonder of Hollywood. Miss Cunard and Miss Davenport are friends of many years' standing, but their dogs don't know each other quite so well. Miss Cunard would not trust the collie to deliver the message, lest he should not be sufficiently imbued with Christmas spirit to overcome his hereditary aversion to felines which is beyond his control. Then on went the procession to the Wilson home, where the two pretty Alabama sisters, Roberta and Lois, are living with their parents, and their little King Charles spaniels which Lois recently carried with her in a picture. After this they called on Ella Hall, and the new setter puppy which had just made his screen debut with immense success in the Bluebird, "Mary, Keep Your Feet Still." On the way they met Louise Lovely in her limousine, with the small impertinent head of her Yorkshire terrier peeping out of the window. The invitation

The happy Davenport menagerie.

Cunard Kennels

"THE CUNARD DOGS request the pleasure of shaking your paw on Saturday, December twenty-third, at the kennels of their mistress, Miss Grace Cunard.

"BONES BIG EATS

"Tail chasing and barking contests.

"From four until seven."

This is the invitation to the Cunard dogs' Christmas party.

"They are King Charles spaniels and proud of their descent," says Lois Wilson.

was passed over, and accepted by the Yorkshire on the spot.

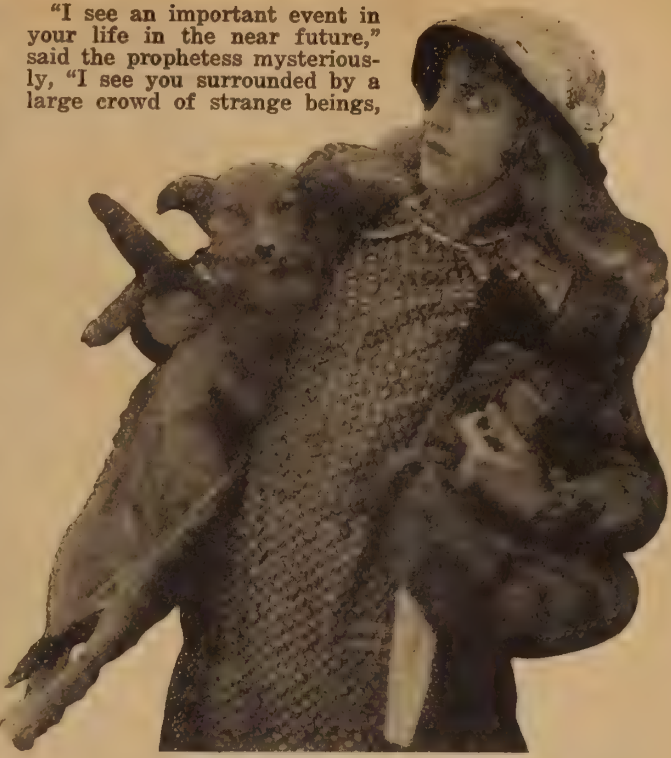
There is to be no race prejudice at the party, so the two Pekinese of Edith Roberts, newly appointed leading lady of the Nestor Company with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, were included, despite their Chinese ancestry. Myrtle Gonzalez' pet owl, which was given to her as a souvenir of the Bluebird picture, "The Girl of Lost Lake," might have been included, if he were not congenitally incapable of keeping awake in the day time; and Little Zoe Rae's Persian cat, which is almost as big as herself, might also have received an invitation if Miss Cunard had been sure of its temper.

Then the car went on to Universal City, and stopped at the set where Claire McDowell was working as the Mexican hussy in the Red Feather photoplay, "Mixed Blood." Miss McDowell was seated at the side of the set, waiting for her "cue," and she had the cards spread out on the table before her and was telling her own fortune. She does this in dumb show in the picture. If you want to see what she looked like doing it, turn to page 12. There is no fake about her fortune telling, for Miss McDowell is an accomplished "seeress." The nurse that she had as a child had gypsy blood in her veins, and had been taught the secret of divination of the future by cards according to the gypsy tradition. She, in turn, taught Miss McDowell, who is always being pestered by her friends to tell their fortunes.

Miss Cunard stopped to see how the cards lay, and asked the seeress to read her future. Miss McDowell shuffled and cut the cards in a mysterious manner and complied.

They met Louise Lovely and her Yorkshire taking the air.

"I see an important event in your life in the near future," said the prophetess mysteriously, "I see you surrounded by a large crowd of strange beings, whose identity I cannot quite discover. They seem hardly human. Beware, however, of a female with green eyes, who will exert all her influence for trouble against you. I see some impending catastrophe connected with her. I should advise you to be on your guard against all green-eyed people for the next few weeks. The cards of accident, misfortune, and even death itself are connected with them."



"He may not have a pedigree, but he is coming to the party just the same," says Ella Hall.

Miss Cunard, who is not above a slight susceptibility to superstition herself, felt a cold shiver run down her spine. She went over in her mind all her feminine acquaintances, trying to remember the color of their eyes. If you have ever done that, you will realize how difficult, almost impossible, it is to say, off hand, what shade of optics all your friends possess, Miss Cunard became quite worried.

"There's Mary——," she said to herself. "What color are her eyes? It seems to me there is a sort of a green glint in them. Is she one of the ones that I am warned to avoid? And then that Miss D——. I never did trust that woman. I'll bet she has green eyes. I wish I could remember."

All the way home she was

"THE MORALS OF HILDA"

Hilda and August land in the new world.

Red Feather Photoplay. Story by H. C. Warnack, and scenario by A. W. Coleway. Produced by Lloyd B. Carleton, with Gretchen Lederer in the leading role. A study of the effect on the immigrant to our shores of the uncomprehended laws of our country.

Steven	Emory Johnson

THIS Red Feather photoplay, written originally by H. C. Warnack, put into scenario form by A. W. Coleway and produced by Lloyd B. Carleton, is a study of the effect of our uncomprehended laws on the immigrants who seek prosperity in the New World. This strong and touching story serves as a starring medium for Gretchen Lederer, a classic beauty of the screen, who will be well remembered for her work in many previous Red Feather plays. She will remember the production of this picture for a long time, not only because it is the best part she has ever had, but because of the real hardships which she had to undergo to make it.

Miss Lederer is a European herself, having been born in the shadow of Cologne Cathedral, and so she well knows the conditions which the first part of the picture portrays. She knew that such a peasant woman as she there interprets, would never wear shoes with her working clothes, and so, as she is a stickler for detail in correct costuming, she braved the chilly air of November, barefoot. She did not shrink from walking without shoes through the sticky, cold mud of a ploughed field.

Esther persuades Hilda to give up Steven.

But later in the picture, her endurance was put to a further test. "Hilda" decides to commit suicide by drowning, and Miss Lederer had to wade out to her armpits in the icy November sea. Then she had to return to the shore, play an emotional scene with the wind simply blowing through her wet clothes, and wade out into the ocean again, this time to give a realistic imitation of the struggles of the drowning.

"Being a star is fun only sometimes," says Miss Lederer.

The story is as follows:

August and Hilda, two products of the old country, loved each other. To them it was sufficient that they live in each other's company until they had enough money for the wedding. Hearing of the wonderful opportunities in the New World, they decide to visit this land of bounty. But, upon reaching its shore, they find that true hospitality is sadly lacking.

August cannot find any work, but at last Hilda secures a position in a wealthy home.

Harris Grail and his wife Esther are happy in their love, but the one desire of their hearts—a child—is denied them. Hilda's employer discovers that to Hilda is to be given this wonderful gift. She questions the girl and learns that Hilda is not married. She turns her from the house, and innocent, ignorant Hilda cannot see wherein she and August have done wrong. Frightened at what might happen to her through these laws of the new country, Hilda flees from August, and he, not understanding, but accepting her decision, sets sail and is lost at sea.

Steven finds happiness.

Hilda's baby is born in a big hospital, where again she comes in contact with the strange law. The nurses try to force her to tell the name of the father, but Hilda will not disclose it. In the night she steals away with her precious baby, the sign of her love. August is not at the cottage and Hilda decides that she will end it all in the great sea.

It happens that Harris is killed and Esther, longing to join her beloved one, goes to the sea with that in mind. The gods decide that she shall choose the spot where Hilda has placed her baby in a basket, as a gift to the seas. Esther discovers the baby and takes it to her home. She engages Hilda as the nurse, not knowing the latter is the mother of the child, but Hilda soon leaves her.

A few years later the heart hunger for her child becomes so strong that she returns and discloses the fact of her motherhood to Esther, who, by this time, has learned to love the little Steven. By depicting the advantages the child will have by remaining with her, Esther persuades the mother to leave Steven with her.

Years elapse. Steven, now a young man, is running for governor. He is in love with a beautiful girl named Marion. As if by instinct, Steven encourages the idea of legitimatising all children born without benefit of clergy, using this as one of the planks in his platform. Hilda happens to read this in a newspaper. The old heart-hunger for a glimpse of her boy returns. Esther recognizes her and is overcome. Steven searches the garden and finds Hilda. He then learns from Esther the truth about his parentage. He now feels that he cannot ask Marion's hand in marriage. Hilda disappears, and, search as he will, Steven cannot locate her.

The election comes and Steven is victorious. At the inauguration, the proud Hilda tries once again to catch a glimpse of her son, but she is pushed roughly aside. A crank in the crowd is about to shoot Steven, but the mother, noticing and realizing the intention, intervenes, and receives the shot herself. When Steven learns who she is, and that she has sacrificed her life that he may live, he is strangely touched. She has the happiness of dying in his arms. Marion learns all and tells Steven that she loves him enough to share her life with his.

SIXTY REELS BY IDA MAY PARK IN A YEAR.

IDA MAY PARK, wife of Joseph De Grasse of the directing forces of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has written and assisted in the production of twelve features in the past year, making a record of a five-reeler a month. This latest production of Mr. and Mrs. De Grasse is the Bluebird photoplay "The Price of Silence," with Dorothy Phillips.

Hilda knows despair.

In spite of this strenuous work this prolific writer manages to find leisure time in which to enjoy her beautiful garden, most of which was planted by herself, and plan with her husband the beautifying of the twenty-five acres recently bought by them in picturesque Verdugo Canyon, not far from Universay City. An artistic two-story house stands on this property, and this abode has been greatly admired by the many friends of the De Grasses who have visited them.

Christmas Spirit at Universal City

No prop turkey about this. Universalites and Bluebirds will attest its reality.

By MARJORIE HOWARD

ONE of the Broadway successes at present running on the Great White Way, makes capital out of the fact that a real dinner is cooked, served and eaten on the stage every night, instead of the usual Barmedice feast which the actors have to pretend to enjoy. Here is another point in which the screen players "put it all over" the "legitimate" artists. The food which they consume before the camera is always real. But it is not often of the quality which composed the feast which is pictured at the top of this page. The price of a turkey, this year, is almost equal to the price of a Flivver, but there was no lack of the noble bird when this picture was made. The purchasing department took the perfectly ridiculous idea into their heads that the directors of pictures adapted for Christmas showing were deliberately writing an extra part for "Mr. Roast Turkey" into their scripts. The last part of November at Universal City was just one long dream of turkey dinners.

Harry Carter as Marley's ghost in "The Right to be Happy."

William Mong began it. He was producing the picture "Fighting Joe," in which a scrappy little prospector decides to break up the Christmas preparations in a mining town, and changes his mind when he meets a little boy and his mother whom he promptly annexes as a "fambly." Joe gives a supper to the pair, and there just had to be turkey at that supper. As it was the first bird of the season, a choice selection of Universal and Bluebird players was invited to eat it, when the scene (which Mong rushed as fast as possible so that the noble bird would not grow cold) was over. That is Bluebird Director Worthington who is doing the Oliver Twist act at the right of the picture.

Then came, in swift succession, "The Prodigal Daughter," a picture with a Christmas message, in which

Fred Church and Eileen Sedgwick in "It's Great to be Married."

Allan Holubar and Agnes Vernon dispensed turkey to their company. There had to be turkey in this to take the place of the fatted calf. Who ever heard of eating veal for Christmas, anyway? After the picture was finished it was almost as easy a matter to dispose of this bird as it had been of the last one. Then came Douglass Gerrard with his five-reel production "Polly Put the Kettle On." Turkey was going up in price daily, and the purchasing department was beginning to look a little dubious, but Mr. Gerrard protested that the success of the picture depended on there being a turkey for the piece de resistance.. Not so many guests were found to accept an invitation to dispose of the delicacy this time. Turkey at Universal City was getting to be an old story.

Then the Bluebirds began. Chief among them—from the standpoint of the consumption of poultry at least—was Rupert Julian with his production of Dickens' Christmas Carol, which is called "The Right to be Happy." Julian not only demanded the purchase of the largest turkey in the neighborhood, a noble biped weighing fully twenty pounds, but a roast goose as well. Furthermore, they had to be of the first quality, both of them, for they are subjected to numerous "close-ups," and the audience can fairly smell them. And the goose had to be eaten in record time, because Julian's cameraman was waiting to photograph the bones! Well, goose was a bit of a change, and it was disposed of pretty easily, but the twenty-pound turkey was another matter. The screen players were actually growing blase about turkey.

George Hernandez and Val Paul in "God's Crucible."

"Come over to ——'s set," one would hear, "they're going to have turkey!"

"Turkey again," would come the reply in a bored tone. "Why don't they get a new idea? I'm full of turkey already." Think of that, at forty cents a pound! Oh! well, screen players are a pampered lot, and we always knew it. Imagine making a hardship out of eating turkey!

The cuts on these two pages, and on the double page in the center of the magazine, give some idea of the fare that the Bluebird and Universal are setting before their patrons for Christmas time. But that is not all. Just for good measure, and to show that the Christmas spirit means more than mere words to somebody, the first episode of the new Universal serial "The Purple Mask," with those two pre-eminent screen favorites, Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, will be added to the program in the week of December twenty-fifth. Here is a fine Christmas gift to the exhibitors, and to the fans who know from long experience what to expect from the Ford-Cunard combination. And let us gently whisper in your ear that in "The Purple Mask" they are better than ever!

They have two of the reallest sort of people to play, in the first place. Ford is Detective Kelly, a laconic, reserved agent of the secret service, and Grace is a society girl who turns thief for a prank, and then is forced into stealing as a business. People are going to talk about Detective Kelly as they did about Sherlock Holmes when these stories first appeared, and Patricia Montez—which is Miss Cunard's name in the serial—is going to make the male society thief, who began with A. J. Raffles, and has had countless impersonators since, look to his laurels. Their adventures begin in Paris—before the war of course—and show intimate pictures of the famous Apache dens of that city, contrasted with magnificent interiors of the the home of the wealthy Eleanor Van Nuys, who is the aunt of Patricia. She loses her money after a while, and that determines her niece to go into the Raffles business, to re-make their fortune. They have adventure galore, of the real Ford and Cunard type, with hairbreadth escapes and thrills in every episode, and a love story running through the whole and binding it together with a rose-colored thread. A pretty nice sort of a Christmas present for anybody is "The Purple Mask."

Bluebird is making two contributions which are filled with the spirit of charity, and that ideal of universal brotherhood which forms the inner meaning of the anniversary which we celebrate on December twenty-fifth. They are the screen versions of Dickens' Christmas Carol, called "The Right to be Happy," produced by Rupert Julian; and "God's Crucible," a story of that wonder of the Western world, the Grand Canyon of Arizona, which was written and directed by Lynn Reynolds. There is a Christmas incident in the last reel, which makes this release appropriate for its date, January eighth. But there has been no attempt to limit either of these photoplays to the festival itself. They are pictures which can be shown at any time of the year. Who ever thought for example, of leaving Dickens' Christmas Carol on the book shelf until December twenty-fifth, reading it only on that day and when the festival was passed putting it back again for another year? This is true, in great measure, of all the pictures illustrated on these pages, which are released in the weeks of December twenty-fifth and January first. They all reflect the Christmas spirit, but in such a way that they might serve equally well for summer programs. Houses which make a specialty of strictly Christmas films, may take advantage, if they please, of the timely pictures of last year, "In Search of a Wife," "Christmas Memories," an Ella Hall picture, or "The Bachelor's Christmas."

Each of the pictures will be discussed in detail in the number of the Weekly dealing with the date of their release. This is just a preliminary view a sort of "varnishing day" as the private view of an exhibition of paintings is called, to which the artists, their friends and important people generally are invited before the ordinary public comes in. These pictures from the coming photoplays are offered in advance for the inspection of the important readers of the Weekly, who are entitled to an advance knowledge which the public does not share. This number is a sort of illustrated catalogue of the coming event—the Christmas program. A catalogue does not enter into detailed description; it gives just a taste of the good things to come. That is what these pages are trying to do. And they are also used to carry to every reader of the Weekly our advance message of Christmas good will and Christmas good cheer. The Christmas spirit is such a nice, warm, comfortable sort of a feeling, why should we want to confine it to one day in the year?

If we can spread it through the weeks which come before and after December 25, we can make Christmas itself mean much more to us than ever.

Edwin Stevens, New Bluebird Director

IT is a proof of the dignified position that motion pictures are assuming that men of such distinction in the dramatic profession as Edwin Stevens are associating themselves with the "infant industry." Mr. Stevens has long held a position of honor on the American stage, where his characterization of His Satanic Majesty in the Franz Molnar play, "The Devil," has never been forgotten. But he has long felt an intense interest in motion pictures.

It was the Universal Film Company which sponsored his debut on the screen, both as an actor and as a director. His first appearance in the films was in "The Man Inside," a five-reel picture which was released about a year ago, and in which he played a difficult dual role. His success was immediate, and his interest in pictures became greater. He desired above all things to try direction. His wide experience on the legitimate stage, where he has played every sort of role from Shakespeare to the Sheriff of Nottingham in the evergreen Robin Hood, fitted him to undertake the arduous task of picture director, for he has had a variety of training which few stage people have enjoyed. His first picture was a successful two-reeler called "The Capital Prize," in which Tina Marshall had the leading role. Miss Marshall has been associated with Mr. Stevens in vaudeville for years, for he was one of the first of the "legitimate" actors to go into the "two-a-day."

After this picture Mr. Stevens was more firmly convinced than ever that in the direction of pictures he had found a new vocation. He left his new hobby for a time, however, in order to appear in the leading role of a serial for another company. As soon as the last episode was filmed he returned to the studios, this time as the director of Violet Mersereau for Bluebird Photoplays.

At the present time this combination of the little star and the distinguished actor and their associate players is the only picture company which is producing Bluebird photoplays in the East. They have the Leonia studio to themselves, and that they have improved their opportunities will be seen when their first picture, "The Honor of Mary Blake" is released on Christmas Day.

This play was written by John Brownell, who also has the part of the clergyman in the story, and it gives Miss Mersereau the congenial part of an actress in a road company, who is detained by illness in a country town, to the scandalization of the inhabitants. She has never appeared to greater advantage than under the direction of Mr. Stevens, for they seem to understand each other perfectly. The play is not, strictly speaking, a Christmas story. Its scenes are laid in the summer and

"LIBERTY" No. 18

Bob has remained in Mexico.

Leon receives Liberty and Pedro.

THE eighteenth episode begins with the torture of Pedro still in progress. Lopez is trying to make him tell the whereabouts of Liberty, which he does not know. As he refuses for the hundredth time, her head appears above the bushes. She signs to him to remain silent, and she fires a shot at the rope, with the rifle which she has stolen from the guard, which severs it. She then holds up Lopez and his men until she and Pedro have mounted their horses. The Mexicans pursue them, and they take to a train, jumping from their horses and catching the cars as they rush by. They clamber onto the roof, pursued by the Mexicans. This is the ammunition train and the Federals have received orders to blow it up.

A band of Federals rides out ahead of the train and they lay a trail of powder from the rail to a charge of dynamite. Just before the train reaches the spot, Pedro and Liberty decide to leave it in secret and make their way to the Leon Hacienda, in order to fool the Mexicans. Lopez and his men overtake the train just as the fugitives leave it on the other side. They hold up the train men and go through the cars searching for Liberty and Pedro. They just avoid being blown to pieces by the explosion which wrecks the baggage car and kills many of the train's occupants.

THE Eighteenth Episode of the great serial, "Liberty," directed by Henry McRae, brings the hero, Jack Holt, and the heroine, Marie Walcamp, together again. But then leaves them in a worse predicament

Word has been received by the insurrectos that the Federals will try to blow up the train and they make every effort to warn the engineer, but they arrive too late. They rescue Lopez and his men, unhurt and remount them. They all set off together for the Leon Hacienda.

Bob, meantime, has remained at the Hacienda alone, sending his men across the border to report. There are not many of them left. He cannot make up his mind to leave Mexican soil without Liberty. Pedro and Liberty arrive at the Hacienda, in advance of Lopez and his men. Leon agrees to give them shelter. Bob and Liberty are overjoyed to meet again. As they are greeting each other a peon brings the news that Lopez and his men are arriving. Bob and the others go into the house and barricade one of the rooms, while Leon goes to meet the Mexicans.

Leon tells Lopez that Liberty and Pedro passed by and went on. Lopez believes him, but he says, "Did you so easily forgive her for killing Manuel, your son?" Leon is tremendously affected by the news and goes to demand the truth of Liberty. She explains how Theresa killed them both, and the old man is overcome with sorrow.

Lopez discovers the deception which Leon has practiced on him and returns to the Hacienda. His men surround the place and keep up a steady fire at the windows. Bob declares that he must go for ammunition. He steals out of the door, but is seen by Lopez, who pursues him. The two men have a duel with revolvers. Bob shoots the gun out of Lopez' hand, but tells him to pick it up again. Lopez does so, fires quickly and wounds Bob in the wrist.

"SCRATCHED"

IMP Two-Reel Melodrama. Written by Douglas Bronston and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, with Irene Hunt, Earl Page and Jean Hersholt in the principal roles. The story of a tyro of the race-track, and how he double-crosses his friend.

Claire is happy. Jimmie gives Paul a tip.

DIRECTOR KELSEY is very successful with stories in which there is a great deal of action, of which the present one, called "Scratched," and written by Douglas Bronston, is an example. Three actors whose work is familiar to the patrons of the Universal program appear in the three principal roles. Irene Hunt has the part of the sister who tries in vain to reform her wild brother. Earl Page is the brother, who, though innocent, is sent to prison to serve a sentence for grand larceny, and Jean Hersholt, the Danish actor, is the treacherous friend whose silence causes the brother to pay the penalty of his crime. Some fine shots of the races make the first part of the picture interesting, and the rapid development of the plot, with its touching ending, makes this an unusually strong offering. Here is the story in brief:

Jimmy Austin, a race tipster, is devoted to his sister, but despite her efforts to reform him, he persists in gaining a livelihood by questionable methods. One day he meets Paul Brant, a bank messenger, to whom he gives some tips on the races. Paul makes his first bet and lands a winner. Thus encouraged he feels that Jimmy is in a position to put him in the way of making a fortune.

Later, Jimmy gives him another tip on a certain horse and Paul decides to use some of the money which he is carrying from the bank. Not understanding the language of the turf, he thinks that the horse has lost when it is reported as "scratched." He obtains a gun and is on the point of killing himself when Jimmy enters the room with the money. The bullet is deflected, but causes a slight wound.

With the smoking gun in his hand, Jimmy rushes out to get aid and bumps into a policeman, who promptly takes him into custody. Jimmie is searched, the money found, and he is dragged off to jail. The next day Paul tells the officers that he does not remember what happened and so Jimmy is sent up for a number of years.

During the years that follow, Paul wishing to make some restitution for his craven act, befriends Claire. Later they marry and are very happy. Jimmy, who does not know of the marriage, is forgotten.

Released from prison, Jimmy plans revenge. He seeks out Paul, but realizing that his sister is happy and that he, himself, is in a way responsible for all that has happened, he leaves without revealing himself.

He goes his way silently, as he has come, never letting his sister know that good conduct has shortened his prison term and restored him to her world.

KATE CAREW AND OTHERS GUESTS OF EDITOR LEWIS.

KATE CAREW, the famous caricaturist and writer, who is the wife of H. Kellett Chambers, the playwright, was one of the notables who called at Universal City last week. Eugene B. Lewis and Miss Carew were newspapering in San Francisco about a dozen years ago and they had not met since Miss Carew left the metropolis of the West and sought pastures new for her talents in New York, subsequently going to London where her work attracted widespread attention. Edward F. O'Day, well-known newspaper man and editor of "Town Talk" and "The Lantern," popular weekly publications of San Francisco, dropped in at the same time with Mrs. O'Day.

"I'm on my wedding trip, Gene," said the San Franciscan, "and here's the bride." Blushingly Mrs. O'Day came forward and shook hands.

"Well, we have brides every day at Universal City," said Lewis, smilingly adding: "Of course, they are make-believe brides, and we are always glad to welcome the real better half of the Newlyweds whenever she honors us with a visit to our little city."

As they were leaving to see the sights of Universal City, Grant Carpenter, former newspaper man and now a successful playwright and short story writer, came along. He was added to the party, and all spent several pleasant hours together on the stages of the big plant.

Miss Carew made a number of sketches of the leading actors and actresses, which she says she intends to use in several of the English publications, together with articles dealing with the multifarious activities of Universal City.

"The Taint of Fear"

TWO-REEL Bison Modern Military Story of an inherited weakness and its overcoming. Written and produced by Allan Holubar, who also plays the lead, supported by Jos. Girard and Lydia Y. Titus.

AN exceedingly clever young man is Allan Holubar. The fairy godmothers at his christening must have been in an unusally generous mood, and the customary bad fairy was evidently mixed in her dates and failed to appear at all. They bestowed three big gifts upon their favorite, the gift of writing, of acting and of directing. And then fortunately he found his way into motion pictures, which gave him an opportunity for the exercise of all three.

A discriminating public is learning to look for the name "Holubar" on a picture, and to realize what it means. Some very excellent program releases have been placed to his credit, and in "The Taint of Fear" he has added new laurels to his sheaf. It is the story of a boy who seems to be obsessed by the curse of incurable physical cowardice. Unjudicious treatment from his father increases his unfortunate tendency. Nevertheless, he joins the National Guard to please his parents. Then comes war, for the picture has the added merit of timeliness, and the boy's regiment is called to the Mexican border. He gives way to his weakness at the first test, but extremity brings him to his true self and he redeems his failure. The story is briefly as follows:

Bob's father had been too strict with him as a boy and had broken the boy's spirit. He grew up an apparently incurable coward. However, to please his father, he consents to join the National Guard.

Then comes the fateful morning of July 13th, when the troops are ordered to Mexico. Bob is ordered to join his regiment at once. One of his boyhood's companions, and ancient enemy, is a sergeant in his company. The men embark and the parents of Bob are left alone.

Tom continues the tactics which he used to employ against Bob when they were both children. He laughs at him before the men and asks him where his knitting is. Bob's best friend in the regiment is his horse. Orders come for the Seventh to locate Lopez and his guerilla band, who are known to be in their neighborhood. Tom, the sergeant, is ordered to take a squad and reconnoitre. While they are encamped that night, they are fired upon from a distance. The company is turned out, and they take up their position on a hill.

Bob is seized with fear. He cowers behind his horse. Finally he mounts and rides off desperately, away from the fighting. The Mexicans and the Americans keep up a running fight. At last the Americans enter a town. The inhabitants flee before them, and hide in their huts. The Americans follow them and are soon surrounded by a superior force of guerillas.

Bob at last dismounts and hides in some bushes. Some Mexicans steal up on him as he stands with his face buried in the saddle, and strike him down from behind. When he recovers he finds that his manhood has returned to him. He rides for help at top speed. Then he leads the American soldiers to the town where their comrades are besieged. Bob is mortally wounded and falls from his horse. It is Tom who supports him. He dies. Then we see a vision of his father and mother, watching for their boy. His ghostly shade appears before them, and they hide their grief in each other's arms.

Bob feels the thrill of fear.

SHE IS "MOTHER" WRIGHT TO EVERYBODY AT U CITY.

ONE of the best-loved actresses at Universal City is Nanine Wright, who is affectionately called "Mother" by practically every one at the motion picture plant.

"Mother" Wright has a kind word for everybody, and her dressing-room at all times is the mecca for as many of the young girls as are able to crowd into it. When any one is taken ill on the lot "Mother" Wright is among the first to render aid.

One morning recently as Mrs. Wright entered the studios a young Japanese who was working at the gate gave her the usual morning salutation, to which Mrs. Wright replied in her cheery manner. "Sing," a Chinese peanut vender, who has become a fixture at the plant, was another who said good-morning to "Mother" Wright and the response was just as cheerful.

Accompanying Mrs. Wright was a young woman who was "born and bred in old Kentucky," and who looked at Mrs. Wright in surprise as she exchanged the greetings of the morning. As far as this young woman was concerned the limit was reached when Sam, the bootblack, with an auriferous grin, said, "Good-mornin', Mother Wright. Nice mornin'."

"My gracious! What do you think of that? I consider that an insult," said the young Southern woman, indignation ringing in her voice.

"Insult? No," softly replied Mrs. Wright, "I look upon it as a compliment. Races make no difference to me—they are all God's creatures, you know."

Our Japanese Correspondent

Herewith is the regular report from our own correspondent in Tokyo.

THE UNIVERSAL'S FAMOUS FILMS IN JAPAN.

Third Announcement.

THE Universal's famous films in Japan were "The Broken Coin," "The Black Box," "The Master Key," and "Trey O' Hearts," but "Lucille Love," "Peg O' the Ring" which are throwing upon a screen now are also highly applauded by the world.

In the comedies the L-KO Company's and the Nestor's were well known between us, but we audiences are sorry now their films do not appear recently.

The Universal's Activity in Japan.

The Universal's activity in Japan is indeed most admirable since a certain man of the company came (Mr. Tom D. Cochrane), and it is not more than he deserves that he is receiving much thankfulness for his own labor by the world. It was one of his successes the concert of the two companies, the Universal Company and the Harima Company, has been established recently and is winning in a competition throwing many interesting pictures upon the Kinema Club's screen.

The Universal's Actresses and Actors Who Meet With Warm Welcomes of Japanese.

They who meet with warm welcomes of Japanese are the theatrical company of Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, and they are well known by the following manners:

Francis Ford as Count Frederick
Grace Cunard as Kitty Gray
Eddie Polo as Roleaux
Ernie Shields as Count Sachio
Norman MacDonald as Apache
Mina Cunard as the King's Sweetheart.

Especially Frederick, Kitty, Roleaux, and Sachio are most famous, then one call them by these nicknames even in other films as a rule.

Of "The Broken Coin."

This films were always thrown upon screens at the first-class places and full-place notices were found without fail.

To one great satisfaction "The Broken Coin" meetings were held in three times and no one in Tokyo but applaused this plan, then in half an hour those notices were held out surely.

Thus, as this picture impressed us so deeply, little books and picture post cards of "The Broken Coin" were published above ten kinds, and we were astonished finding that the imitations of this film were in fashion between boys and girls at one time.

TWO LETTERS.

Tokio, Japan, Oct 17, 1916.
Miss Myrtle Gonzales,
care Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
1600 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Madam:—

May I ask you to allow me to write to you without introduction of nobody. I am 10 years old and am an admirer of Bluebird Photoplay, in which you are featured very soon. Nowadays Bluebird's film are widely shown here in Japan, and all of those are welcome to enthusiastic applause whenever the film with that mark appears in picture theatres in Tokio. Last week I went to a certain theatre to see the film entitled "The Secret of Swamp," and yesterday I saw splendid film of "The Girl of Lost Lake." You appeared on the former as "Emily" and as "Judith" on the latter, and both have gained unpreceded welcome and a considerable praise of amateur picture-seers. Thousands of films are imported to this country from America, Italy, England and France, but I have never see such a artistic film which Bluebird has produced, which have impressed me very deeply. The background of the Sierra Nevada Mountains and "Lost Lake" which are used in "The Girl of Lost Lake" were very beautiful and impressive.

My photo. album are full of many portraits of well-known actresses and actors of foreign countries, whose performances have appeared on films shown in this country, but to my great regret, I could not get your portrait irrespective of my great efforts to that end, without which my album looks like an undecorated room. If you would kindly be kind enough to let me have your nice photo., my exultation will be beyond my description, for which I am longing to put in at the first page of my photo. album. This is the first object of the present writing. I have yet one more wishes to you; that is the exchange of letters and picture post cards, etc., including Japanese curios, magazines, books, etc. If you are not interested in this subject or the nature of your profession does not allow you to do so, will you please pass my desire on to one of your friends who is desirous of doing so? Under separate cover, I have sent you several picture cards of views, and I shall be happy if you would like them. I have also enclosed herein few dried maple leaves, with the crimson color of which all the mountains here in Japan are painted very beautifully in Autumn, and hundreds of foreigners visit Japan to see the splendid sight. Have you any intention to visit Japan to see the picturesque scenery of this country?

Hoping you will please excuse my troubling you very much, and thanking you in advance for your kind favorable answer, with best wishes,

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) T. TANAKA.

Miss Myrtle Gonzales:—

Dear Madam, I have no doubt that you will permit me to take the Liberty to write you a Letter. But, as I am understand English a Letter, I am afraid if you can hardly read poor my Letter, perhaps you would be greatly pained when you have received this Letter which was sent from a really stranger to you. But please excuse me Sir. Hereafter, I beg you may acknowledge me forever. I have well known your glorious name, because I have often heard "Gonzales" among our student who talk of you. CHEVROLET WINS UNIVERSAL FILM CUP.

ture Weekly, when a car left the track at the start of the course. At last accounts the correspondent of the Weekly, who attended the race, though severely injured, was resting comfortably in the Hotel Tetlow in Uniontown, having been moved there from the hospital.

The race for the Universal Film Trophy and four thousand dollars in gold, was won by Louis Chevrolet in a Frontenac car. His time for the 112 1-2 miles was one hour, fourteen minutes and twelve and two-fifths seconds. Dave Lewis finished second in a Premier car, his time being one hour, sixteen minutes and twenty-six and one-fifth seconds, and Ralph De Palma came in third in a Mercedes in an hour and seventeen minutes and fifty-six seconds.

The new course, which was dedicated by the Universal race, is one and one-eighths miles, and for the one hundred and twelve and a half mile distance requires one hundred laps. The winner, Louis Chevrolet, in order to retain the cup permanently, will have to win the next running of the course at Philadelphia, where a new speedway track is now under construction, and which will be completed in time to be dedicated by this cup, while the third event will be run off the following year on the Indianapolis International Speedway. It is sincerely hoped by the officers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which offers the cup, that the future competitions for this trophy will be attended with no loss of life. They feel deeply the disaster which overtook the drivers in the first Universal race, and their sympathy has been extended to Mrs. Hughie Hughes and to the families of the others who were injured in the race for the Universal cup.

The Universal had three cameramen on the job at the Uniontown track to see that all of the features of the race were duly chronicled, and three thousand feet of excellent film was the result. From this the Animated Weekly took the choicest bits for use in their Weekly release No. 50.

One of the most interesting shots was contributed by Double M. Flanders, who permitted himself to be strapped, with his camera, to the back of Frank Galvin's racer facing to the rear. His idea was to get a picture of the track as it would appear under actual racing conditions. Galvin speeded up to ninety miles an hour, and Louis Chevrolet and John De Palma staged a race behind the pace-maker for the benefit of the camera. Animated cameramen have several times attempted daring stunts of this kind. Whipple strapped his camera to the front of a toboggan and took a film of the toboggan going at the lightning speed which they attained, and several pictures have been taken from the front of racing automobiles, but no film was ever taken at the rate of ninety miles an hour with the cameraman facing backwards, as this picture was taken. The negative which is not used in the Animated Weekly, and in the Universal Screen Magazine, which will use a portion of it, will very likely be utililzed in a film release which will be prepared at Universal City with several of the screen stars who have racing cars of their own.

autumn; but the whole atmosphere is infused with the spirit of charity, tolerance and love for our fellow creatures, which is the true inspiration of the anniversary which we celebrate on the twenty-fifth of December. It was at first planned to call this picture "The Greatest of These," in allusion to the text of St. Paul, "And now abideth faith, hope, and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity." Miss Mersereau's many admirers and Mr. Stevens' many friends will find that the Bluebird star and her new director have offered them a very beautiful Christmas present in "The Honor of Mary Blake," released on Christmas Day.

puzzling her brains to solve the mystery, but in vain. However, a little bird which just flew in from Hollywood, whispered to us that the green-eyed trouble-maker is none other than Dorothy Davenport's favorite Persian, and that Dorothy had better lock her up very securely in the new bungalow on the afternoon of December 23d, from four to seven or there will be a hot time at the party.

Miss Cunard is making extraordinary preparations for the event. All her canine favorites are being groomed for the occasion. She has a catholic taste in dogs, and her collection includes a hound, a collie, several pomeranians, a spaniel, a Pekinese, an Irish setter, an English mastiff, a French bull, a Russian wolfhound—everything, in fact, but a dachshund. Her many admirers are quite aware of her hobby, and many of the inhabitants of the Cunard kennels have been gifts from unknown screen friends. One of them should certainly present her with a representative of the Central Powers, either a "dackle" or a German sheep dog. At present the kennels are too pro-Ally to be strictly neutral. The program of events for the party is to include an exhibition of tricks by Lady Gatchell, the wonderful collie which has appeared so often in Universal pictures, making her screen debut with Dorothy Phillips, and which has an important role in the Christmas Bluebird, "The Right to be Happy." Then there will be races, bone-digging contests with the bones themselves for prizes, barking contests, for which the prize is a large slice of liver, and other events, interspersed with games which all well-conducted dogs know how to play. The main part of the program will be the feast with which it will close, and for which every canine delicacy will be provided. Needless to say, the acceptances will be unanimous.

WELL SUPPLIED WITH STORIES.

THE scenario department of the Pacific Coast studios of the Big U company recently decided that the thirty producing directors should be supplied with scripts sufficient to keep them occupied during the entire winter.

"The demand for Universal films makes it absolutely necessary that the present standard be maintained," said the editor of the department, "and there must be no diminution in the number of reels we are at present turning out every week. If the weather is bad our companies will work in the electric light studios, and if the scripts are ready there is no reason why we should not secure exactly the same results that we are meeting with under propitious weather conditions."

The editor thereupon assembled his staff and made it known to the members thereof what would be required of them. The fifteen writers were apportioned a certain number of directors each and instructed to prepare stories sufficient to keep them occupied without any delay. In three weeks' time the staff had turned out enough material to enable the producers to keep busy for the next two months without a single day's interruption.

CAST.

Bill	William Franey
Gale	Gale Henry
Nigger	"Heinie" Conklin
Hotel Clerk	Milburn Moranti

Gale finds the initials "B. V. D." in her teacup and the maid informs her that these will be the initials of her future husband. Bill arrives at the hotel, registers as "Bill V. Dunderblitzen" and is given a room directly opposite Gale's. He is a violinist and Gale is so charmed with his music that she finally nerves herself to go to his room.

The clerk hears the playing and thinks that some cats are having a song fest. Finally he traces the music to Bill's room, where the two quarrel violently. Gale becomes angry and breaks the violin over the clerk's head and he flees for his life. Bill is heartbroken over the loss of his violin and orders Gale from the room.

The laundry arrives and Gale receives a bundle marked with the initials "B. V. D." She finally persuades the clerk to advertise for the owner and a nigger claims the laundry as his. The clerk gives the nigger the note she had left inviting him to have tea with her.

The nigger in his Sunday best calls on the horrified Gale. Bill overhears the argument and starts out to investigate. The nigger pulls a razor on him and Bill gets a gun from the clerk and starts after him, the nigger taking refuge in a molasses barrel. When Gale shows Bill that she has sufficient money to keep them in luxury for some time, he decides that he will let the prophecy of the tea cup be fulfilled.

CAST.

I. Work-Little	Fred Gamble
Mrs. Work-Little	Countess Du Cello
Smiling Billy	Billy Mason
Better Work-Little	Peggy Custer
Mrs. Uno I Love	"Mother" Ashton

Smiling Billy, ward of I. Work-Little, is a spendthrift. He calls on Work-Little for money and is refused. A rich, eccentric widow overhears the conversation and decides to buy some property from Smiling Billy. He completes the deal, and she forces a loan of $10,000 on him.

His success with the widow convinces Work-Little that Smiling Billy has the right stuff in him, and he offers him a partnership. Smiling Billy refuses. Work-Little asks Billy to his house to meet his daughter, just returned from school.

On their arrival at the house they find the sheriff, who warns them to lock up as there is a thief in the neighborhood. Betty declares if she were a man she would land Mr. Bandit, and says "Give me a hero."

The idea comes to Billy to do a little bandit stuff. He holds up the entire family, finds Betty under the bed, carries her to the Justice of the Peace and is married. Work-Little demands of the villain that he give him back his child, and Smiling Billy strips off his disguise, whereupon the father gives them his blessing.

"GREEN EYES."

Laemmle Drama.

Scenario by Maie Havey.
Produced by William Garwood.

CAST.

Julia	Lois Wilson
John	George N. Chesebro
Dolly	Betty Schade
Harry	Ed. Brady

Julia is a faithful wife, but her husband, John, is of a suspicious, jealous nature. A former sweetheart of Julia's, Harry, is in love with a friend of hers, Dolly, but the latter's father is not in favor of their marriage. Harry and Dolly solicit the aid of Julia.

John finds much fuel for his jealousy, and the climax is reached when he discovers his wife and Harry at a roadside inn where they have gone to meet Dolly. Dolly and Harry, being perfectly innocent, cannot understand John's actions, and Julia is heartbroken when John announces his intention of going away for the night.

While he is absent, Julia is startled by the presence of someone in her room and upon switching on the lights discovers a burglar, whom she seems to recognize. John returns to his home and sees her in the embrace of a strange man. Putting a mask over his face, he enters to find that the burglar is his own brother. Later, the husband apologizes when he finds what Julia had been doing for her friends, Dolly and Harry.

Written by Virginia Kirtley.
Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

CAST.

Jed	Eddie Lyons
Lem	Lee Moran
Marie	Priscilla Dean
Jennie	Miss Ziegler
Ma	Adele Farrington
Pa	Fred Gamble

Jed and Lem are madly in love with Jennie, a very domestic sort of a girl, and the best catch in Weedville. She is fond of the way Jed plays the mouth harp and the sweet music of Lem's accordian. They patiently wait for her to decide.

Jennie's mother receives word that their city cousin, Marie, is coming to pay them a visit. When she arrives, Jennie introduces the boys to Marie, and they both think her a wonder.

That night a big party is given for Marie. She makes up her mind to jolly all the boys along. She starts with Jed and Lem, who think she is wild about them. They become jealous of each other, and both decide to propose. Lem arrives first, then comes Jed. Ma informs them that the girls have gone to the depot, so the two boys sit and glare at each other.

When Marie arrives they both make a rush for her with their tokens of love, but she introduces her city sweetheart, Jack. They stop on the steps to think it over and are doused with cold water by Jennie, who is not so stupid after all.

Victor Comedy.

Written and Produced by Robert F. Hill.

CAST.

Billy Hopkins	Stanley Walpole
Blanche Whiting	Helen Slosson
Harry De Peyster	Jos. Granby
Johnnie	Helen Marten
Sonia Kerbs	Margaret McRae

Billy Hopkins, on account of the fickleness of Blanche, his fiancee, develops a full-grown grouch. Harry DePeyster, the cause of the grouch, flirts openly with Blanche.

Johnnie advises Billy to do a little flirting on his own account and remarks that Sonia Kerbs can make any girl "green-eyed." Sonia willingly agrees to carry out the proposed plan. Blanche sees Sonia engaged in a conspicuous flirtation with Billy.

When Blanche finally sees Billy embrace the flirtatious Sonia, she is no longer able to control her jealous anger. Later. when all the young people are assembled in the parlor, Blanche denounces Billy for insulting her. Blanche hands the engagement ring back to her fiance with the sarcastic suggestion that it might fit "Miss Kerbs." Thereupon Billy turns upon his sister and Sonia and calls them "a fine pair of fixers."

Johnnie recalls that she once read, that if you get a girl's lover in trouble, the girl will take his part.

Shortly afterwards the butler sees the two "fixers" put their jewelry in Billy's pocket and he promptly removes the jewelry for his own personal use. When Johnnie brings in a real policeman to search Billy, the jewelry is not found on his person.

Blanche immediately declares that her Billy never stole anything in his life. The lovers forget their quarrel and fall into each other's arms. Johnnie and Sonia sadly examine their ringless fingers.

CAST.

Dick Snell	Al McKinnon
Tessie	Alida Hayman
Clara	Peggy Coudray
Maid	Mina Cunard

Dick Snell has a very pretty wife, but he persists in carrying on flirtations with chorus girls. One day Clara discovers Dick reading a love missive from a pretty soubrette, Tessie Applesauce. He tells her that the letter was meant for a man about town who closely resembles him and has the same name.

Clara does not believe this and decides she will teach him a lesson. When he returns home after calling upon Tessie, Clara asks him for the candy and flowers which he has promised her. He cannot recall making such a promise and discovers that a man has been making love to her and has left a short time previously promising to return with the favors. He starts out with a gun to look for the chap, who so closely resembles him.

Then Clara, with the aid of the parlor-maid whom she dresses in Dick's pajamas, closes the house and retires to her room. When Dick returns home, he endeavors to awaken Clara by throwing pebbles at her window.

Clara tells Dick that he must go away, that her husband is in bed asleep and that she knows him to be an impostor. Dick is nearly insane when the maid, whom Dick thinks is a man, appears and fires upon him. Dick leaves and upon returning home the following day, determines to remain ever at his own fireside.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO.—The Toronto daily papers carry the announcement of the incorporation of the Regal Film Company headed by Mr. Ruddy, well known in the advertising circles of this city as the President of the company. Mr. Ruddy is also owner of the Regent, half a million dollar play-house that has recently been erected. The combination of a National Posting Plant with a Film Production Company is a unique one and should be productive of unusual results

Owing to the antipathy toward anything pro-German and the fact that the Dominion Government has banned Hearst papers in Canada the Hearst Serial, Beatrice Fairfax, has been withdrawn in Ontario after it had been booked in many of the houses.

An order in Council has been passed raising the age of qualified moving picture operators in the Province from eighteen to twenty-one and whereas no age was before specified for assistants, that will be eighteen in the future. It is not regarded as likely that operators who were hitherto considered qualified and have not reached the age of twenty-one will be affected, but that the change will only apply in future cases. The reason for the new arrangement is understood to be that it is desirable, to prevent anything going amiss or to cope effectively with anything that might go wrong, to have a person of more mature age than eighteen years as operator.

"The Bugler of Algiers," the patriotic drama released through Bluebird Organizations, was screened in the Projection Room at Toronto during the last week and the Exhibitors present were unanimous in stating that it was one of the finest pictures that they had ever had the privilege to see. At present there are several theatres negotiating for it and it is bound to receive a tremendous ovation when it is placed before the public, as Canada is very partial to patriotic subjects of this nature just now.

The Strand Theatre of Toronto has also decided to use "Idle Wives," the big Universal Special Feature, for the week of December 4. An attractive advertising campaign is being planned by the Strand Advertising Staff and will cover two weeks. Every form of advertising possible will be used to put this picture over in the manner which befits it.

Mr. Clair Hague, General Manager of the Universal Film Company of Canada has announced that he is bringing in a new print of Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter." This film which has enjoyed a most remarkable popularity in Canada does not seem to lose its attractiveness at all, as it is now playing a double return in many towns and cities throughout Canada, as evidenced by the need of a new print in each of its three years of use.

As a result of the advertising campaign conducted among the Movie Fans of Ontario, there are now over 1,000 people in the city of Toronto alone who are pledged to see "The Purple Mask," the new Universal serial when it comes out This work which was originated by Publicity Service Department Universal Company, under W. A. Bach, is becoming quite an item in the boosting of important films which come into the territory and is proving of immense value compared to the slight expense it involves.

One after-effect of the prohibition measure which has just come into force in Ontario, Canada, is that several men formerly in the liquor business are now for Movie Theatres.

K. M. Leach, manager of the Eagle Theatre, Swift Current, Saskatchewan, Can., has opened the New Lyric Theatre as a picture house. He is running a mixed program including Universal, Red Feathers, and Bluebirds. The interior decorations are very artistic and girl ushers are an attractive and new feature. The Lyric is one of the finest theatres in Sakskatchewan, and a good Fall business is anticipated.

Great progress is being reported in the booking of BLUEBIRD films in Ontario. One of the latest city houses to show these features is the new Rialto, which opens with the "Eye of God," and follows with "Shoes," the famous social drama. Theatre men are reporting excellent results in all sections of the country from their showing which is naturally delighting Mr. McKenny, the local manager.

MINNEAPOLIS LETTER.

By A FRIEND.

ON Monday, November 6, at nine o'clock precisely, a bright, keen, alert young man drove his car up in front of the Laemmle Film Service in Minneapolis and left it in front of a "no parking" sign. He was in a joyful mood. He took off his overcoat, left it on the seat, and prepared to make a dive into the doorway opposite. He was promptly arrested by the police, as promptly brought before the court, and as promptly fined two bucks.

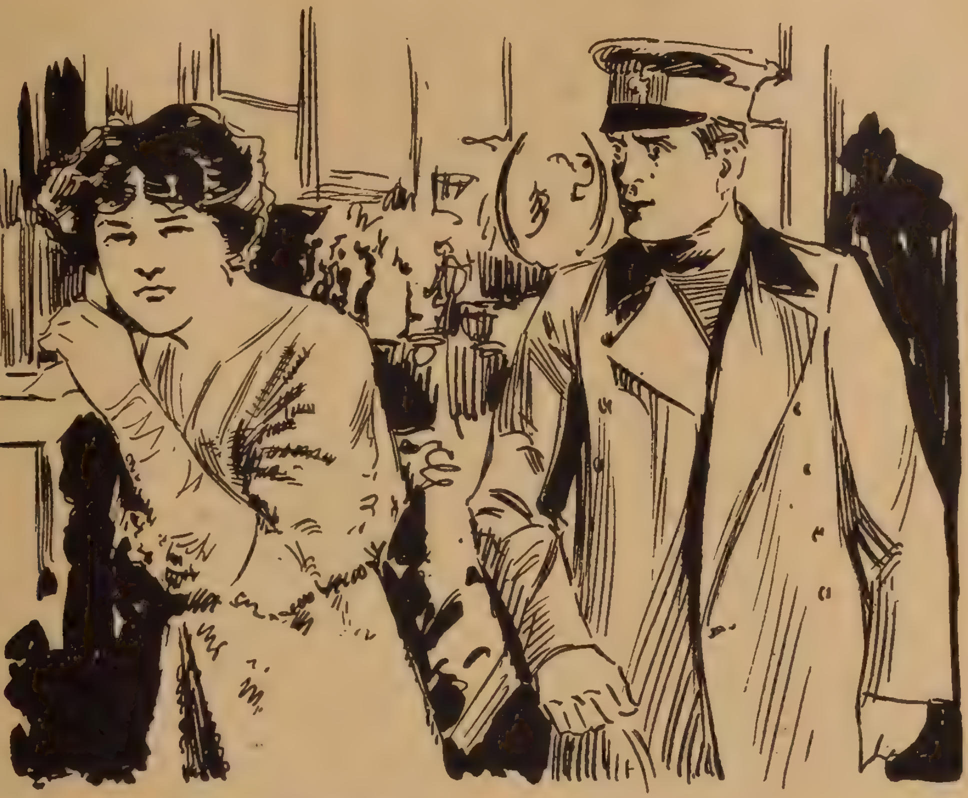
With this auspicious start Mr. J. F. Cubberley assumed his duties as general manager of the Laemmle Film Service, for it was none other than the much-liked Mr. Cubberley, formerly general manager of the Zenith Feature Film Compayn, upon whom the park police carried out their iron-clad rule. Mr. Cubberley assumes the place formerly held by Fred S. Meyer, who leaves the Laemmle Film Service, and at the same time resigns as correspondent of the Moving Picture Weekly for that territory.

Three years ago J. F. Cubberley moved to Minneapolis with his family and with the Zenith Feature Film Company of Duluth in his overcoat pocket. He had established both in Des Moines and Duluth an excellent reputation, in Des Moines as reporter on the Register and Leader, in Duluth on the News-Tribune, and later in association with C. A. Marshall and J. A. Marcy of the Lyceum Theatre in that city. With his growing appreciation of the photoplay field, he branched out and became associated with the Zenith Feature Film Company, handling state rights and big features. Later he became its general manager. He soon saw, however, that Minneapolis was the logical center from which to work that territory, and moved his business and family to the latter city.

When the vacancy occurred in the Laemmle Film Service, Mr. Cubberley was asked to accept the management of the exchange, and without hesitation he sold his interest in the Zenith to become associated with the Universal, because he felt that the Universal was the best bet in the film business. This in spite of the fact that he received many flattering offers from other companies. Mr. Cubberley was born in Oskaloosa, Ia., and knows the northwest territory like a book. He has a very wide acquaintance among exhibitors, and has the good will of all of his associates for a wonderful success in his new station.

"Love or an Empire"

Herbert Brenon Production



The young King visits the singer in her apartments.

OF course this picture was taken before the present European war. It would be impossible to secure permission for it at this time, for the scenes were filmed in the city of Berlin itself. It is certainly impossible to duplicate this achievement until the conflict is over, and in all probability the thing will never be done again. For this reason alone extraordinary interest attaches to the production of this Rex two-reel drama. The picture was directed by Herbert Brenon, one of the important names in motion pictures, and it is a real romance, a true cousin of the "Zenda" type of story, which can be depended upon to make a tremendous appeal to the public. Add to this the fact that real officers were induced to pose for the picture; that some of the most famous buildings and views of the capital of the German Empire were used as a background; that Leah Baird, one of the most popular picture actresses, has the lead, and it will be seen that this is a most remarkable release.

REX Two-Reel Drama, directed by Herbert Brenon in the city of Berlin itself. The leads are played by William Shay and Leah Baird, and the story tells of the renunciation which a prince makes for the sake of the woman he loves.

CAST.

The Heir Apparent	William Shay
His Younger Brother	Carl Shroeder
Marianne, an opera singer	Leah Baird
The Prime Minister	Kurt Adler
The Old Monarch	Mr. Brenon's father

Unter Den Linden, the famous avenue in the heart of Berlin, which leads from the Brandenburger Thor, at the entrance of the Thiergarten, to the palace, is shown in the picture. The rides through the Thiergarten, the great park in the center of the city, are utilized as backgrounds in the story. Marianne, the opera singer for whom the Heir Apparent gives up his crown, is seen coming out of the stage entrance of the Kaiserliches und Koenigliches Opernhaus, or Royal Opera House, itself. The lovers meet each other on one of the bridges over the Spee, the little river which runs through the city, and again on the steps of the Royal Museum and in front of the other notable buildings of the capital. Other scenes were filmed on the outskirts of the city, in the gardens and at the entrance of an historic Schloss, or castle, well known to tourists.

A feature of the picture is the remarkable costuming. Every one who has been in Berlin retains an impression of the richness and beauty of the officers' uniforms. They know how fatal to all illusion is the reproduction of military trappings in cheap materials and incorrect details of cut and braiding. In this picture Mr. Brenon secured the real thing. Not only are the principals dressed in the real uniforms, but some of the characters in the film were actually officers of the Kaiser, who consented to walk before the camera and be included in the picture. Thus a realism is given to the film which makes it absolutely accurate.

The story is concerned with the deep love of the Heir Apparent for an

"Murdered By Mistake," L-Ko Komedy

WHAT on earth is the use of trying to put the plot of an L-KO Komedy into cold type? It can't be done, and if it could, no one would have the slightest idea of the real laugh-producing value of such a phantasy of bombs, doubles, guns that shoot a hundred times without reloading, beds which collapse at the critical moment and let their occupants through the floor and the neighbor's ceiling, comic police in madly-skidding autos, and all the other paraphernalia of the comedy picture game. When you read that Craig Hutchinson has been directing Dan Russell again in an L-KO Komedy, you know all that you need to know beforehand of the merits of the production. The only thing to do is to make a beeline for the nearest picture theatre which is running it, and see that your collar is not too tight, or you will surely choke to death with laughter.

Mr. Bigbee was a drone in the dive of society, but he was just as busy buzzing around the girls as the workers. In fact, he buzzed so much that his girl grew annoyed, so Mr. Bigbee swore by the Great Horn Spoon that he would foully put himself out of the way. Accordingly he shot himself, but, unfortunately, it was in the excitement and not where bullets commonly go. Vexed at his unsuccessful attempt to destroy his life, he hired Blood Hound Pete to kill him. How a tramp who looked like him stole his clothes and almost married the girl is straightened out after a riot.

DAN RUSSELL, in a typical L-KO phantasy, tries his best to leave an unappreciative world, but his efforts are frustrated by his double—or something like that. Anyhow, it's a real L-KO laugh fest. Directed by Craig Hutchinson.

SMALL ACTRESS GIVES GROWN-UP PARTY.

EDITH ROBERTS, new Universal Nestor leading lady, gave all her Eastern Studio friends a grown-up party at her home in Hollywood. Among those present were Wm. Garwood, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Paton, Irene Hunt, Lester Scott, Dorothy Phillips, Allan Holubar, Mr. and Mrs. Millard K. Wilson, Rex Ingram, Mr. and Mrs. A. Gaudio, Mr. and Mrs. E. Gaudio, Martin Murphy, Hobart Henley, Lillian Greenberger, Louis Jacobs, Helen Jacobs, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Crampton, Mrs. George Hall, Edward Gehller and Miss R. Margoles.

A dainty note conveyed the information to Miss Roberts that "Myrtle Gonzalez would be unable, much as she regretted" to attend a masquerade party. But she was there, nevertheless.

Miss Gonzalez that night, dressed as "Lilly-of-the-Valley," the character of a colored girl. She attended the festivities and enjoyed the evening without any one discovering her identity. Upon her return home she phoned her hostess thanking her for the enjoyable evening.

The First Bluebird Star Comes to this Country

THE Divine Sarah Bernhardt, star of "Jeanne Dore," the very first Bluebird, is on tour in this country and will play in New York on December 4. There is a strong demand still, and renewed interest in this photoplay, both where Mme. Bernhardt appears and in the cities she cannot reach.

WHEN the Bluebird Photo Plays (Inc.) announced Sarah Bernhardt in "Jeanne Dore" as their first photoplay offering there was so remote a possibility of the Divine Sarah's personal appearance in this country again that "Jeanne Dore" was thought to be her very last contribution to the dramatic history of America. But the great French actress has all her life dealt in surprises, and one of the most pleasurable ones of all has been the announcement of her arrival in this country for a final farewell tour. It argued a remarkable strength of purpose on the part of the Divine One to cross the ocean after the physical suffering which she had undergone, and in view of the fact that the seas were considered none too safe. But she is here and is touring this country. In fact, she is to make a three weeks' appearance at the Empire Theatre, New York, and the fact that the theatre is virtually sold out for that entire time attests again the wonderful popularity of the woman who has every right to be called the greatest actress in the world.

It has now been almost exactly a year since "Jeanne Dore" was released in this country, and it is planned upon the anniversary of this momentous event, which will also be the first birthday of the Bluebird organization, to have a combined celebration, in which it is hoped that Mme. Bernhardt's plans will permit her to take part. Just what form this celebration will take has not been announced, but something out of the ordinary in photoplay circles is promised.

In the meantime Mme. Bernhardt's tour is quite limited. There are a number of large cities which she will visit, but, on the other hand, there are a great many large cities to which she cannot possibly go. In its first publicity for the "Jeanne Dore" picture the Bluebird made considerable capital of the fact that Madame was not coming to this country again. That was merely a policy. Had she been going to appear the value of the pictures to exhibitors, and to the Bluebird, would have been even greater than it was with the probability that she would never appear in this country again. Her appearance coincidentally with the picture would have greatly enhanced its value. That, almost a year from the release date of the picture, is the situation today. There has been a wonderful revival in the demand for the first Bluebird, undoubtedly engendered by the interest in Mme. Bernhardt's farewell tour in this country. A number of exchanges have found the prints which they already had entirely inadequate to meet the situation, and have ordered new copies.

In view of the great publicity which Mme. Bernhardt's appearance in New York will undoubtedly cause, and also in view of the approaching anniversary of Bluebird, and the release of the "Jeanne Dore" picture as well, the wise Bluebird exchange managers are making a concerted effort for a revival on consecutive booking dates on "Jeanne Dore," the first Bluebird.

When the picture was first released it met not only with instant response on account of the fame of its immortal star, but on account of the excellent story which the photoplay presented. It will be remembered that "Jeanne Dore" was adapted by Louis Mercanton from the stage play of the same name, by Tristan Bernard, in which Mme. Bernhardt was acting in Paris at the time she was forced to leave the stage to undergo the surgical operation which deprived her of a lower limb, and seemed to put an effectual termination on any further theatrical venture. The Bluebird rejoices incidentally that this was not the result.

The story is a very tragic one, so intensely graphic that no artist less great than Bernhardt could be thought of in the title role. No less great a mistress of pantomime and facial expression could have depicted before the camera the fullness of the manifold possibilities in which this role is particularly rich. The story of "Jeanne Dore" is as follows:

Jeanne Dore's profligate husband is hopelessly addicted to gambling and is threatened with expulsion from his club because of his heavy indebtedness to another gambler member. Confessing his disgrace to his wife (Mme. Bernhardt), she offers to save him from disgrace by selling her jewels.

Sarah Bernhardt, the first Bluebird star.

The gambling husband makes a demand for funds from his uncle and is curtly refused an advance. Returning home he finds his wife has disposed of her gems and with the money thus obtained he goes to the club, determined to pay his debts and live up to the pledge he has made to his wife to gamble no more.

However, the lure of the roulette wheel overcomes his resolve; he loses all his money on "just one more turn of the wheel," and, rather than face his disgrace, he commits suicide. Left with her young son to support, Jeanne Dore is forced to sell her remaining possessions and lives as best she can until her husband's uncle takes pity on her and buys for her a small stationery shop in Paris. Here mother and son prosper until the boy reaches early manhood.

One day he falls suddenly and violently in love with a married woman who comes to his mother's shop to make purchases. An intrigue with the unscrupulous female leads the young man to murder the same uncle who had befriended himself and his mother. Going first to his mother with an appeal for money to give to his married sweetheart, the young man meets prompt refusal.

In desperation he seeks financial help from his uncle, and when the old man makes some disparaging remarks

"THE PURPLE MASK" AT THE BALL.

Madison Square Garden when this unique advertisement for "The Purple Mask" serial made its way into the auditorium behind a band of fifteen pieces, under the leadership of Bandmaster Beerbohm. Each man had around his cap a band of orange and black silk, the Universal colors, with the words "Universal City Band" on it. As they marched about the hall they played the "Universal City March," which is now a familiar accompaniment to all moving picture gatherings. A huge banner ten feet long and three feet wide was carried on standards over their heads by two two young men from the Universal publicity department, dressed in the regulation corduroys, black velvet caps, red sashes, and flannel shirts of the Paris Apaches.

No one would have guessed, as this brave entourage circled about the hall, that they had already marched from Forty-second Street through muddy and slippery streets down to Madison Square Garden, but such was the case, and this is the reason therefor: A huge parade had been planned by the Arrangement Committee to be made up of the Universal Band, "The Purple Mask" stunt, and a number of stunts arranged by other manufacturers representing other serials, stars and pictures. It will be remembered that it rained spasmodically all Wednesday and Wednesday night. Officially the parade had been called off because so many of the companies refused to permit their people to brave the elements and slippery streets, although one of these stunts was a full company of infantry with everything but bravery to recommend them. The soldiers would not march in the rain. Not so the brave little "Purple Mask" company. When the order was given by the reluctant officials to disband, the Universal troupe secured permission from a member of the Entertainment Committee to parade to the Garden on its own responsibility, and started bravely out. Down Broadway to Thirty-fourth Street, with banner flying, and band making all of the noise possible, the streets soon took on the appearance of Fifth Avenue with the Seventh Regiment marching home. Every one seemed to think that it was some regiment back from the border. "The Purple Mask" got as much publicity thereby as any stunt ever pulled off.

All went well until the corner of Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue was reached. Here an unusually observant policeman noticed the purple masks on the two evil-looking Apaches who held the banner, and the progress of the procession was stopped until the masks could be removed, and a promise given to the scrupulous cop that they would not be put on until the Garden was reached. Sixteen blocks on a muddy street for little Lois, aged eight, and Madeline, ten, is a pretty severe trial for the sake of art. Had there been a military officer there empowered to award a cross, he certainly would have given one to each of these little soldiers for "The Purple Mask."

The ball itself was all that was expected of it. The Universal occupied four boxes, and the Bluebird Company two, in one of which Violet Mersereau reigned supreme, with her mother and sister Claire, of the Universal Company, and her leading man, Sidney Mason, ready to carry out her slightest wish. Miss Mersereau was the only actress at the ball to whom a separate tour of the dancing arena was accorded, and she had the honor of making this tour behind the Universal City band.

Mr. Laemmle and his party occupied one of the Universal boxes, and Mr. P. A. Powers the one next to it, and both enjoyed a very pleasant evening.

opera singer. She is not of royal descent and so he cannot marry her. The old monarch dies and the young Prince is acclaimed as his successor. He refuses the honor, as he cannot give up the girl.

In the meantime there is a party in the kingdom which is in favor of seating the Prince's younger brother on the throne. They are conspiring to this end. The Prime Minister, who is the sincere friend of the young monarch, determines to enlist the aid of the singer herself. He goes to her and induces her to pretend to be untrue to her lover so that he will break with her and take his kingdom. At last he prevails and Marianne arranges so that the King shall see her at a questionable resort with another man.

The King will not believe that she is false and visits her apartments. She pretends to have taken too much wine in order to disgust him with her. Then she overhears a plot of the conspirators to shoot him at midnight. Horrorstruck, she hurries to the palace to warn him. He is convinced of her true-heartedness and insists upon relinquishing his throne to his younger brother in order to marry the woman he loves.

about the woman who has brought the boy to such foolish extremes, the youth kills his uncle and, with the assistance of Jeanne Dore, makes good his escape. Well clear of immediate capture, the boy comes back to the scene of his crime and succeeds in his efforts to affect once more a liaison with the woman he adores.

By accident he is discovered and captured, thrown in jail, is tried and convicted of the murder and sentenced to the guillotine. Even in these desperate straits he seeks to gain some response to his affection from the woman, who promptly spurns and repudiates him. He prevails upon his devoted mother to become a messenger in his service and her appeals likewise fall upon deaf ears.

Instead of telling the boy that her quest has been fruitless, Jeanne Dore goes to the prison herself on the evening before the boy's neck is to be given to the knife and poses as the woman he had expressed himself, to his own mother, as the one he most wished to see.

There is but one end to the story. The boy goes to the guillotine and the final scene depicts the devoted mother in the extreme agony of watching, from a window across the street, the execution of her son.

KELSEY DROPS WEIGHT.

F. A. KELSEY, of the directing forces at Universal City, has become a rigid disciple of the avoirdupois-reducing book, "Eat and Grow Thin." One would naturally assume that Kelsey, because of his activity, would easily prevent himself from adding to his weight, but during the past few months he has been gradually growing stouter. So, when Director Henry McRae, who has pulled off twenty-four pounds by following the good advice contained in Vance Thompson's book, told Kelsey how he did it the latter secured a copy of the work. Result—twenty-six pounds dropped within four weeks.

"I am down to 230 now," said Kelsey proudly, at the same time showing how loosely his vest hung, "and soon I hope to be a perfect 52."

A GARDEN OF AMERICAN MOTION PICTURES

Special Selections of Films Suitable for Children and the Family Group Made by the National Board of Review.

UNDER the title, "A Garden of American Motion Pictures for Father, Mother and the Young People," the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has just issued its second quarterly catalogue, to which it attaches a price of ten cents, and which may be obtained by those interested upon application to the Secretary of the Board, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City.

The catalogue contains a list of specially selected motion pictures for children and the family group, made by the eleven foremost groups of American film manufacturers in the period between April 1 and October 1, 1916, all of which have been reviewed by the Board. In the list the Universal Film Manufacturing Company looms prominently with 117 subjects listed. The Bluebird Photoplays (Inc.) is credited with 13 subjects, all five-reelers. The list of subjects follows:

The catalogue will be much appreciated by promoters of children's perfomances, as it will enable them to approximate the films available for their purpose. They are cautioned, however, not to become too enthusiastic over the prospect of obtaining all of these films, as they are practically all out in service, most of them in interlocking program form. Some of the older films may be expected to be voided by long and constant run.

The uncertainty of service from catalogues is apparent to every one who has made even the most superficial study of the problem. It is for this reason that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's Specially Selected Programs for Juveniles and the Family Group are being recognized as a distinct boon to promoters of these special programs.

They eliminate the necessity of "shopping around." They ensure the eye-health of the children, all subjects being new, clean prints. They standardize the price of service. They render available the best film-product of the Universal. They combine in five reels, a greater variety of film-entertainment than has ever been concentrated in that compass before. All of the Universal selections named in "A Garden of American Motion Pictures" will be arranged in the balanced program form of the UNIVERSAL JUVENILE PROGRAMS, and will be available for use at the uniform rental rate of $10.00 a program of five reels, the country over.

For full particulars, including a copy of the pamphlet "How to Run a Children's Performance, Successfully," address Juvenile Program Bureau, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

Japanese and Chinese Music

By M. WINKLER.

In view of the release of "The Sign of the Poppy," music for which appears on page 45, the editor has reprinted here an article by Mr. Winkler which will be found useful in playing this feature. Most of the compositions here referred to have been used by Mr. Winkler in his cue suggestions.—Ed.

HOW many compositions have you purchased, which were described as Japanese and Chinese, and which turned out to be Japanese and Chinese in name, but almost anything in character, rhythm, and melody?

Here are some real Japanese and Chinese numbers of wonderful tonal beauty, containing many genuine surprises and musical effects, not to be found in other numbers. These compositions are genuinely Japanese or Chinese in color and are exceedingly well suited for Japanese and Chinese pictures.

1. "Chinese Wedding Procession," by Lucius Hosmer.

The most exquisite musical thought conceived in years. Its wonderful tonal beauty of Chinese character makes it adaptable for any Chinese picture, of slow or mysterious action.

2. "Chinese Recollections," by Chas. Zimmerman.

An exceptionally fine "Maestoso" in 2/4, in which originality and clever invention are coupled with attractive melodies and orchestral effects, usable for any Chinese scene of processional character.

3. "Hop-Sing," Chinese Fantasia, by E. Katzenstein.

A really faultless Chinese 2/4 Moderato, a musical illustration of Chinese society.

4. "Chinese Serenade," by Chas. Puerner.

A splendid specimen of a Chinese 2/4 allegretto, very melodious, and fine for Chinese scenes of quicker action.

5. "Ching Chang," Gallop.

For tumults, confusion and riots, etc., if played to action.

6. "Japanese Patrol," arranged by Th. M. Tobani.

A wonderful Fantasia in "Tempo di Marcia" on the famous world-known Japanese national air, "Fou So Ka."

7. "Kingdom of Flowers," by J. Ringleben.

A slow, dreamy, and wonderfully melodious Valse Lente, to be used for Japanese garden, flower, and love scenes.

8. "Japanese Cradle Song," by Charles Long.

The title gives sufficient explanation as to what scenes this number is intended for.

9. "Chinese Characteristic," by M. Winkler.

A real Chinese Composition, a number which you can use to splendid advantage as an accompaniment for any Chinese scene.

10. "Chinese Allegretto," by Chas. Puerner.

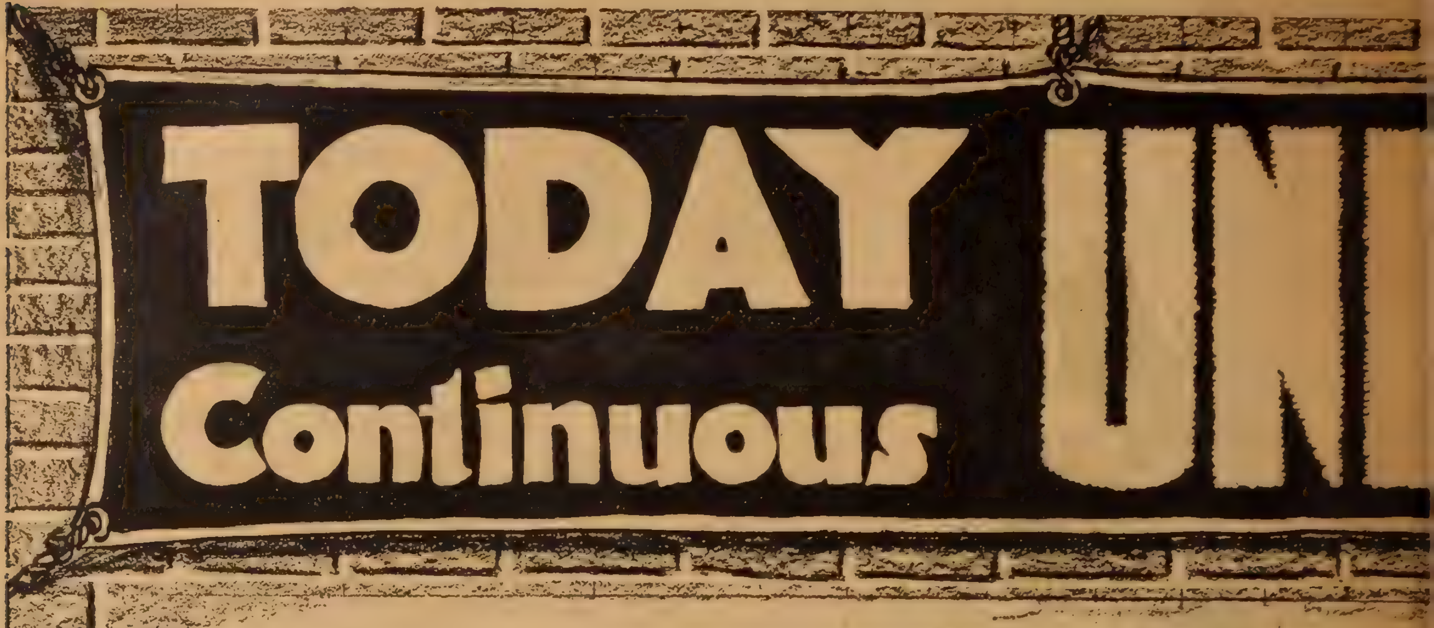
The latest Composition by this famous writer and composer of the Chinese Serenade. (See No. 4). Suited for Chinese street scenes.



Thousands of Exhibitors are putting on shows that are not getting the money, because they are not what the people want.

If any one of these Exhibitors will look over the stories of releases on the Universal Program every week in this magazine they will find ample proof that the Universal is the one varied, scientifically balanced program on earth.

Maybe you are one of them—have the house and the neighborhood. You ought to be making money. You are not. You are constantly changing your show and constantly losing business. Read this issue of the M. P. Weekly AS A BUSINESS PROPOSITION, then write your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars. We'll make you successful.

WEEKLY

The Universal Animated Weekly IS ON THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM. It is getting business for thousands of Exhibitors on their dull day when nothing else seems to get the crowds.

The U. A. W. is the livest, snappiest, most up-to-date and by long odds the best news weekly being shown on the screen today. Its claim of "all the world's best news first on the screen" is not advertising "bunk," nor an idle boast.

It is a statement of fact, borne out week after week in each succeeding release. Back of the U. A. W. is the mighty organization of the Universal, maintaining throughout the world the largest staff of expert camera news gatherers in the world.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE

The very latest screen novelty on the regular Universal Program. It is to a popular magazine what the U. A. W. is to a newspaper.

It covers such widely diversified subjects as domestic science; beauty hints; big things in the industrial world; "how to do" any number of things; it has funny comedies from real life—not studio made; and notable achievements in every branch of human endeavor. You can book the Screen Magazine separately—one full reel weekly —if you want to. Write today.

SPECIAL on the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Prepare now for increased Holiday Business. Book "Fighting Joe," a Western Christmas story in two reels that will pack 'em in like sardines. Book "It's Great To Be Married," a clever two-reeler that is out of sight. Book "Little Pardner," with two big feature stars. Three reels of great drama.

What They Say About the Universal Program

QUICK RESULTS.

A. G. Shaw, Manager of the Central Film Service of Evansville, Ind., has sent two shipments to a new account in Poseyville, Ind., and was quite astonished to receive the fellowing letter from A. L. Biddle, Manager of the Magnet Theatre of that city:

"I certainly appreciate your selection for Wednesday night. It was fine, and I had the largest house I have ever had on Wednesday."

CLASS BY THEMSELVES.

Universal Film Co.:

Gentlemen—I would like to say that your films are in a class by themselves. What I mean by this is that they will have to show me where the Universal pictures can be excelled for quality, style and the low rental price that is charged for such good pictures. I am an old head of New York and know a good picture when I see it, and there is none that can come up with the Universal pictures.

Wishing you success in your work, I remain respectfully yours,

PIETRO VECCHIA,
Arcadia, La.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM BACKBONE OF INDUSTRY.

Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, Minn.:

Gentlemen—In regard to the matter of features or regular service, I beg to submit the following arguments in favor of the latter, having given the business very careful study and much consideration for some time:

The trend of the present time is to make picture shows too long, and there are few exhibitors who have not heard the complaint: "Your show was very fine, but it was too long; fine, but it keeps me up too late," etc.

It is absolutely impossible for the average individual to completely enjoy more than an hour and a half of motion picture entertainment on account of the very close concentration required, especially today with the heavy dramas showing.

The public require diversity in everything, particularly in the amusement line, and the mixed program just meets the needs of the vast number of patrons who become tired of seeing the long, drawn-out photoplays, week in and week out.

Where your patronage depends upon all the people of a town you must have variety to satisfy, if not please, all your patrons, because you must satisfy all of them in a measure if you would make a real success of the business.

For a patron coming late, especially in a small town where one show only is required, very little can be gotten out of a long feature, of which, perhaps, one or more reels have been shown, whereas with a mixed program there would without a doubt be some part of the program that would please even the late comer.

I do not claim that features have no place. I would suggest showing one occasionally, but as yet the mixed program is the backbone of the industry. Very respectfully yours,

A. M. ERICSON,
Palace Theatre, Hector, Minn.

FROM A REAL CRITIC.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

Gentlemen—I want to tell you how very good the Red Feather picture, "THE HEART OF A CHILD," is. I am not prone to praise, being a press agent and the motion picture editor of this newspaper; also more or less in the game otherwise, so of course, cannot praise. But seriously, I think the above picture is the very best Red Feather that has been made yet, the story being interesting, the photography better than usual, the direction almost wonderful, and the work of Miss Flugrath, Lewis Gilbert, Edward Sass, Frank Stanmore and Hayford Herbert being much better than I have seen in a photoplay in weeks. Edward Sass is especially good. I wish every five-reel picture could be as well made and with such really excellent actors. I saw this picture Thursday afternoon and then went and saw it again today, something I have never done before, even for a Paramount or Triangle. I just had to get this out of my system, the picture was so good. Yours very truly,

O. F. LINCOLN,
M. P. Editor, Hartword Courant.

LETTERS from pleased Universal Exhibitors who appreciate the efforts of the Universal to help them satisfy audiences with single-reel, double-reel, triple-reel and Red Feather features.

MORAL OBLIGATION.

Universal Film Exchange, Chicago:

Gentlemen—This is the first letter I have written a film exchange about a feature, and if I did not write on this occasion I would feel that I had not paid a moral obligation. Last night we had "My Old Dutch," and I do not hesitate to say that it was the best and most artistic picture I have ever seen, and in so saying I voice the sentiments of my patrons. The Broadway Features have been very satisfactory, but in "My Old Dutch" is what seems must be the pinnacle of features, and the moral of this silent drama is more lasting and far-reaching than all the sermons I have ever heard, in church or out. I desire another date for it.

Respectfully,

B. W. STOVER,
Orpheum Theatre, Phymouth, Ind.

A TOP-NOTCHER.

Laemmle Film Service, Omaha, Neb.:

Gentlemen—I am sending you the paper with a little comment on "Father and the Boys." No doubt you have noticed I am not a regular hot air peddler, boosting every feature I run; but I am willing to go down on record and boost the features about which my patrons come to me and say, "I enjoyed your show. It was just fine—the best picture you have run for a long time." This is the kind I can boost and feel I am doing right, as my patrons would not boost any picture that was not right up to the top notch in acting, photography, and, above all, morality. Such was the comment on "Father and the Boys." And I can cheerfully recommend "Father and the Boys" as being a top-notcher in every respect.

Yours truly,

A. A. ULM,
Orpheum Theatre, Randolph, Neb.

"Please Go 'way A

(No. 155. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

THERE is a certain type of man who resents CHANGE of any kind. He gets into a little rut and is perfectly satisfied to hobble along in it. When he sees his competitor trying something new he kids himself by saying, "That poor hick will go broke. He is never satisfied to let well enough alone."

Then, when the competitor suddenly blossoms forth as a great big success the man in the rut says, "The lucky stiff!"

I am thinking now of certain exhibitors who run their business---like their thoughts---in a rut. They refuse to look up over the edge of the rut to see what's going on in the world. These human moles don't want to THINK. They don't want the bright light of Truth to shine on their business for fear it will show the necessity of some sort of CHANGE. And it's too much bother to change. They cry out "Please go 'way and let me sleep."

There's an old story about a Southern merchant who refused to advertise because he figured that advertising would increase his business and make him work afternoons instead of taking a nap. He didn't want to CHANGE his old habits.

But I have found a Southern exhibitor who is not afraid to make a change. And as a result he has INCREASED HIS BUSINESS 100 PER CENT!

His name is Nelson van H. Gurnee. He is president of the Gurnee Amusement Co., of Lexington, Ky. He writes me as follows:

nd Let Me Sleep"

> "I am happy to state that from its inception one year ago, the Program Service has lived up to my estimates in every way, and I have yet to find a day when my receipts have not been AT LEAST 100 PER CENT LARGER THAN WHEN THE FEATURE SERVICE WAS USED."

Now then, you can't call Mr. Gurnee "a lucky stiff." He first gave his business serious thought. He estimated that he would boost his business by quitting Feature Service and using Program Service. He wasn't too lazy to make a CHANGE in policy.

He didn't take a blind plunge. He used his brains. And the man who uses his brains never gets into a rut.

The Feature has been hitting the toboggan for a long time. As a profit-maker it is speedily proving itself to be a quince. If you can't see the handwriting on the wall it is because you are deliberately shutting your eyes and WON'T SEE!

If all features were GOOD features, conditions would be quite different. But since about 90 per cent of the features are miserable junk, the people are getting sick of them. They want the varied program and THEY'RE GOING TO PATRONIZE THE THEATRE THAT GIVES IT TO THEM. You'd better cut out the "Please go 'way and let me sleep" stuff!

IT'S YOU!

THE next time you start a-cussin' at film rentals, poor business and picture conditions in general, don't blame it all on the film magnate. No, sir! Stand in front of your mirrior, look yourself in the eyes and say:

"Bill, YOU'RE the guy!"

There won't be any one to hear you except yourself, so continue the conversation.

"Twenty-four months ago you had a peach of a business. You were not only makin' a livin' but a dam fine one, too. But, shucks! You didn't leave well enough alone.

"Bill, if only you had listened to the men with the vision that enabled them to look ahead, you wouldn't be paying mountain-high prices for prairie-level features right now. Nor would you have been bunked into paying $100 a day--and up--for films by some of these here-today and gone - tomorrow - with - your - money producers.

"Lord knows you got warning enough! Every time the feller at the feature exchange politely asked you to cough up a higher rental price, it should have made you realize what was a'comin'. It should have jammed into your skull the thought that instead of being a sure-enough, honest-to-goodness exhibitor, you were just a theatre manager working for the interest of the feature manufacturer!

"How's it going to end, Bill? Are you going to keep right on playing into the feature men's hands, or are you going to sign the exhibitor's Declaration of Independence?

"Coming to think of it, that's just what that good, old, regular service contract really is. It's a Declaration of Independence against the tyranny of feature conditions. It means freedom from excessive rentals; freedom from complaints by my patrons on the score of bum shows; freedom from bad business!"

Then you conclude the conversation with this:

"Bill, the feature manufacturers have grown fat at the expense of a lot of exhibitors who should have known better. But there's one showman who has coughed up his last dollar towards the feature men's swollen bank accounts--

Yes, sir! Bill, there's one exhibitor who has grown wise and——

"IT'S YOU! ! !"

The Case of Sunday Opening

MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY
UNITY of ACTION SPELLS SUCCESS

National Association of the Motion Picture Industry takes up battle for Sunday motion picture shows in New York State as its own.

THE Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, sitting in Albany, decided on November 22d, 1916, that the century-old New York blue law was applicable to Motion Picture Theatres, and that therefore Sunday exhibitions were illegal. On the afternoon of the next day, the Executive Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry met in special session. It assigned its general counsel, William M. Seabury, to do all in the power of legal course to aid the Albany exhibitors, and appealed to every newspaper of the State to take up the fight. The aid of civic organizations, women's clubs and social workers of every class has been enlisted, with the National Association in command.

By assuming this responsibility and driving the campaign through to success, the National Association is demonstrating again to the trade and the public that "Unity of Action Spells Success." This is the watchword which has been adopted by the National Association to be put on its trade mark cut which is reproduced on this page. It is a slogan to be proud of, and a truism which will appeal to the moving picture industry as a whole more forcibly than to almost any other business. Almost all of its ills have come through lack of unity; and the terrible waste of unhealthy competition and misunderstanding between producers, and between producers and exhibitors, principally determined the establishment of the National Association as it is constituted today. Already a number of problems which affect the industry have been satisfactorily settled, the credit for which must go diricetly to the National Association. The present problem upon the solution of which the Association has embarked is the question of Sunday opening in New York State. It has fortunately every element of the industry back of it, and only those against it who have an old-fashioned Blue-Sunday idea of the requirements of the thousands of poor people who depend upon this Sunday relaxation for their weekly entertainment. As the Evening Sun justly observes, the only sort of movies which should be suppressed on Sunday is the sort which should be suppressed on every other day of the week as well.

Twenty-five per cent. of the attendance of the Motion Picture shows is on Sundays, showing that Sunday is the principal opportunity for entertainment and education of the great masses of the people. The motion picture has become the chief means of education and entertainment to the masses and all classes, and to deprive the people of the opportunity of availing themselves of this vehicle, would be a gross injustice to society. It would likewise be financially detrimental to thousands of exhibitors who have millions of dollars invested in motion picture houses and to producers of motion pictures whose investments, based upon seven day showings, would be tremendously jeopardized. The statistics prove that the motion picture is not only socially beneficial from the standpoint of entertainment and education, but it has been the means of maintaining the American home in that it has enabled the family to assemble together on Sunday instead of being disrupted by the head of the family spending his time in drinking or otherwise away from the family.

An energetic campaign has been instituted by Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the Association, and his efficient press representative, Wallace Thompson. A committee composed of representative producers was immediately appointed, and laid its plans for a publicity campaign to defeat the measure. They advised several exhibitors to make a test case before the law, and last Sunday a number of them in cities up the State were arrested, charged with violating the Sunday opening law. The results so far have been brought about through a campaign of telegrams and messages dispatched to every editor of a newspaper within the State of New York, asking his co-operation in fighting the enforcement of this law. In these telegrams it was pointed out that the films are the greatest conservers of the family circle known at the present time, and it is largely due to their influence that the families are brought together on the Sabbath to go en masse to a picture show, whereas otherwise the head of the house might be engaged at the corner saloon, and other members of the family in other pursuits and other places. All of these telegrams were signed by the National Association, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York.

The decision of the Appellate Division affects only the northern part of the State at the present time. New York City and the sections contiguous being governed still under Judge Gaynor's definition of the word "show" on the statute books. Judge Gaynor had ruled that this word applied only to outdoor exhibitions.

This editorial appeared in the New York Herald following the call to arms. It is representative of editorials which have subsequently appeared in the Sun, the New York Times, American, Evening Sun, World, New York Post, Mail, Morning Telegraph, and of course, all of the trade papers.

THE SUNDAY MOVIES.

Bring on the Sunday Movies! Reel off what films are fit, for not a human being gets any harm from it. This is the proper past-time for morals and for purse, since those who do the movies might easily do worse. A good time with the pictures cuts out a bad time where the devil's Sunday service shows very little prayer. Of course, the Sunday movies are hardly quite so long as are some Sunday sermons,but is that very wrong! What is a Sunday movie except a place to go for those who are not able to see a high-priced show? They have no time or money to spend as many spend, and so the simple movie comes to them as a friend. A friend they need, for humans become unhuman when they merely drop their burdens to take them up again. In every human creature whose mind is fairly sane there is a need of pleasure to mingle with the pain which is a part of living, and no one ought to say this bit of Sunday pleasure will likely lead astray the thousands in attendance who for a time forget the burdens they have carried and have to carry yet. Bring on the Sunday movies for morals and for purse, and you who think them wicked see that you do no worse!

W. J. LAMPTON,
New York Herald.

"Mr. Vampire"

WITH

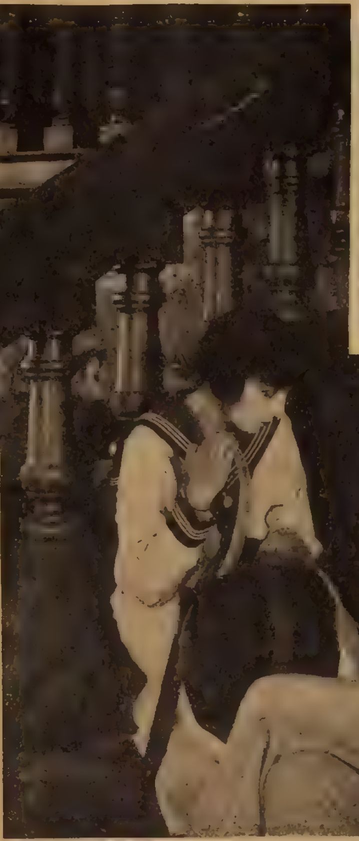
and ROBERTA WILSON

REX Two-Reel society drama. Written by Grace Cunard and produced by Francis Ford, with himself and Roberta Wilson in the leads.

Three striking scenes from the Rex Society Drama "Mr. Vampire."



WE don't pretend to know where Grace Cunard was when this picture was produced, or why she did not play the lead herself. Perhaps she thought that Francis Ford, who has loved her devotedly throughout so many serials, would never be able to resist her as he has to do in the present Rex two-reel drama, called "Mr. Vampire." So it happens that Roberta Wilson is called upon to play the part of the fascinated wife of another man, who is so lightly regarded by Francis Ford, as Mr. Vampire. Roberta proves a charming substitute for Mr. Ford's usual partner.

The story is original in theme, and its situations are well handled by an unusually competent cast. It begins with a prologue.

Edna's husband is unfaithful to her and has been accustomed to going out with the other woman. She is about to become a mother and broods over her loneliness. She finds a woman's card in her husband's pocket and becomes suspicious. She watches his office, sees a woman enter, and follows her in. The husband is caught in a compromising situation with the woman, so the wife demands a large sum of money to spend on the expected child.

CAST.

The Husband	Pete Gerald
The Wife	Edna Maison
The Vampire Man	Francis Ford
The Other Woman	Mme. Bourgeois
Mr. Brooks	Jack Holt
His Wife	Roberta Wilson
The Maid	Elsie Maison

Twenty-five years later the son is known as the Vampire because of his hatred of women. Born while his mother was embittered by her experience, his hatred for women is almost uncanny. The Vampire attends a house party and is shunned by the men, but much sought after by the women. It is strange that though he hates women, they invariably seek him out. One of the married women at the party takes a violent fancy to Mr. Vampire, which causes comment.

The maid at the house has taken a liking to the strange Vampire, who, on several occasions has spoken kindly to her. Mrs. Brooks, the married woman in the case, goes to his room, intending to leave a note for him. The maid is in a room near by and hears her enter. Brooks has suspected that his wife is pursuing the Vampire and, securing a revolver, follows her. The Vampire Man comes into his room, finds the note and reads it. The wife, meanwhile, has not had a chance to get out and hides behind some curtains. The maid, too, comes in and hides. Brooks forces his way into the room and threatens to kill the Vampire Man, telling him that he knows that Mrs. Brooks is hidden there. He is about to shoot, when the maid comes from behind the curtains. Brooks thinks that he is mistaken and apologizes.

CAMERAMEN of news weeklies have reason to think that they bear charmed lives. At least they risk them as readily as if each of them had the proverbial cat's allowance. The latest death-defying stunt was performed by "Double M." Flanders of the particularly daring staff of the Animated Weekly Cameramen. He was one of the three who were present at the disastrous race at the Uniontown track, Pittsburgh, which was run on the Saturday after Thanksgiving Day for the Universal Film Trophy, and which resulted in such terrible loss of life. A few days before the race, "Double M" had an inspiration and proceeded to carry it into action. It was his idea to get pictures of a race under actual racing conditions, as it looks to the participants. So, with his camera, he allowed himself to be strapped to the back of Frank Galvin's car, facing to the rear. Galvin is the driver whose car later caused the death of the mechanician, Weigle, of Hughie Hughes and of Galvin himself, who died in the hospital of his injuries.

Flanders asked Galvin to speed the machine up to ninety miles an hour, and all the time he ground steadily, while Chevrolet, winner of the race for the cup, and John De Palma staged a race behind him on the track, exactly like the real thing. Similar stunts of this kind have been attempted before, but this was the first time that pictures have been taken from a car going at ninety miles an hour, and they are unique.

The day of the race, Buchanan, of the Animated, was accidentally filming Hughes, after his miraculous rescue, when Galvin's car knocked the machine from his hand. The machine was wrecked, with the exception of the film box itself, which by some marvelous chance was preserved with its priceless contents. Buchanan escaped death by a matter of about two inches.

OPENING OF CONGRESS.

THE Animated Weekly, Number 50, contains views of the opening of Congress, with close-ups of some of the most conspicuous figures in the nation's legislature. We see Speaker Champ Clark and Congressman "Jim" Mann, and Senators Kerby, of Arkansas and Shepard of Texas, who live in the same town and on the same street of the town called Texarkana, and yet are representatives of two different States. Senator Tom Taggart of Indiana is shown, and the scene closes with a picture of "Uncle Joe" Cannon, eighty-one years "young," who predicts a great Republican majority in 1918!

ELEPHANT GOES SHOPPING.

THE baby elephant of the Hip-Hip-Hoorah Company found himselfin need of new foot-gear in Boston, Mass., the other day, and went to a department store to buy a new pair of shoes. The Animated Weekly cameraman thought that a picture of a pachyderm out shopping like a lady might be interesting to Universal patrons, so he joined the party long enough to get some pictures of the expedition. Buying shoes for two feet is bad enough at the present cost of footwear, but buying for four is just twice as bad. The Animated Weekly No. 50 shows how an elephant is fitted with new boots.

CLAIRE McDOWELL in "MIXED BLOOD"

RED FEATHER Photoplay, written by the well known playwright and actor, Willard Mack. Adapted for the screen by J. Grubb Alexander, and produced by Charles Swickard, with Claire McDowell starred, and Roy Stewart and George Beranger in her support. A story of the blending of Mexican and Irish strains in a beautiful girl of the border.

CLAIRE McDOWELL is a name which needs no introduction to the patrons of the screen. She joined the Universal some months ago, and has appeared in many pictures, notably in the Egyptian phantasy called "The Caravan," staged by Raymond Wells, in which she made a great hit. This is the first feature film in which she has had the stellar role, and she handles her opportunity like the artist she is.

The story is a study of the result of blending Mexican and Irish strains, and was written by Willard Mack and produced by Charles Swickard, from the script by J. G. Alexander. In it Miss McDowell has the role of a border Carmen, a creature of swift moods, hot passions, and wild caprices, who, however, proves her possession of "white blood" in the end, by her devotion and self-sacrifice in the face of deadly danger. Mr. Mack is an accomplished playwright and an actor of reputation, and he knows the theatre inside and out. He proves this in the construction of this picture, which is dramatic from beginning to end. Director Swickard has given this fine plot a series of settings which are beautiful and effective enough to be used as the backgrounds for paintings of border life. Miss McDowell has brought all her temperament and her artistry to the interpretation of the character of the Mexican-Irish Nita, and she is well supported by Roy Stewart and George Beranger, both of whom have long since won their spurs as Universal actors. The story in brief is as follows:

Jim bluffs Nita.

Just over the American side of the Mexican border, Big Jim Burmister, the sheriff, kept law and order, being both feared and hated by the Mexicans who were thus forced to keep within the bounds.

Conducting the saloon and gambling hall is Joe Nagle, who makes it his business to become acquainted with all strangers, especially if they have money. His devoted slave, who is also his faro dealer, is "Blootch" White. In his dog-like way, he is much attached to Lottie Nagle, who bears the surname of the saloonkeeper by courtesy only. Lottie is growing old, and so is losing her hold upon Joe.

The Valyez family, the newest arrivals in the little town are a source of interest to all; the girl, Nita whose Mexican father is dead, has inherited a great many of his traits, much to the disappointment of her Irish mother.

Carlos, a gambler and a bully, is enamored of the girl and although the mother advises Nita to forbid him the house, still the girl accepts his attentions. His ardent wooing almost wins her, but at the last moment her contrary nature causes her to turn upon him with angry vehemence.

Carlos, angered, returns to the saloon. He starts drinking, and before long he is shooting up the place. He is arrested by Jim, who, as the only magistrate in the place, imposes a fine or imprisonment for a year. Carlos, having no money, is forced to accept the latter alternative. When Nita hears of this she hastens to the saloon and soundly berates Jim, who is depressed because he has just received word that the nearest town across the border had become infested with the plague. Joe Nagle notices the fire of Nita's anger and gives her the money to pay the fine of Carlos, thus thinking to win her heart.

Lottie jealously watches this, and later overhears Joe telling "Blootch" to "get Carlos" by accusing him of cheating. She warns Carlos and gives him a gun. She has seen the notice of the plague and conceals it so that it does not become public. When "Blootch" accuses Carlos of cheating the latter pulls his gun and kills the faro dealer. Then Lottie whispers to him to take his horse and Nita and go across the border, though she knows she is sending them to brave infection.

Top—Nita meets Big Jim.
Centre—Lottie sends Carlos across the border.
Lower—Jim pays tribute to Nita.

Meantime, Joe has been making love to Nita, but she repulses his advances. It is Big Jim who keeps him from annoying her further. Jim himself has fallen a victim to her charms.

Carlos goes to the cabin of Nita, telling her that he has killed the faro dealer and that they must flee; but at the last moment she does not want to leave her mother. While they are arguing Big Jim raps upon the door. Nita hides Carlos in a closet. Then Jim plays upon her jealousy and intimates that Carlos has been having an affair with another girl. She grasps Jim's gun and shoots toward the closet, but on the instant is sorry for her act. Jim, realizing that she loves Carlos, goes outside. When Nita opens the closet she finds it empty, as Carlos has escaped through the thatched roof.

As Jim is waiting outside, Carlos sneaks along the roof and shoots him. Then he rushes down to Nita, and, with sheer force compels the fainting girl to accompany him. They have just gone when her mother returns and bandages Jim's wound. Though weak from loss of blood, he takes up the pursuit of Carlos and Nita. When he arrives, after a day's pursuit, he finds Carlos dying,a victim of the plague, while Nita is caring for him. Thinking that she loves the Mexican, Jim leaves for the border, but before he has gone far he falls from his horse, where he is found later by Nita, who has come to seek him, realizing that she loves him.

"THE PURPLE MASK" NEXT WEEK

The best kind of a Christmas present is the one which gives pleasure long after the celebration of the day is over. That's the kind of present that the Universal is offering its patrons in the new serial, "The Purple Mask." Grace Cunard and Francis Ford have put the best work of which they are capable into this serial, and everyone knows what that means. The story of the first episode of this super-serial will appear in the next issue of the Weekly, and will be found tremendously interesting even to read. Imagine what it will be like on the screen!

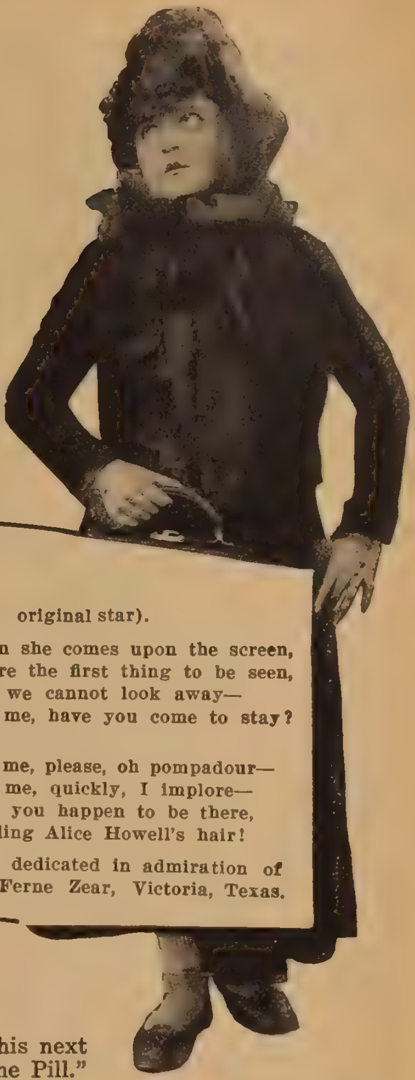
L-Ko Gossip



"TWINKLE, TWINKLE, POMPADOUR"

(With apologies to the original star).

Twinkle, twinkle, pompadour,
Tell me, please, what you are for,
Up on Alice Howell's head,
Like a fuzzy feather-bed!

It is not quite fair, I say,
For you so to "hog the play,"
For when you have caught our glance,
Alice doesn't have a chance.

When she comes upon the screen,
You're the first thing to be seen,
And we cannot look away—
Tell me, have you come to stay?

Tell me, please, oh pompadour—
Tell me, quickly, I implore—
How you happen to be there,
Spoiling Alice Howell's hair!

Written and dedicated in admiration of Alice Howell by Ferne Zear, Victoria, Texas.

Dan Russell.

THIS is a page of L-KO gossip from the studio where they work so hard at the serious business of fun-making. Alice Howell, the comedienne pre-eminent of the screen, brings us a poem written by a Texas admirer of her luxuriant pompadour. Alice is preparing a New Year's gift for the lovers of her peculiar style of comedy, which will raise her pedestal as Queen of the Comedy-film several feet higher. She doesn't intend to give away the secret prematurely, but she consents to say that in this coming picture she is going to reach heights which she has never approached before. She takes a balloon to get there.

DAN RUSSELL made his last appearance in "Murdered by Mistake," a sad, sad picture of an interrupted suicide. His next one will be still more pathetic. Its locale (as they say in the war news) is a steamer. Poor Dan is very, very heartsick in the story. And you know what happens when you are heartsick on a steamer.

Lucille Hutton is astonished at her popularity.

PHIL DUNHAM starts a long trip, in his next picture, "On the Trail of the Lonesome Pill." His pursuit of the illusive granule takes him to the Celestial Empire. There he meets Lucille Hutton, a vision of Chinese heavenliness. Their adventures are fast and furious, and take them in and out of a fish-pond among other things, of which Phil is made the Celestial guardian. Lucille is an unwilling captive in the household of a Chinese potentate, and she sees a chance of rescue in Phil, who is a born squire of dames. They change clothes, and as Phil is wearing his "janitor" outfit the result is not extremely becoming to Lucille. She takes his place as keeper of the fish-pond, and her ideas on the gentle art of Isaac Walton are as remarkable as Phil's.

"THE IVY AND THE OAK"

By

REGINALD WRIGHT KAUFFMANN

REX Two-Reel Society Drama, Featuring Dorothy Davenport and Lee Hill. Directed by Donald McDonald.

Scene from Nina's past.

Stoddard meets Ivy.

Nina comes for the bonds.

CAST.

Stoddard	Lee Hill
Denton	Clyde Benson
Edward	T. D. Crittenden
Ivy	Dorothy Davenport
Nina	Lillian Concord

REGINALD WRIGHT KAUFFMAN is one of the important names in American literature, and when a photoplay from his pen appears, the fact is worthy of note. Mr. Kauffman is the author of many novels dealing with sociological problems in a big, human way. His "House of Bondage," which is his best-known book, had a great success in this country, and has been translated into more than a dozen languages. To gain the material for it, he lived for months in the slums of New York City, studying conditions at first-hand. This is not his first appearance as an author of a Universal scenario, for, last year, he suggested one of the episodes of the serial "Graft." It is another human problem upon which he touches in this Rex two-reel picture which was produced by Donald McDonald, with Lee Hill and Dorothy Davenport in the leads. This is the question of the "double standard" for men and women. Though Mr. Kauffman offers no explicit solution, the ending which he has given to the story leaves not much doubt as to his own sentiments on the vexed question.

Stoddard, who had graduated in law but never practiced, at his thirtieth birthday finds himself bored with life. He is in a frame of mind in which he cannot have faith in any one, not even the girl with whom he is in love. His friend, Denton, likens the friendship of Stoddard and his sweetheart, Nina, who is a clever actress, to the story of Ivy and the Oak.

Stoddard broods over the simile; at last he determines to ask Nina to tell him of her past life, but when he does so, she says that she has as much right to know of his past as he has hers. He will not take this for an answer, and finally she tells her experience. When she has finished, Stoddard informs her that their friendship is at an end. Brokenhearted, she accepts the ultimatum.

Stoddard seeks out his father's friend, Edward, a practicing attorney, and enters partnership with him, but first takes a month's vacation in the country. There he meets Ivy, a sweet country girl, and later they marry and return to the city.

Ivy proves to be of the vampire type, but so long as Stoddard can procure for her all her heart's desires, she is happy. The time comes when Stoddard is practically ruined; still not daring to refuse her slightest wish, he takes some bonds from the firm's safe—of course, with the intention of replacing them.

Later, the owner of the bonds, who is none other than the actress Nina, calls for them. To the astonishment of Edward, the bonds are missing. As he is about to call detectives, Stoddard rushes in. He has come from a stormy scene in which he has told Ivy of his ruin. She has decided that since he cannot provide her with luxuries, they must part.

Stoddard and Nina are surprised to see each other, but he confesses the theft of the bonds. He says that he did not know that they belonged to her. Begging her forgiveness, he promises to return them. She forgives him and signifies her willingness to share her lot with him, even though he is ruined.

MAN SHAVES, LOSES JOB.

CHARLES HICKMAN, assistant director for Allan J. Holubar at Universal City, selected for a part in "Stronger Than Steel," a two-reel Laemmle drama by George Bronson Howard, "a man with bushy whiskers" as a distinct type to illustrate this remarkable story. He was the exact type, but it was the first time the man had worked in pictures. That night he drew his pay check, cashed it and proceeded to buy a shave.

He appeared the next morning minus the whiskers and found Hickman plus a large quantity of words. As a result, it was necessary to build whiskers on the man's face in order to finish the picture. Nobody could take his place, and Holubar himself had to make the man up.

"Little Partner"

UNIVERSAL Special Feature in three reels, featuring Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon. Written by Calder Johnston and produced by William Worthington.

CAST.

"Sunny" Lewis	Agnes Vernon
James Allis	Franklyn Farnum
Frank Monroe	Wm. J. Ran
Bill Lewis	Clyde Benson
Mrs. Beacon	Adele Farrington
Reggie	Arthur Hoyt

Sunny hears news of her father's death.

Mrs. Beacon urges Reggie to make up to Sunny.

"LITTLE PARTNER," written by Calder Johnston and produced by William Worthington, is the sort of a picture which makes you feel sorry when it ends. There is plenty of material in it for a five-reeler, and you cannot help regretting that you do not see more of the charming little "Sunny" Lewis, and her big partners, Jim and Frank. Picture fans will acknowledge that this is an unusual feeling. How many times has it happened that you have left a picture theatre wishing that there had been more of a certain story? So many producers have a way of squeezing the very last drop out of a situation, and leaving nothing at all to the imagination. But William Worthington has not done this, in making this Universal Special. Of course he was helped by a real five-reel feature cast. Agnes Vernon and Franklyn Farnum, to say nothing of Adele Farrington, are used to seeing themselves announced as the featured players of five-reel photoplays. When they appear together on a program release, you may be sure that there is a special treat before you. But after all, "the play's the thing," and the best stars on earth cannot do much without a good story. Calder Johnston gave them one this time, and here it is:

James Allis and Frank Monroe are partners and strike it rich. On their way to town they stop at Bill Lewis' cabin where he offers them hospitality. Lewis is rather blue, for he has not been able to make a strike, and yet is anxious to send for his little daughter, "Sunny." He shows the partners her photo which wins their hearts.

Lewis finally decides that he will hold up the stage, and send the money to "Sunny," telling her that he has made a rich strike. The boys in camp start out to look for the bandit. Jim discovers the picture of "Sunny" on the spot. They capture Lewis and he has to pay the death penalty. He exacts a promise from the boys that his little girl shall never know how he died.

Jim and Frank tell "Sunny" that her father died in the discharge of his duty and laud him as a brave man. Some time later, the partners decide to send her East to school, telling her that her father left a very valuable mine.

One day, Mrs. Beacon, her aunt, reads in the paper that Sunny has inherited a valuable mine from her father and immediately she invites the girl to visit her. Her son, Reggie, tries his best to win the girl for her money; but she has a strong aversion to him.

Jim decides that he will investigate for himself this Mrs. Beacon. He thinks that "Sunny" is in love with Reggie. He soon comes to the conclusion that it is "Sunny's" money they are after. He sends her a fake telegram, saying that the mine has panned out. "Sunny" asks Jim to take her home with him instead of returning to college, and he explains to the girl what he has done. Arrived at the camp, Frank tries to make love to the girl, but she tells him that she loves Jim—so the two men dissolve partnership and Frank goes his lonely way.

UNIVERSAL COMEDIANS ONLY ONES ON VANDERBILT CUP RACE TRACK.

FOR the first time in the history of automobile racing, an actor in make-up officiated as one of the managers of the course and also as a right-hand man of the chairman of the contest. In addition he worked before the camera in a comedy. The event was the Vanderbilt Cup classic.

This honor fell to Lee Moran of the Universal Nestor Company, who, through the efforts of Beverly Griffith of Universal City, was designated an official of the race and assistant to Richard Kennerdell, chairman of the Contest Board. The Nestor Company, headed by Moran and Eddie Lyons with Edith Roberts as the ingenue and supported by Harry Nolan, Fred Gamble and others of the Universal stock company made a comedy, "The Honest Inventor's Triumph," on the track while the big race was in progress. It was the only photoplay company permitted to work on the course and the members occupied a special box while not working in the scenes. In addition, they helped to entertain the crowd of 65,000 people present at the big race.

Eddie used a light, stripped car for the comedy work and was chased through the crowd by Moran and Nolan on a tandem bicycle.

Exporters Prevented from Grafting "Graft"

LAWYERS from Universal stop men attempting to send thirty reels of the great "Graft" serial to South America with all titles and subtitles changed into Spanish text. Now in hands of U. S. Marshall.

CONTRARY to expectation, the apprehension and arrest of Hugo Mainthal on a charge of receiving motion picture films stolen from the Twenty-third Street Universal Exchange has not had the effect of stopping altogether the losses either from the Universal or from other companies which have ben going on for some time. This fact was brought out on Saturday, December 2, when W. V. Saxe, representing Stanchfield and Levy, counsel for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Bluebird Photo Plays (Inc.), recovered thirty reels of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's serial, "Graft." They were being shipped by Edward Mortorell, No. 8 Bridge street, in Brooklyn. Unfortunately for Mortorell, the broker happened to be a representative of Saxe, the lawyer. They are now in possession of the U. S. Marshall.

The recovery of these "Graft" films goes a long way toward solving the problem which confronted the attorneys and the detectives when it was first discovered that films were being "lost" in the different exchanges. Several indignant complaints had come from Cuba and South America from exhibitors who were using Universal service and renting from the Universal representatives in these countries. These exhibitors averred that their competitors were using Universal serials and other Universal pictures in opposition to them, whereas when they rented they were supposed to have exclusive rights in their territory. It was discovered that all the titles and sub-titles in the episodes of "Graft" had been changed into Spanish text, and it is supposed that they were to be sold to independent dealers in Cuba and South America.

Last Tuesday two more films were recovered by Mr. Saxe. These two were Bluebirds, namely "Elusive Isabel" and "John Needham's Double," each in five reels. They were in the possession of a man named George Blair.

It will be remembered that Aaron Dreyer, a former shipping clerk in the Twenty-third Street Exchange, confessed to the theft of thirty-five films and implicated Mainthal in the receipt of them. Investigations prior to this had been carried on so secretly and so successfully that there was nothing else for Dreyer to do but to confess, and this has prevented his sentence thus far. It is understood that he has made an offer to turn state's evidence, and the Universal expects through this agency to be able to apprehend numerous other persons on his evidence.

Mr. Saxe has thought all along that the thefts which had been going on were international in character, and that they would be made the concern of the federal courts as soon as he was able to prove wilful infringement of copyright. This having been done, a world-wide investigation will probably be instituted on the initiative of the Universal, which not only will deal with Universal films, but will take in all the other film companies in the New York market which have been subjected to the same thefts as the Universal.

It is astonishing that the perpetrators should have been so bold as to continue almost openly and boldly their operations after the arrest and conviction of Mainthal and Dreyer. Such seems to be the case, however, and it opens up the possibility of even greater buccaneering of films than was at first supposed to be possible. The evidence which Dreyer can probably give will go a long way toward implicating those whom the United States and other authorities are now looking for, and the Universal has offered every assistance in its power to the federal authorities to assist them in their investigations.

GOVERNOR LISTER OF WASHINGTON ENJOYS VISIT TO UNIVERSAL CITY.

"This certain was worth coming a long distance to see, and I must say I have enjoyed every minute of my stay," said Governor Ernest Lister of Washington at Universay City, one day last week, as he stepped into his car and departed for Los Angeles, where he boarded the train for the north. The Governor had come to Universal City with Mrs. Lister, Frank M. Lamborn, public printer of the northern State, and a party of Los Angeles friends early in the afternoon and so interested were the visitors that they did not leave the plant until darkness had fallen.

Governor Lister and the members of his party were escorted about the various stages and through the numerous departments, and the executive, evincing great interest in all he witnessed. He was greatly impressed with the multifarious activities of the motion picture municipality and the extent of the plant, which, he said, was one of the most remarkable places he had ever visited.

During his stay at Universal City, Governor Lister met a number of former Washingtonians, among them Directors Henry McRae, Jack Conway, Raymond Wells, Joseph De Grasse, Allen Curtis, Assistant Director Richard Donaldson and Milton Loryea, official photographer for the Big U., who for many years was a resident of Spokane, Washington.

Governor Lister was pleased to renew his acquaintance with Director McRae, whom he knew while the producer of photoplays with unusual thrills was conducting the Tacoma Stock Company at the Tacoma Theatre a half dozen years ago. The Governor found McRae engaged in directing several sensational scenes for the Universal's serial "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," and when he visited Director Wells, found the latter filming night scenes under the electric lights for a strong dramatic feature entitled "The Killer."

Jack Mulhall, Wells' star player, enacts the name role in this production, and the way he killed off the men who interfered with his plans caused the Governor to remark, "We would not let him kill them like that in Tacoma or Seattle or Spokane—we'd get him quickly. Gracious me! but you folks are slow down here," said the Governor with a little laugh as he winked at the director. Pictures of Washington's chief executive and his party were taken while they visited the set being used by Director Conway, who was making scenes for "Polly-Ooly," in which dainty Ella Hall, popular star, plays the leading role.

Governor Lister said that he realized what an important industry the motion picture business had become and said he thought that the pictures were serving an excellent purpose in the world in addition to entertaining the millions. He said the manufacturers were to be congratulated on the great improvement in the quality of the pictures, especially during the past year or so, and for the attention that now was being given to the educational films—"The more of these the better for the world in general," said Governor Lister continuing, "there are splendid opportunities with this much-desired material and it is, indeed, very gratifying to see that the various companies are enlarging in this direction."

Other notables who visited Universal City this week were Count and

PEARCE JOINS UNIVERSAL.

GEORGE C. PEARCE, who played the "king" in "Three Weeks" on the speaking stage has joined the Universal.

Pearce was born in New York City and educated at Trinity School for the Episcopal ministry. From the age of eleven to sixteen he was a popular boy soprano, singing in all the principal churches in New York.

Some few years later Henry E. Dixey, hearing him sing, engaged him as a leading tenor for his summer opera company at the Old Globe Theatre, Boston. He soon gained recognition not only of his voice but of his dramatic ability.

After several seasons as leading tenor in repertoire opera he joined the late Charles Frohman's Empire Theatre Stock Company, where he remained six years playing light comedy in all the productions made at the Empire during that time. He appeared in such plays as "Under the Red Robe," "The Conquerors," "My Lady's Lord," "Lord and Lady Algy," "His Excellency, the Governor," "Brother Officers," and others.

The Empire stock company at that time included Henry Miller, William Faversham, Robert Edeson, William Farnum, Viola Allen, Ida Conquest, May Robson, Mrs. Whiffen, Margaret Anglin, and others.

Leaving Henry Miller's company while playing "The Rainbow" he joined the Biograph, where he remained two years. His latest appearance is in "The Taint of Fear."

TO GIVE PLAY IN YIDDISH.

FOR the benefit of Russian-Jewish sufferers in the European war zone it is planned to present some well-known play in Yiddish at one of the Los Angeles theatres in the near future.

Harry Mann, well-known character actor at Universal City, will have charge of the production and play one of the leading roles.

Mann for a number of years was a prominent player in one of the large Jewish theatres in New York, but of late years has devoted his time to playing before the camera and writing photoplays.

THE TALE OF A DOG.

DIRECTOR W. W. Beaudine, of the Universal comedy company, is resolved never again to have a dog among his troup of players. "And thereby hangs a tale." A canine known as Snoozer was used recently in Beaudine's picture, "No Dogs Allowed." So also was a stuffed cat used as a "prop."

Every time Snoozer came near the stuffed cat he appeared to be annoyed. The feline's lack of motion and apparent indifference to him seemed to exasperate the dog. He finally made bold to strike at it and finding no resistance, seized the cat in his teeth and scampered off the set. That was the last seen of Snoozer for three hours, during which time he was badly needed for half a dozen scenes by Director Beaudine. Assistant Director Murphy finally located the dog in a corner of the big electric light studio, and the cat—it literally had had "the stuffing knocked out of it."

GRIFFITH LOST AT SEA.

BEVERLY GRIFFITH, of Universal City, is thanking his lucky stars that he is not either at the bottom of the Pacific or floating helplessly on the ocean, after his experience in returning to San Pedro, California, from Catalina Island in a dense fog.

Director Henry McRae, who was producing the two-reel Bison drama, "Giant Powder," sent a radio message from Catalina Island to Universal City for additional film and two hundred and fifty pounds of black powder. The message was received at 1:45 P. M. and at 2:25 P. M. Griffith reached San Pedro with the supplies, and in an eight-cylinder power boat reached Catalina Island at 3:55 P. M.

He started immediately upon the journey to San Pedro and when about half way the launch became enveloped in a dense fog.

The troubles of Griffith and the two members of the crew were multiplied by the engine getting out of order and stopping and the heavy waves breaking over the little vessel.

For three hours and a half they tossed helplessly in the heavy sea and by baling succeeded in keeping the vessel afloat. They had no idea whether they were washing toward shore or the open sea.

Fortunately, just as the engine was started again Griffith caught sight of the big lighthouse at San Pedro and by 7:30 P. M. they were inside the harbor, wet, cold, hungry and, as Griffith admits, thoroughly frightened.

GERRARD CLIMBS A TREE TO ESCAPE BLOODHOUNDS.

DOUGLAS GERRARD, motion picture director and actor, is congratulating himself today upon his narrow escape from being torn to pieces by four bloodhounds.

The animals were being used by Gerrard in Passada yesterday in connection with scenes for the Imp drama, "In the Dead o' Night," in which Gerrard, who plays the part of an escaped convict, was being hunted by the dogs.

For some unaccountable reason the owner of the animals was unable to halt them at the proper moment in the chase and Gerrard and the producer eluded them only by quickly climbing a nearby tree.

Allen Watt, the assistant director, was attacked by the brutes after they had been roped, but fortunately escaped with only a few scratches.

THROUGH WITH FIGHTING.

WHEN the steamship Rotorua put into Newport News the other day for coal, she had on board some interesting passengers. These were one hundred and two officers and men, who "having done their bit" are discharged from the British army and invalided home. The ship was en route from England to Australia and New Zeland, which these men call home. All of them have served with the Allies since the beginning of the war, at first in the Dardanelles, and later on the French front. All have received wounds which unfit them for further service, and are "out of it" for good. But they were a very cheerful lot, and most of them appeared very "fit" with the exception of those who have lost a limb. They were dressed in field uniforms, minus their weapons, and each man wore on his shoulder-strap a red stripe which indicated that he was no longer fit for service. They were under the command of several officers, also discharged, and until they arrive at their homes they will be under military discipline. They were photographed for Number 50 of the Animated Weekly.

Countess Siegfried Raben of Denmark. These titled personages said they were touring the country and had come to Southern California especially to see the capital of the film world.

The Countess was as happy as a little girl with her first doll as she went from set to set on the various stages. Before leaving, Count Raben said that it certainly was well worth traveling this far to make the trip through the wonderful plant. "Be assured," said the Danish visitor, "I shall gladly tell my friends that I have seen the eighth wonder of the world in your Universal City."

"The HONOR OF MARY BLAKE"

Mary learns the truth of her marriage.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written by John C. Brownell and produced by Edwin Stevens, with Violet Mersereau as his star. The story of a little actress stranded in a country town and how she wins her way at last.

Mary resolves to go away forever.

THIS is the first Bluebird Photoplay in which the new combination of Violet Mersereau, as star, and Edwin Stevens, as director, has appeared. This is the only Bluebird company working in the East, at the big Leonia studio, but they are producing fine things, as every one who sees this picture will readily grant. A very human story from the pen of John C. Brownell has been given a most realistic setting by Edwin Stevens, while the leading role, "Mary Blake," is one which suits Violet Mersereau down to the ground. Miss Mersereau only needs a chance to captivate us, and in this picture she has been provided with it.

From the pictorial side she presents a series of delightful pictures in the various costumes which the script gives her opportunity to wear, especially in the doublet and hose of Shakespeare's "Rosalind," in which she is a fascinating vision. She has opportunity for the portrayal of more than the kittenish graces of a playful child, for the part touches depths of emotion in which she proves herself equally at home. She is supported by a carefully selected cast, headed by Sidney Mason, who brings a sincerity and earnestness to his performance of the role of Kirk Hardy which will win him many friends.

Mary Blake is a little ingenue who is almost at the end of her resources. She is out of a job and alone in New York. An offer from the agent, Richard Kearney, of a part in a Broadway production reaches her. She does not suspect that there is a string tied to it and goes to his office. He treats her to the usual thing, but she succeeds in escaping. The next morning he sends her a letter of abject apology and asks her to be his wife. Her friend Flossie urges her to "take a chance," and she decides to risk it. There is a ceremony of marriage and she goes with him to his home. There they find his real wife, who has returned from a trip abroad, and who utterly misunderstands the situation and treats Mary like the dirt under her feet. She at once institutes divorce proceedings, naming Mary as correspondent. Mary does not know of this; she goes, heart-broken with disappointment, back to the Manhattan Repertoire Company, which is starting out on a tour of one-night stands.

They arrive at the town of Hillsdale. Mary goes for a walk in the woods and drinks from the stream. She is attacked by a tramp and rescued by Kirk Hardy, who has seen her performance of Rosalind, and is half in love with her already. He has called down upon himself the reprobation of the village gossips for going to the theatre at all. Mary's drink of the water proves costly. She contracts a fever and is left behind when the company goes on. She is very lonely in the shabby hotel room, with the wretched food which the skin-flint of a proprietor provides. Kirk goes to see her and sends in proper food. They fall in love with each other and are married.

Kirk brings his wife home to his mother, who finds her greatest pleasure in the troubles of other people. Mrs. Hardy receives an actress wife with the coldness which might have been expected of her. Mary tries to be of help to her, but her ideas of housekeeping don't suit Mrs. Hardy. Kirk, however, is satisfied. Mary dresses up as Rosalind one day to surprise him and surprises his mother instead. Mrs. Hardy is horrified.

Mary has tried to tell the story of Kearney's persecution of her to Kirk, but he will not listen to her. Kearney has been divorced by his wife and goes in search of Mary. He traces her to the Manhattan Repertoire Company and gets news of her whereabouts from Mary's friend. Flossie Peyton. He follows Mary to Hillsdale. She opens the door to him at the farmhouse and tells him that she is happily married. He seizes her in his arms, in spite of her protestations, and kisses her. This is seen by Mrs. Hardy, who, though she sees Mary's efforts to repulse the man, reports the thing in the most unfavorable light to her son. Mary falls sobbing on the sofa, and when Kirk accuses her she tries to explain to him, but he will not listen. He goes out, furious, to find Kearney.

The agent is at the hotel, drinking in the bar with some of the riff-raff of the town. Kirk insults him and Kearney draws a gun on him. They fight and Kirk shoots the man, apparently fatally. He goes home to the farmhouse and tells Mary that he has killed her lover, and that she had better go to him. With some wild idea of saving Kirk, Mary rushes to the hotel. Here the doctors tell her that Kearney has a chance if he has constant care. In order to save Kirk from the consequences of his action Mary devotes herself to the nursing of Kearney. She is at last rewarded for her sacrifice, as Kearney is pronounced out of danger. He sends for the minister, Mr. Bliss, and begs him to go to Kirk and make him see what a wonderful wife he has in Mary. Mr. Bliss goes to the farm and succeeds in persuading Mrs. Hardy of the harshness of her judgement. Mrs. Hardy is conscience stricken, for she realizes that Mary has been the victim all along, and that she (Mrs. Hardy) has deliberately allowed Kirk to think the worst of his little wife. She determines to confess the truth. Mary, who knows nothing of this, has made up her mind to leave Hillsdale forever. She goes to the woods where she met Kirk, for the last time. He follows her and tells her that he has been in the wrong and persuades her to give him another chance. As she loves him, she forgives him and returns to the farm in perfect happiness. This is an outline of the story upon which Miss Mersereau and Mr. Stevens have expended the full resources of their combined talent. The result is that rarity—a thoroughly satisfactory photoplay.

Paris Apaches Live Again in "The Purple Mask"

Fight of Gendarmes and Apaches in the famous Paris sewers.

THE atmosphere which Grace Cunard and Francis Ford have thrown around their newest serial described by one who has lived in Paris and knows at first hand how accurately it follows its original.

By PETER PEPPER

HOW can they do it again?" says the public when it hears that Grace Cunard and Francis Ford are starting another serial. They already have three of the conspicuous successes in the field of continued pictures to their credit, and it seems as if their invention must be exhausted. But no, they have no sooner finished "Peg o' the Ring," then their imagination is at work on another idea, and presently we read the welcome announcement: "New Universal Serial, with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford," and we realize that the indefatigable pair have been at it again.

This time they come forward with an offering which promises to be the best ever. It is called "The Purple Mask," and the first installment will be released in Christmas week, just as "Liberty" comes to a triumphant conclusion. Its makers have realized that they had a big task before them, to beat previous Universal records in the field of the serial photoplay, but their invention has not failed them. They determined that the "stunt" serial had been done to death. That is to say, the serial which depended for its effect merely on the willingness of its devoted actors to take untold risks. They took a leaf out of Bluebird's book, and decided that the play should be "the thing." So they started with two real people, two characters as carefully drawn for the screen as those which an author portrays in a novel, and around them they wove a story which is as logical and well-devised as that of the most successful five-reeler.

They knew that plenty of action is an essential of all good serials, and in any case, it is impossible to imagine a Ford-Cunard picture without action. "The Purple Mask" will be found no exception to their rule. But the action has a "reason for being." It is not lugged in to bolster a weak plot. It is there because the development of the story demands it. An important feature of a serial is the background chosen for the characters. In this respect, Ford and Cunard have really outdone themselves. The story of "The Purple Mask" opens in Paris—before the war of course—when one of the unique points of interest of the French capital, was the existence of that lusty ruffian the "Apache," who made the streets of the poorer quarters of the city a terror to the respectable citizens; who turned the innocent parks of the city and woods of the suburbs into traps for the unwary; who had an organization as efficient and far reaching as the secret police of Russia, with heads of affairs who owned their own automobiles, and gave their orders with absolute confidence in their being carried out to the letter.

A characteristic of the Paris Apache was, that he did not look like one. He went about his furtive and deadly business clad in the guise of an ordinary French workman. When arrested by the police, he usually found it possible to give the most plausible account of himself. It was impossible to track him to his lair, for he did not seem to have one of those picturesque possessions. As a matter of fact, organized meeting places for the disposal of "loot" were located all over the city, but the chief point of concentration for the bands were outside the city limits, in the neighboring villages and outskirts of Paris itself. And even here, they were disguised as innocent "estaminets," as the little drinking-places in the country are called. The famous case of the automobile bandits who were finally located by the police will be remembered, and how their principal meeting- places, apparently innocent shops and cafes, were indicated to the initiated by the blue color of the outside woodwork.

The early episodes of the new serial take place among such scenes as these. The Apaches are shown in one of their Paris haunts, which has a secret entrance through the famous sewers of the city, which are one of the sights of the place. "Patricia Montez," the heroine, follows her aunt's butler, whom she has seen steal some valuable jewelry from her bedroom, to the Apache meeting-place, and cleverly recovers the valuables from him. The local color has been remarkably reproduced. An elaborate set, which all tourists who have visited them will recognize at once as part of the celebrated sewers, was constructed for the filming of these early scenes; and the underground meeting-place of the band is faithfully copied from the real thing. The costumes of the Apaches are not inventions; the corduroy trousers, short, shapeless coats, rough shirts, caps

The VERSATILITY OF VIOLET

AN INTERVIEW WITH THE DAINTY BLUEBIRD STAR

By MARJORIE HOWARD

WHEN Violet's voice called "Come in!" in response to my knock on the door of her dressing room at the Bluebird studio in Leonia, I entered and looked all over the place for Violet herself. All I saw was a very slight young man (no, a boy), with fair short curls all over his head, and wearing a pair of evening trousers of irreproachable cut, pumps and black silk socks, and a white dress shirt. This engaging young fellow was tying his tie with his back turned towards me. Then he turned, and behold Violet Mersereau, making up for her part in the new Bluebird which she is making with Edwin Stevens, and which is to be called "The Boy Girl." She certainly looked the part.

Having been a little actress, stranded from a road company, who marries a farmer, in her last picture, "The Honor of Mary Blake," she is now called upon to play a hoyden, brought up almost like a boy, in the company of grooms, jockeys and men of the turf. These two roles seem sufficiently diversified, but there are carping critics who declare that an ingenue has always and forever the same range of parts to play, whether she is in pictures or on the stage. Take a look at the four Bluebirds in which Violet has appeared, in order to refute such persons.

She was a ragged litle gutter-snipe in "The Great Problem," who turned into a woman under the influence, first of prosperity, and then of suffering. Then in "Broken Fetters" she was a missionary's daughter brought up in China and imported into this country hidden in a barrel. Since she began working with Mr. Stevens she has been an actress and a tom-boy. There's not much sameness about that, is there?

"I am awfully glad to see you," said the boy-girl, shaking hands, "but I hate to have you see me today. My eyes are so 'sun-burned'."

That is the graphic term which picture people use to express the disastrous effect of too much studio light on the eyes. And any one who has ever faced the green glare of the Cowper-Hewits will sympathize.

Miss Mersereau was very busy. She had to eat her luncheon, for one thing a trayful of the simplest kind of food which had been sent in from next door in charge of two little boys,

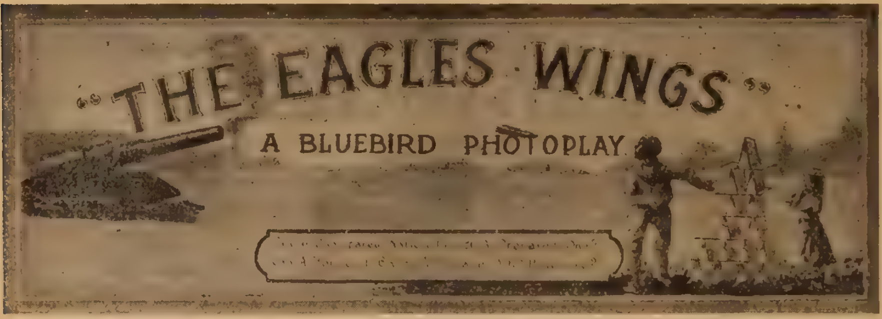
LOBBY DISPLAY AND BANNER SUGGESTIONS FOR "THE EAGLE'S WINGS"

An attractive lobby decoration very greatly reduced in reproduction.

SUCH excellent results have been obtained in Canada with lobby displays and banners manufactured by local firms for theatres showing Bluebirds, that the Moving Picture Weekly, at the suggestion of the Bluebird Company, has had a few suggestive designs drawn up for lobby displays and banners or pennants. These are roughly drawn, and no attempt has been made in these drawings for great artistic merit. The idea was the only thing considered.



Suggestion for a banner for front of house or across street.

In order to give all of the exchanges plenty of opportunity to try out these ideas, a film has been adopted which can be utilized longer than the regular Bluebird program release, for all the work in them has to be done in a week. Otherwise it crowds on the heels of the next release. "The Eagle's Wings," however, is a special, and it is for that reason that these displays were designed for this film.

The first drawing on the page indicates a lobby decoration which can be adapted to either the lobby, or the space over the front entrance in case the lobby is not adapted to so large a figure as this would be. The drawing, however, indicates a very striking group, if carried out with the animation which the artist intends. You will note an eagle's nest on the top of a crag, with a mother eagle hovering over it in an attitude of fierce defiance of the soldier below, and perfect preparedness to defend her own. This is the main idea of "The Eagle's Wings," and is very well illustrated in this drawing. It would be well also to put a sign, larger than the one in the scrollwork below, over the eagle, with the words "Eagle's Wings" on it.

On the opposite page will be found a lobby display which is more intricate, and will be more expensive as well, but correspondingly more effective. In the first place, a large American flag would have to be purchased, and in order to get the title in, paint the letter on a white piece of cardboard, and sew it on to the flag in the manner indicated.

The rest of this lobby display has reference to the first scene in "The Eagle's Wings," in which the audience is told that it requires six men working steadily at industrial pursuits to keep one soldier equipped, and in the field. For economy's sake, "and on account of the war," our artist has chosen five figures instead of seven, as in the film. He has a blacksmith, a shoemaker, a tailor, and a munitions maker, and two of these figures can be made mechanical by utilizing the device which is explained in the large line drawing below. This was intended for the blacksmith alone, but the same principal can be utilized with the shoemaker; also with the tailor on his bench, if desired. Any movement in a window display is calculated to catch the eye, and if a real anvil, or a fake one, with some kind of a device whereby a sound can be produced is obtained, the conjunction of movement and sound together should prove wonderfully effective.

Of course, this lobby display is going to cost some money, but on the other hand, it should be worth ten times the money which is put into it. The figures are to be drawn and painted on cardboard sheets—cheap paper boxboard will serve just as well as expensive cardboard. Put the edges together in such a way that they do not overlap, cutting them carefully so that they join without perceptible interstices. Then cut the cardboards in the shape of the drawing, and mount on wood one by a half inch. Use small shoe tacks with flat heads for tacking on to the wooden framework, and when all is completed, paint the design as shown in the cut on top of page 31.

These designs are offered more as an experiment than anything else, to see if the exhibitors appreciate suggestions of this kind for putting over regular Bluebird pictures. If they want them badly enough, the Bluebird company will run every week suggestions all drawn out as we have shown them on these two pages. Every effort will be made to keep the cost of them as low as possible, and to have them as easily made as is consistent with their effectiveness. The Bluebird Home Office will also appreciate it if every exhibitor will make an effort to use one or all of these suggestions, and would write a letter stating what success he had with them, and how effective he found them in his work for "The Eagle's Wings." For some time the Bluebird Publicity Department has been sending out ideas for putting over Bluebirds, and this week we start to incorporate these ideas in the Moving Picture Weekly, with two or three suggested for "The Right To Be Happy," the full story of which will be found in next week's Moving Picture Weekly. These ideas have not been sketched out, but each exhibitor can use them as he sees fit, and it is from ideas similar to this, but more elaborate, that a regular service of this kind would be built up by the Bluebird in case the exhibitors and exchangement want it.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS.

ALTHOUGH based upon Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol," Bluebird's production "The Right To Be Happy," is so full of heart interest and the gospel of good-will that every one of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year is the best day on which to show it. The story will be in the next Moving Picture Weekly.

If you have ever read the story, you will remember that Marley's ghost plays a most important part in it. You can use this idea to ballyhoo your presentation of "The Right To Be Happy."

Hire a man to play the part of the ghost. Dress him up in a white sheet. Have him paint his face a dead white and shade it as to give it a skull-like effect at a little distance. Chains should be twisted about his body and a short length should trail along the ground from each foot. Have him carry a pole sign on which the following copy is painted:

> DO YOU WANT TO KNOW
> HOW I LOST THE RIGHT > TO BE HAPPY?
> Visit the Theatre To-day!

Since this production urges us to give our fellowmen the benefit of the love and charity we all have in our hearts, you should make every effort

"IN THE DEAD O' NIGHT"

Gloria and her sweetheart.

Steve forces the doctor to change clothes with him.—Insert— Steve.

It is unusual for a director to play the villain in his own picture, when he has so remarkable a chance for "hero stuff," but Douglas Gerrard is rather an unusual sort of a fellow. He has certainly produced an unusual picture in this Imp mystery drama in which Ruth Clifford and George Beranger have the other principal roles. The chief situation in this story, written for Gerrard by Willis and Woods, is the scene in which the convict son, who has broken out of prison, makes his father's murderous physician don his own convict clothes, as the price of a chance to escape from the consequences of the crimes of attempted murder and forgery. This scene is handled so as to give a real thrill.

The story runs as follows:

IMP Two - Reel Mystery Drama. Written by Willis and Woods. Produced by Douglas Gerrard, who plays the villain in his own picture, with Ruth Clifford and George Beranger in the other roles. The story of a doctor who makes science aid his villainy.

CAST.

Steve Brogete	Geo. Beranger
Dr. Pierre Bouryonne,	Dougles Gerrard
Gloria Blain	Ruth Clifford
Adam Brogete	"Doc" Crane
Peters	T. Du Croe

Steve Brogete had been serving a term in prison. His millionaire father had long been failing and this was gloatingly watched by his unprincipled physician, Dr. Pierre Bouryonne, who decided to assist nature by putting some poisonous powder into the medicine. He then carefully substituted his own name for Steve's in the will of Brogete.

The poison failed in effect and the doctor determined to use chloroform. He is in the act of administering it when the handkerchief is rudely snatched from his hand. Terrified, he turns to confront Steve. Steve, behind the prison bars, has felt his father's need. By main strength he has escaped from prison and returned home. The astonished butler has let him in and taken him to his old room where he has donned fresh raiment.

Steve finds the forged will and confronts the doctor with the evidence of his guilt. For a time the doctor attempts to hold the upper hand, but soon sees that Steve is in earnest, and, begging for mercy, accepts the only course Steve offers—that of donning his convict clothing and endeavoring to make his escape.

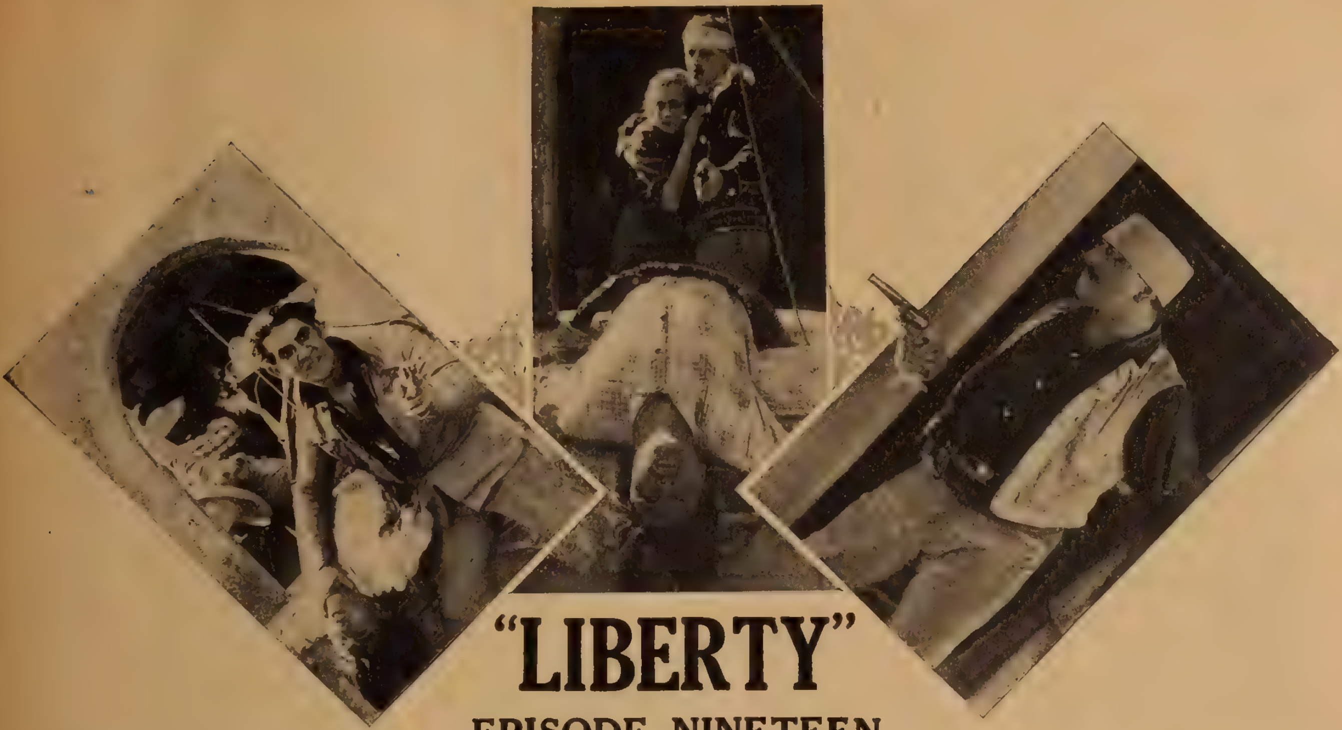
Steve then goes to his father and kneels by his side. In a few moments, Gloria Blain, his childhood sweetheart and his father's ward, comes into the room and kneels at the other side. When the old man awakens, he finds his two loved ones near him.

A short time after the sheriff appears to tell Steve that he has traced a convict to his very door. Steve says that a short time previously he heard some one rush through the house. The sheriff with his dogs takes up the trail at the front door; soon the dogs overtake the doctor, and when the sheriff arrives, the villain is dead.

AUTHORESS AND PRODUCER FRIENDS.

One of the most interested visitors recently at Universal City was Margaretta Tuttle whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post and page in the Ladies' Home Journal are well known to all readers of these publications. She spent several days at the studios watching the work and greeting many men and women of letters whom she met there.

Mrs. Tuttle and Lois Weber, the world's famous woman director, became great friends having so much in common. They spent many an afternoon together at tea and in talking over the literature and productions of the day.



"LIBERTY"

EPISODE NINETEEN

THE great serial, directed since the thirteenth episode by Henry McRae, nears its close, but still without divulging the outcome.

CAST.

Liberty Horton	Marie Walcamp
Pedro	Eddie Polo
Bob Rutledge	Jack Holt
Major Winston	Neal Hart
Pancho Lopez	G. Raymond Nye
Jose Leon	L. M. Wells
Senorita Travario	Hazel Buckham

THE nineteenth episode of the serial "Liberty," which has been directed since the thirteenth chapter by Henry McRae, brings the lovers, Liberty and Bob, together again, disposes of Jose Leon, who dies, giving the couple his blessing, and seems like the beginning of the end. The much-tried hero and heroine come at last within speaking distance of peace and prosperity after their many vicissitudes. Pedro brings the followers of Lopez to justice, shooting the last of them, and the great insurrection fails to accomplish its purpose.

Pedro and Liberty arrive at the Hacienda, in advance of Lopez and his men. Leon agrees to give them shelter. Bob and Liberty are overjoyed to meet again. As they are greeting each other a peon brings the news that Lopez and his men are arriving. Bob and the others go into the house and barricade one of the rooms, while Leon goes to meet the Mexicans.

Leon tells Lopez that Liberty and Pedro passed by and went on. Lopez believes him, but he says, "Did you so easily forgive her for killing Manuel, your son?" Leon is tremendously affected by the news and goes to demand the truth of Liberty. She explains how Theresa killed them both, and the old man is overcome.

Lopez discovers the deception which Leon has practised on him and returns to the Hacienda. His men surround the place and keep up a steady fire at the windows. Bob declares that he must go for ammunition. He steals out of the door, but is seen by Lopez, who pursues him. The two men have a duel with revolvers. Bob shoots the gun out of Lopez's hand, but tells him to pick it up again. Lopez does so, fires quickly and wounds Bob in the wrist.

Bob recovers sufficiently to shoot Pancho, he thinks fatally. The peons arrive and take the insurrecto leader into the house. They think him dead, and the women mourn over him. Jack is helped into the house. Pedro is brought into the room where Leon lies mortally wounded on the bed. Liberty is supporting his head. Lopez lies on the floor attended by the women. Leon sends Pedro for his strong box. He realizes that he is dying and wishes, according to the will of Liberty's father, to give his consent to her marriage with Bob, otherwise the property will not come to her. He says that he won forty thousand dollars from Major Winston and then spent the money. He gives money to Pedro, who kisses his hand. He then blesses them and lies exhausted.

A diversion is created by the arrival of the girl who loves Lopez. She is Senorita Travario, the daughter of one of the richest men in Mexico, who was stolen by Lopez, after he had stripped her father of his fortune. Nevertheless, the girl loves Lopez and has followed him. Liberty and Bob go out to meet her. Leon raises himself on his elbow and looks at Lopez lying on the floor. "Now, murderer of my son," he exclaims, draws a pistol from under his pillow and shoots Lopez. Liberty and Bob return and have the body of Lopez carried into an adjoining room. They think that he is dead.

In the meantime, Pedro is chasing the last of Lopez' men over the country. He and his men shoot the last three survivors. Lopez' body is loaded on a cart and taken to the house in the village where the insurrection began so auspiciously. We see that he is not dead.

Major Winston has succeeded in reaching his barracks. He is sent for at headquarters and explains how his men were led into a trap and shot like rats. He also tells that Bob has remained in Mexico trying to get news of Liberty. They are about to send for news of him to the Hacienda when the four arrive, Liberty, Bob, Pedro and Senorita Travario. There is a joyful reunion.

IOWA NOTES.

By C. S. STEVENSON.

NICHOLAS AMOS, manager of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has recently been giving private showings to exhibitors and newspaper men of Iowa of "The Eagle's Wings." Burlington, Davenport, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Ottumwa and Cedar Rapids were the towns visited. Previous to being at these cities Mr. Amos sent out notices to all exhibitors in the vicinity of each town, notifying them of his presence with the picture. Mr. Amos was greeted enthusiastically and predicts that "The Eagle's Wings" will be booked in many houses in the territory.

D. B. Lederman, manager of the Laemmle Film Service, recently returned from a trip to Chicago, where he attended a meeting of exchange managers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Charles Stevenson, of the publicity department of the Laemmle Film Service, Des Moines, recently sprained his ankle and tore loose several ligaments while playing basketball. As a result Mr. Stevenson will be forced to use crutches for nearly a month, in addition to foregoing athletics for the next six months. The injury is one that confined him to his home for some time. He is now back on the job.

Herbert Billings, formerly assistant booker of the Des Moines Universal office, recently resigned to take up a position as salesman with a local film company. Mr. Billings has been with the Universal here for five years. Charles Diehl, head shipper, has been promoted to Mr. Billings' former place. John Wright Schnack, who has been night booker for some time past, has been given Mr. Diehl's place, while Slater O'Hare, in charge of the night force some months ago, returned to the fold and was given Mr. Schnack's place. Fred Wickerhorst, head of the poster department, resigned the same week as did Mr. Billings. Mr. Wickerhorst left immediately for Davenport. Harold Bolby now has charge of that department.

Edgar Peel, head booker of the local Universal office, is acknowledged to be one of the best bowlers in the city. While rolling with the Casino Theatre Five, Mr. Peel recently knocked down the pine for an average mark of 252 in three games. He also held the high mark for one game until recently displaced by an opponent. In addition to his activities along this line, Mr. Peel recently played in the finals of a city golf tournament. He and his opponent halved the entire match, with the result that another contest will be necessary.

Business conditions in the Iowa territory have been about normal for the past month. Previous to that time things appeared to be rather unsettled, with a tendency for the exhibitor to change his service at very irregular intervals. A steadiness, much to be desired, is now noticeable. It is expected that this condition will exist during the winter months.

to get in touch with the charitable organizations in your community. In fact, if the people connected with these organizations were informed of the nature of "The Right To Be Happy," the chances are that they would urge you to allow them to sponsor the presentation. As a feature for a benefit presentation, this production cannot be beaten. It will work perfectly in the matter of helping day nurseries, hospitals, etc., to raise funds. Therefore, this particular method of utilizing it should be given your utmost consideration.

Get in touch with the heads of the local schools and obtain their co-operation. Dickens is one of the favorite authors in our educational institutions, and "A Christmas Carol" one of his favorite works. Therefore, from an educational standpoint, "The Right To Be Happy" will be regarded as a perfect picture by school teachers.

IMPROVISING.

By M. WINKLER.

IMPROVISING and synchronizing in motion picture music cannot be thought of apart, for improvising is "temperamental sychronization." This phrase is quite a mouthful, yet its meaning is clear. In two words, it expresses the instant response on the part of musician and music, to the "temperamental" (that is to say, the emotional) situation the picture portrays. It creates that bond of sympathy and interest between audience and "show," which is the prime factor in the former's enjoyment of the latter.

Mere "timing" is not the true secret of successful improvising. It has its decided advantages, but its evident limitations as well. Adaptability, quickness in handling unforeseen contingencies developed in the projection of the pictures themselves, contingencies which call for instant decision on the part of the musical leader, a sense of fitness for "local color" are far more important. Imagination, constant attention to the principle of "flexible tempi," and absolute co-operation with the film operator at all times must underly any motion picture improvising that deserves the name.

Every leader of a moving picture orchestra has his own detail methods of working out his musical synchronization. But "improvising," the ability to duplicate, at a moment's notice if necessary, the dramatic action, mood and atmosphere of the film picture in music, is its foundation. Thus color, contrast and continuity of idea are secured, and the orchestra swung smoothly and naturally through all changes of scene and action.

with visors, sashes wound around the waist, handkerchief around the neck—all are there. It does not look like a fancy dress dance, as these scenes so often do, but like a gathering of the "real thing," which made Paris, in certain quarters, a terror before the war. When war was declared, one of the first things accomplished, we are told, was the rounding up of these questionable characters, whether proof of their being criminals was possessed or not, and their enforced enlistment in the armies sent to the front. But before August 1914, the Apache problem had been fairly well solved, and the means of its solving was the employment of police dogs by the Paris Gendarmerie, or police force. These now historic desperados have disappeared, probably forever, and this fact makes the serial, "The Purple Mask," in which they come to life again, of even greater interest.

DIRECTOR COCHRANE PROTESTS

THIS is Mr. George Cochrane, Universal City director, coming in Black Hand guise after the home office publicity staff. Director Cochrane is protesting vigorously against credit being given, in the Blue Ribbon Advance Notices of the Weekly, to Director Kelsey for the production of the Rex drama, "The Lawyer's Secret." Director Cochrane says: "I did it with my little camera!"

OUR JAP CORRESPONDENT IS LATE WITH HIS COPY.

SO many people have apologized to "F. P. A." of the Tribune for trying to imitate him, that it is presumed he is hardened to it by this time. We intend to apologize to him right now for using some of his material on this page. Our Japanese correspondent was unable to be represented through failure to send his copy in on time and presses and compositors wait for no man or editor. We noticed that F. P. A. scissored out a choice morsel of sustenance from a South American paper, and thinking it would interest our readers we print it below.

"From a pamphlet setting forth the advantages of advertising in 'La Razon' and 'El Telegrafo,' newspapers published in Montevideo, Uruguay:

"La Razon give to its unnumbered readers, before than anything other newspaper, everything what is matter of news in the world. The mondanity occurrencies, are day by day inserted scrupulously in its fine and gallant columns; that is the reason why this is the publication more simpathtically preferated in the saloons and cotages.

"For the advertiser it is a sure and incomparable mean of publicity, because the advertisements being insered between interesting informations, are always wellread by the public.

"When anything of extraordinary draws in the public curiosity, 'La Razon' increased its editions without limite, reaching often to the double of it ordinary issue, which is of about from 30 to 35 thousands daily. This newspaper appears in the afternoon.

"El Telegrafo.—Senior of the Rio de la Plata press.—Born in 1850.—Appears at 10 a. m.—Averated issue, about from 10 to 12 thousands daily (increasing).

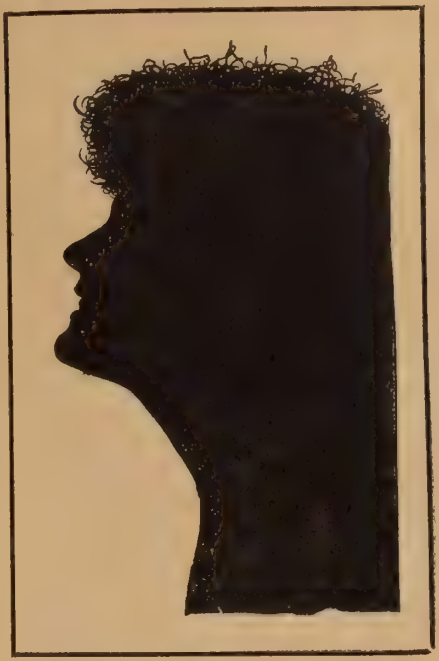
"Since 1850, date of born of this newspaper, to the present time, has been 'El Telegrafo' an assistant insuperbable of the merchant Navy and of the industries."

HARRISON FORD NOW A BLUEBIRD PLAYER.

HARRISON FORD, one of the best known juvenile leads in the motion picture field has joined the Bluebird forces and will appear in the support of Mary MacLaren under the direction of Lois Weber in "The Mysterious Mrs. Musslewhite."

He first attracted attention in the support of Robert Edeson and Mary Mannering in several Broadway productions. He played the lead in "Excuse Me," and was with W. H. Crane in two of his important successes. Mr. Ford was with Louis Mann in "The Bubble," and in the New York production of "Rolling Stones."



DO YOU KNOW WHO THIS IS?

A POPULAR movie magazine company which prints programs for ever and ever so many theatres in New York City made a request for the picture of Miss Violet Mersereau to be used as a silhouette and reproduced with the idea of a guessing contest. The program company promised to send a photograph of the star to every one correctly guessing the name of the star. On this page is the silhouette used, and it so far failed to conceal the identity of the dainty Bluebird star that the program company made a hurry call to the Bluebird office and to Miss Mersereau herself to help them out on pictures. It kept the star of "The Honor of Mary Blake" from enjoying the larger part of a couple of nights sleep to sign all of the pictures of herself which were required and which she had promised to do. No more "Black Hand" stuff for Violet Mersereau.

There is entirely too much work connected with these silhouette guessing contests, for such a busy person to undertake any more of them.

Just to show that she is not the only one, however, who works in the black arts, we print a picture of a personage out at Universal City. So clever is his disguise that it is almost impossible for any one to guess it. There is no doubt whatever that the retiring gent across the page would be very glad to oblige with his photograph in case any conjectures are correct.

STORIES OF THE ONE REEL PHOTOPLAYS

"IT SOUNDED LIKE A KISS."

Nestor Comedy.
Written by Bess Meredyth.
Directed by Louis Chaudet.

CAST.

Lee	Lee Moran
Priscilla	Priscilla Dean
Eddie	Eddie Lyons
Father	Fred Gamble
Estelle	Vola Smith

Priscilla leads a very unhappy life because of the jealousy of her husband Lee. She warns Eddie, an old college chum, not to pay any attention to her at the dance which they are to attend.

Eddie is a suitor for the hand of the wealthy Estelle, but he is always getting mixed up in some scandal. Estelle finally declares that one more escapade on his part will finish everything.

Both couples attend the dance. When Priscilla and Eddie greet each other as old friends, the other two become jealous. They decide to amuse each other, but make rather a gloomy failure of it. Eddie leaves to get a drink and Priscilla follows the other two into the conservatory. When Eddie returns, she drags him into the conservatory and starts making love to him. Lee is awkwardly making love to Estelle and gets some of her hair caught in a button. The two are astounded by the sound of a kiss—Priscilla has purposely made the noise. Lee drags Priscilla away from Eddie while Estelle bursts into tears.

Lee takes Priscilla home and the two make up. Meantime, Estelle has phoned for father to take her home and the disconsolate Eddie proceeds to forget his troubles in drink, and then assumes proprietorship of a milk wagon, closely pursued by policemen. The pursuit becoming too close, Eddie dodges around a house and climbs into a window—which happens to be Priscilla's. She is dumbfounded and tries to hide him when her husband returns.

Estelle has caught a glimpse of Eddie in the milk wagon. Arrived at the house, she runs into Lee and informs him that Eddie is in the house. The two go to Priscilla's door and find it locked. The other two are cowering terrified inside the room. Priscilla discovers the blond hair on Eddie's coat and feels confident of his perfidy. Lee gets a gun and starts toward the door, but Estelle faints and he catches her in his arms. Explanations follow and Estelle returns to her father.

Written by Karl Coolidge.
Directed by W. W. Beaudine.

CAST.

Wife	Gale Henry
Husband	William Franey
Sculptor	Charles Conklin
Crook	Milburn Moranti
Dog	"Snooze" Franey

The husband makes the acquaintance of the sculptor who tells of his conquests with women. He discloses that he has made a statue which he keeps in his room across the hall. Husband gives his wife a comb.

One day when the wife returns to her apartment she finds the door locked. She is in her pajamas, so hides in the apartment of the sculptor, who returns at that moment. Some crook has stolen the statue, so the wife takes its place and tries to persuade the sculptor that the statue has come to life. In her haste to escape him, however, she drops the comb.

The sculptor goes to the club and exhibits the comb as evidence. The husband, who is present, hurries home to accuse his wife. Meantime she has discovered the loss and has gone to the sculptor's rooms to find it. She is just coming out when hubby returns. He compels her to return to the sculptor's room, and arranges the door so that whoever comes in will be killed by the discharge of a gun.

The sculptor, finding his door locked and the apartment across the hall open, enters there and falls asleep. The wife's dog opens the door of the sculptor's apartment. The gun is discharged, awakening the wife and husband, who had fallen asleep. The husband now realizes that he might have been a murderer and begs his wife's forgiveness. They return to find the sculptor peacefully sleeping in their bedroom.

Written and Produced by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke.

CAST.

"Baby Doll"	Eileen Sedgwick
Her Mother	Louise Mayon
Ray, in love with the mother,	Fred Church

"Baby Doll" is growing up, but mother refuses to recognize the fact. She intends to keep her a child as long as possible. Ray is in love with the mother, and has never seen the daughter. He brings a rattle to present to her. Baby sees the presentation and is angry. She hears her mother telling Ray that she is just eight years old, but in reality she is nearly eighteen. Ray urges the mother to marry him the day after Christmas.

The night before Christmas, Ray and her mother fill Baby's stocking, but Baby finds it very hard to be pleased with childish presents any longer. At the Christmas tree Ray meets Baby for the first time. There are plenty of children at the party, but Baby cannot play with them. She can think only of the marriage of her mother and Ray on the morrow.

Preparations for the wedding go on. Mother puts on plenty of paint to hide the wrinkles. Ray arrives at the house and Baby meets him. She confesses that she is eighteen, not eight. They understand each other very well. The minister arrives, and Ray tells Baby to put on her mother's hat and cloak and marry him. They drive away in Ray's machine before Mother discovers that she has lost her bridegroom.

DIRECTOR CURTIS CURTAILS VACATION.

ALLEN CURTIS returned to work this week at Universal City after a three months' rest, during which time he visited his mother in Denver.

The well known director of comedy pictures dropped into Universal City simply for the purpose of paying a visit to Vice-President Davis and his old friends "on the lot," it having been his intention to rest for another month after his four years of service with the Big U organization. On the day of his visit Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, who was directing a comedy company, was taken ill, and Vice-President Davis asked Curtis if he would go on with the picture, which had been started only the day before. Curtis took the script and went to work at once, and with the aid of Bruno Becker, assistant director, completed the comedy in a few hours beyond two days.

"Guess I'm fit to go to work without waiting another month after all," said the mirth-making director.

"Looks like it after that speed. Find another story and get busy in the morning," ordered the boss of Universal City.

Curtis did and on the following day was half through the second picture by the time the quitting hour had arrived.

JACK MULHALL FEATURED PLAYER.

AFTER having appeared in a number of Universal features in leading roles, Jack Mulhall, considered one of the best juveniles in pictures, signed a long-time contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and will hereafter be featured in big productions.

Since joining the company, Mr. Mulhall has supported some of its best stars, including Flora Parker De Haven in "The Whirlpool of Destiny," Dorothy Phillips in "The Place Beyond the Winds," and Ruth Stonehouse in a forthcoming production entitled, "Fighting for Love," in which Mr. Mulhall plays a prominent part.

The vehicle for his first stellar appearance is "The Killer," written in five reels by Raymond Wells and Fred Myton. Wells will direct the production of the story which portrays the exploits of a bad man in the east.

Wells has already worked with Miss Stonehouse in "Kinkaid, Gambler," a Red Feather, and in "Fighting for Love," in which Mulhall and Miss Stonehouse played opposite.

REFORM THE MOVIES; HUH!

General Otis, publisher of the Los Angeles Times of Los Angeles, frequently grasps the opportunity to take a shot at the wild-eyed reformers who cast their greedy eyes at the moving picture industry. Under the caption, "Reform the Movies! Huh!" under date of November 27th, is the editorial on this page, which we quote almost in its entirety.

VARIOUS worthy, if somewhat unoccupied, ladies (male and female) in Los Angeles have resolved to reform the movies.

Excited Pauline Reveres are galloping around the women's clubs sounding the alarm. The leagues are beginning to gather. The drama leagues, the anti-vice leagues, the purity leagues and other miscellaneous and unassorted leagues! They are in council of war. The battle to reform the movies is about to begin.

With some natural timidity we wish to whisper a few chaste observations on this theme.

In the first place, the movies do not seem to be in any very burning need of reform.

In the next place, this isn't the way to reform them.

Lastly, if let alone they will reform themselves.

No other business in the world has been so browbeaten, bullied, meddled with and persecuted as the moving pictures. If it isn't the censors it's the police; if it isn't the police it's the women's clubs. The movies seem at once to be the object of a rare devotion from one part of the public and of a half-crazy, insensate, unreasoning hatred from the other. This pursuit of the movies is one of the most extraordinary phases of the licensed meddling that goes disguised under the name of "reform."

A case in point was "The Clansman," afterward known as "The Birth of the Nation." It was the film version of a book by Thomas Dixon, and, as to expression of race hatred, was very much milder in tone than the novel. The novel went by without a word of protest; its author gave numerous lectures and public readings on the same theme which got by without a frown.

A play was dramatized from the book and given on the stage in all the bitterness of the book. No fuss resulted. Yet when "The Clansman" appeared in the movies a terrific storm of protest was raised.

In every book store in Los Angeles there are stories which would almost wreck the whole moving picture business to reproduce. Yet nothing is thought about them. In fact, while the literary world was enjoying a spasm of sex novels some time ago it was hardly possible to pick up a best seller without finding a story that would have placed a movie film in the hands of the police.

The length to which the censors of the movies—self-appointed and otherwise—have gone is absolutely absurd. Part of Geraldine Farrar's famous "Carmen" film had to be thrown out because the lady therein smoked a cigarette. The woman head of a censorship board in Los Angeles made a rule that every film in which a baby cried would have to be thrown out. From this the censorship proceeded to the most astonishing lengths. These worthy ladies have in many instances even attempted to destroy valuable films on the ground that they didn't consider them to be artistic. They have, in fact, fussed around and meddled and snooped into the affairs of the film people until the latter were on the verge of suicide. Like most persecutions it was all unequal, inequitable and unjust.

Some time ago the reformers almost threw a fit because Lois Weber produced "The Hypocrites," in which the vague, shadowy figure of a young girl appeared without any clothes on. The police were called in; the club women raged; and every attempt was made to stop the film. The same film has been running on Main street for the past few weeks and not one of these reformers have even taken interest enough to get off the car to look at it. The police have received no protests. Roaring at that particular play had ceased to be entertaining to the reformers.

Some weeks ago, about a year after "The Hypocrites," a famous artist's model appeared on Broadway in a five-reel play in which she enacted her role unclothed—and in no shadowy, vague way. Without a rag of clothes on she appeared jam-slam up in front of the camera and remained seemingly glued there for 5,000 feet of film. No one offered as much as a peep of protest.

The Times is not in favor of sex novels or sex movies, or of stories about crime either in the movies or in books or on the stage. It is the opinion of this journal that such rubbish is not only tough; it is worse; it is tiresome. There are a lot of books published and a lot of plays produced and a lot of movies shown on the screen that we wish were not there. But this petty nagging isn't the way to corect those errors of art.

If you will let them alone the movies will correct themselves. With the aid of the box office!

It is a principle pretty well to be relied on that the movies will play what it pays to play. And the vampire pay streak is about run out.

The real remedy for whatever evils there are in the morals of the movies is the remedy that the movies themselves have applied. They have satiated the movie public with the thrills that were supposed to attend wickedness. Movie devotees don't want that stuff any more. In fact, the only way the vamp can be kept alive as an attraction is by the advertising she may get from a whooped-up reform campaign by these energetic ladies of the leagues.

We recite again the case of the two plays in which unclad ladies appeared. The one with the naked little girl which raised the protest packed a Broadway house for weeks on end. The subsequent play with the lady naked, but unprotested, attracted no attention. The next play with a naked lady will be a drug on the market.

There is no vamp among the great drawing cards.

If these drama leagues are sincere in their desire to clean up the movies they can best attain their ends by sitting very still and watching the movies clean themselves up.

COPS READY FOR WINTER.

"THE Finest" of Los Angeles, in their new cold-weather uniforms were reviewed by the Mayor of Los Angeles, the other day, and photographed by the Animated Weekly cameraman, for Weekly No. 50. They were inspected by the new mayor, Frederick T. Woodman, and the new chief of police, John L. Butler, and various officers from the army and navy. The motor-cycle squad caused particular comment by their fine appearance.

ACTOR TO SAVE FAMILY ESTATE

WORKING with one object in view, Marc Fenton, one of the well-known Universal City photoplayers, is not spending any of his earnings for automobiles or the luxuries of life.

Fenton promised his mother that he would some day buy back the old family home in County Kerry, Ireland, and each week a certain amount is laid aside by the actor with this one object in view.

He says he plans to end his days at the old home living on the savings from his earnings in motion pictures and upon the legitimate stage.

CANADIAN NOTES.
By W. A. BACH.

CALGARY.—Mr. W. F. Slough of Salmon Arm, B. C., was a visitor here this week, and booked Universal service and Bluebirds. He will be handled from the Vancouver office.

Mr. K. M. Leach of Swift Current, who is now running Universal service and Bluebirds, was a visitor to Calgary last week, and booked the "Timothy Dobbs" series.

Mr. F. McQueen, manager of the Bijou Theatre, Wetaskiwin, has now taken over the Garland Theatre, Edmonton, and will open with the Universal program and Bluebirds.

Mr. W. Gladish, representative of the Moving Picture World in Ontario and well-known among the film community has assumed the editorship of the Motor Magazine, a prominent Canadian Automobile Trade Paper. Best wishes go with Mr. Gladish in his new position.

The Exchangemen's Association of Toronto, held a very successful luncheon during the past week at which business and pleasure were most skilfully combined; the result being a general furtherance of Exchange conditions in this territory.

The Crown Theatre will be opened in Toronto on Broadview Avenue very shortly. It is an entirely new house and is owned by two Toronto men. It is believed that Universal and Bluebird service will be used.

The local 173 of the I. A .T. S. E. is now a ninety per cent. organization, according to Mr. C. A. McMahon, chief operator at Shea's Hippodrome. There is an active membership list of 107, in spite of the great number who have enlisted to go to the front.

The Perkins Electric Company, exclusive Canadian distributers of Powers and Simplex Machine, Minusa Screens, Speer Carbons, have now three branches in Canada, in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. They are using two pages of advertising space in the Canadian Bulletin for advertising the various products which they represent.

The Regent Theatre is the second Toronto house to secure its own Topical Weekly. Mr. W. James, the local Motion Picture Cameraman, is handling the work in conjunction with the Daily News. The film runs for three days at the Regent Theatre, after which it is released outside.

MANAGER'S TROUBLE BUREAU.

A number of signs have been posted in conspicuous places at Universal City bearing the following information: "Tell your troubles to the Production Office." He declares a great deal of time has been lost by the various people in not knowing where to secure information.

The Parson after the scrap.

The "father" that Joe has to lick.

Joe makes a donation to the church.

"Fighting Joe"

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama, adapted for Christmas showing. Written by William Parker and produced by William V. Mong, who also plays the lead. The tale of how a scrappy little prospector finds a "fambly."

CAST.

"Fighting Joe"	William V. Mong
Parson Huntley	Harry M. Holden
Mary	Maud Emory
Jim	Harry Griffith
Jack	"Buddy" Messenger
Boggs	William James

HERE is a picture that the whole family will like. It was written by William Parker, and directed by William Mong, and it is far and away the best film that he has ever produced. There is a delightful story, with lots of smiles and just the suspicion of a tear for father and mother; there is a tremendous scrap for those who like red-blooded action; a love-story for the sentimental; a splendid, real American boy for the devotees of child actors; and added to all this, there is a Christmas flavor about it which makes it just the kind of a picture that you want to see in the holidays.

Parson Huntley, with a crowd including Mrs. Browne and Mrs. Olson, is tacking up a sign outside the church which reads "Christmas is coming, let us prepare for a good time in the Church." Mrs. Browne points to Mr. Olson who is about to enter the saloon. Mrs. Olson catches her husband at the door and drags him into the church, where she forces him to help the parson.

Mr. Browne enters the saloon and is seen by his wife who follows him. She takes Browne to the church where he, too, is made to help.

"Fighting Joe" arrives with his burro, "Brodie," and seeing the sign on the church gives it a laugh in which "Brodie" joins. The men in the saloon see him and they all prepare to fight. Joe's name causes consternation to all except Boggs, a gambler, who does not know him. Joe enters and tells him of the sign. Joe changes the sign to read: "Christmas is coming, let us prepare for a good time in the Saloon."

The parson accuses them of sacrilege. There is a general fight in which Joe takes the part of the parson. Joe gives the parson a large sum of money for his Xmas tree, and quickly leaves by stage. In town, little Jack Jenkins finds his mother crying because her divorced husband, Jim Jenkins, won't leave their little home. Jack tells his father to leave and is abused by the latter. Mary begs him not to beat the boy and Jim, taking what little money there is in the house, visits the saloon.

He makes himself disagreeable to Joe and returns to vent his spite on his family.

Boggs and his friend seeing that Joe is loaded with money, attempt to rob him. Joe fights and gets the best of them. The fight is seen by little Jack, who begs Joe to go with him and "lick his father." Jim has just made up his mind to wreck the place, but at first sight of Joe, he quickly disappears.

Joe's sympathy is aroused and he takes Jack out and buys all kinds of provisions and toys, and as it is Xmas Eve he stays for dinner. He sees Mary crying and gently stoops over and kisses her. The door opens and Jim enters, under the influence of drink. He attempts to strike Jack, but is told by the boy that "Santa Claus Joe" is there. Being afraid of the latter's fists, Jim slinks away. Joe tells Mary that he has a gold mine, and that half of it will belong to Jack if she will marry him.

In Pastor Huntley's church, all are happy trimming a Xmas tree, when there is a report that "Fighting Joe" is coming. The men prepare for battle, but Joe declares that he is their friend, when he arrives with his arms full of presents, accompanied by Mary and Jack, whom he introduces to the congregation as his family.

FRED CHURCH OPERATED ON.

TAKEN suddenly ill with an acute attack of appendicitis a few days ago, Fred Church was rushed to the hospital, where an immediate operation was performed. It will be six weeks before he will be back at work.

Phil Dunham in "Shooting His 'Art Out"

UPROARIOUS L-KO Komedy, in which a dumbwaiter, an artist, his model, a jealous husband, a ladder, and Phil Dunham are inextricably mixed. Produced by David Kirkland.

CAST.

A Janitor	Phil Dunham
A Jealous Husband	Vin Moore
A Painter	Dick Smith
His Wife	Margaret Russell

Phil gets into the game as a model.

HERE is another of those indescribable L-Kos. Most of this one takes place on the top of a sky-scraping apartment house, with Phil Dunham and Vin Moore trying to push each other off the edge of the roof. They have a ladder between them, and that is all that saves them from a drop of several hundred feet to the ground below. A dumbwaiter plays almost a "speaking" part in the farce, and is used for purposes for which certainly no dumbwaiter was ever employed before.

There is a thread of a plot, of course, just enough to hang the laughs on. Such it is, here it is:

This is the romance of a poor dumbwaiter, an artist, his model, a jealous husband and a ladder. For the husband there survived nothing of the pleasure of matrimony but jealousy. For the wife, there was not even that resource. So when an opportunity came to her to pose for the interesting artist on the floor above, she welcomed it with open arms. She put on a distracting Carmen costume and took her stand on the model throne. The janitor of the building had a passion for art. He could not keep away from Dick's studio when beautiful models in all stages of decolletage were posing. The lovely Carmen was too much for him altogether, and he enveloped her too abundant charms in a fish net. They were disturbed in their art pursuits by the return of the husband, who, not finding his wife in her room, set out to find her. He took the usual extraordinary make of repeating revolver, which shoots a hundred times without reloading, with him.

He broke into the studio, and his wife and the janitor just succeeded in escaping through the dumbwaiter. They chased each other up and down in it, and finally landed on the roof. The husband grabbed one end of a ladder and the janitor took the other, and they teetered back and forth, trying to push each other over the edge of the building. Everything came to an end at last in a general smash-up.

SECRETARY OF TREASURY VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

DETERMINED not to leave Los Angeles until they had seen how motion pictures were made, William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, and Mrs. McAdoo, his wife, formerly Eleanor Randolph Wilson, daughter of President Wilson, escorted by Postmaster Charles W. Fay of San Francisco, spent two hours at Universal City on the afternoon of November 20, met the leading actors and actresses, viewed the sets on the various stages and posed for pictures before the camera of the Universal Animated Weekly.

Mrs. McAdoo expressed a wish to know how railway wrecks were filmed and Director Henry McRae told her the inside story of railway pictures. The Secretary, however, declared he would much prefer to see one of the film fights. Director George Marshall staged one in which Neal Hart bore the brunt of the battle and which brought forth enthusiastic applause by the Secretary and Postmaster Fay.

Mrs. McAdoo was certain one of the men had been badly hurt, and she was not convinced until he appeared again on the scene laughing. Both congratulated Hart for beating the six men he had to contend with.

The visitors displayed a great deal of interest in a church scene being filmed by Director Douglas Gerrard, and even offered suggestions to the director regarding its action. Postmaster Fay was delighted to find that Director Allan J. Holubar was a native of San Francisco, and he introduced his distinguished friend to him and also to Director Charles Swickard, who is well-known in San Francisco.

The party went directly from the train by automobile to Universal City, and were reluctant to leave when the time came to proceed to Santa Barbara later in the afternoon, but the Secretary and Mrs. McAdoo declared the next time they came to Los Angeles they intended to spend a whole day at least at the film capital.

LILLIAN PEACOCK RETURNS.

FOLLOWING an injury received while jumping from a moving automobile, Lillian Peacock, ingenue of the Universal Joker Co. is able to resume her work before the camera.

AN INTERVIEW WITH THE DAINTY BLUEBIRD STAR

BY MARJORIE HOWARD.

who informed her naively that their mother said they could stay a while if she wanted them. Then she had to make up for the interiors which were to be taken that afternoon, and to finish disguising herself as a young gentleman going out for the evening. All through our conversation she was as busy as a bee, doing something or other—rubbing in cold cream, with injunctions to me not to look at her, as I should never see her again in my imagination without grease on her cheeks, smearing on pink grease paint, reddening her lips, beading her eyelashes, brushing the powder out of her eyebrows, etc.

"I've worked ever since I was eight years old," she said, "and do you know if I had a vacation given to me I don't think I'd know what to do with it. I feel sort of sorry for the child I used to be, when I think how young I began. If I ever should have a daughter I don't think I'd let her go on the stage. Of course, for the work itself, there is nothing like being brought up on the boards. It gets under your skin and into your blood—the sense of the dramatic. The stage is your real home, and you are more yourself when playing a part than at any other time. But you pay dearly for the gain. A stage child learns all sorts of things that she has no business to know, and has to simulate emotions, poor little mite, which she ought to know nothing about. I remember when I was about ten, some one said that I had beautiful eyes. From that moment I thought of nothing but showing them off. I stood in my corner on the stage that night and rolled my eyes all over the place. The stage manager came running to me after the act. 'You naughty little thing,' he said, 'what are you making such a little sight of yourself for? Don't you know enough not to do that?' Then, when I was just a little older, I fell in love with the leading lady. She was pale and interesting—oh! so interesting—and her eyes were black all round, and she had a heavy bang. I had no bang, so I took the scissors and cut all my front hair off short. Then I blacked my eyes all round and covered my face with liquid white. I used to sleep with my cheeks all smeared with it, and one morning the wardrobe woman came in early and thought I was dying of some sudden and deadly illness.

"What did I play? Well, the best thing I did as a child was the role of Flora, the little sister in "The Clansman." It's not like the picture, you know. Flora in the play is really just a child. But the nicest thing I ever did on the stage was Rebecca in "Sunnybrook Farm," you know. How I wanted to play that the first year! It was the greatest disappointment of my life when Mr. Brooks said that I must grow a bit first. If wishing could make me grow I should be seven feet tall, at present. I fairly ached with longing to be a little bigger. The next year I had my heart's desire, and later went to London with the play, mother and I, and I played Rebecca at the Globe Theatre. I might have been in London still if mother and I had not been lost in the fog one night coming home from the performance. Our cabman put us out of the cab, almost by force, and said he could go no further, and we groped our way about for hours, mother protesting all the time that she wouldn't stay in such a country.

"I had my first picture experience when I was thirteen years old. It was in a Western company, that is, the plays were Western, but we took them over in Jersey. They engaged me for the heroine because I could ride and swim. It was funny, my learning to ride. It happened while I was traveling with "The Clansman" company. We had a lot of horses with us, and I made great friends with the head hostler. The days were rather dull and he offered to teach me to ride. I'll never forget my first lesson, and I don't think that he will, either. He was exercising the horses down at the railroad tracks. He had taken them out of their car and they were being walked up and down. He called me and put me on the biggest one. The stirrups were far too long for me and he stuck my feet into the straps. Something frightened the horse and he made a bee-line for the baggage car, tearing down the tracks like the wind, with the hostler after him, white as a sheet, expecting to see me thrown off onto the iron rails every moment. I stuck on somehow, and I've never had a particle fear on a horse ever since.

"The director of the Western pictures must have had an awful time with me. I was only thirteen, and all I thought about was having as good a time as possible. I remember how he would plead, 'Now, Violet, this is a love scene. You've got to be serious. Why, you love this fellow and his life is in danger!' Then I'd either stand there like a ninny, not knowing what to do, or I'd make a dive for the leading man and hug him, almost throwing him off his feet. And giggle! Whenever there was a pathetic scene it seemed to me immensely funny, and I'd have to bite my lips to keep from laughing, while the poor director would go nearly crazy. I can't see why they ever kept me, but they did, for some reason or other.

"Nowadays I'm just the opposite of that. I feel my scenes so deeply that it exhausts me to play them. I can't understand any other kind of playing. Why, I still get so lost in a part that I forget where I am! Once I've realized a character it isn't hard for me to weep and suffer with the role I'm playing. It would be impossible not to do so. I don't just 'register' things—I live them.

"What sort of a role I like best? Well, when I began I wanted to play nothing but vampires. I saw myself in snaky black things, squirming all over the place. I thought I just had to be a vampire or nothing. They had not the heart to tell me that I couldn't, so they used to say that I must grow first. For months I measured myself to see if I wasn't geting big enough to vamp. Well, now I've realized that I'm never going to be. One thing I've learned—I know what I can't do. But that knowledge wasn't gained in a flash overnight. Why, I remember when I was playing under Herbert Brenon! I had the part of a girl in the first reel of the picture who is later seen as the aged mother of a grown son. I played the girl, and Mr. Brenon insisted that I do the mother, too. Billy Welsh made me up. He took hours over it, shading my cheeks and drawing artistic wrinkles. It was a wonderful piece of work, but I'm afraid it looked just that in the picture. And then I appeared in a dramatic Madame-X-sort of a court room scene, and who do you think played my son? Hobart Henley! Now, imagine my playing the mother of Hobart Henley! It isn't fair to a girl to ask her to do things like that. The public just loves to add years to an actress's age as it is. Years from now, some one will say, 'Violet Mersereau? Why, she must be awfully old! I saw her years ago and she was playing mothers then!'

"I like 'The Great Problem' best of all my roles, from the standpoint of the pleasure I had in playing them. The girl in that changed from a soulless little devil into a real woman. There was lots of comedy in it, but not silly, meaningless comedy. There was a chance for the real development of character. I have no objection whatever to comedy, if it is human. But I don't like too much 'cutey,' nothing but tricks, and no opportunity to portray real emotion. I have been in the game so long that I can portray almost any sort of emotion, more than most girls of my age. Though I have discovered that I am not physically suited to play heavy roles, vampires, or mothers of erring sons, I see no reason why I should not have a chance to do real women. A girl develops very quickly under the stress of suffering. And love usually means suffering, doesn't it? Mr. Stevens sympathizes with my desire to play real people. That is one of the reasons why we understand each other so well."

By this time Miss Mersereau was costumed as a young gentleman.

PUTTING IT OVER

A PAGE OF PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR TH7 BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS.

MERRY CHRISTMAS and a Happy New Year!

Even though the last issue of the MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY was the Christmas number, it's so close to the glad season that "Putting It Over" hopes you will all be successful in Putting Over the busiest, happiest and most profitable holiday week you have ever had.

While on the subject of Christmas, that is the day, December 25, when the big, new Universal Serial, "THE PURPLE MASK," is to be released. If you want to present your patrons with a Christmas offering, book this magnificent production and give them all an opportunity to see the ever popular Grace Cunard and Francis Ford some night during Christmas week.

The Universal Advertising Department have prepared for Exhibitors a big Advertising Campaign Book, that is filled from cover to cover with suggestions for "Putting Over" this serial thriller. You ought to have a copy of this book. You can learn from it the story of the play; all about the big cast; scores of pictures taken from various scenes; innumerable advertising stunts, as well as complete newspaper and publicity campaigns. This book is FREE to Exhibitors, and if you have not received a copy, write your nearest Universal Exchange, or to the home offices of the Universal. This will give you a line on what to do to make the first episode a smashing success; after that the serial will prove its own drawing power.

Beginning next week "Putting It Over" stunts for "The Purple Mask" will be published in this department. Watch for them every week. They will pack your house. In the meantime get "The Purple Mask" book, and prepare for a big serial business.

THE Red Feather for December 25, Christmas Day, is called "A Child of Mystery," and is all about a girl who was stolen by the Black Hand and brought up by an old Italian organ-grinder as his daughter. Hobart Henley produced the picture, and plays the part of an Italian fruit-seller, who is in love with the girl. This is such a good picture that it is worth special efforts in the advertising direction. If you can hire the services of a local organ-grinder for the day without going too deeply into your bank account, he would make a wonderfully original and appropriate advertisement for the picture. If you have an Italian girl go with him to flourish a tambourine all decorated with colored streamers, that will be all the better. Placard with organ the name, date and place of the showing of the picture, and let both the organ-grinder and the girl wear red feathers conspicuously about their clothing. If you cannot manage this, you might have notices in the lobby a day or so before the running of the picture, with big black hands drawn on them, skulls and cross-bones, and other mysterious emblems. "Beware the Black Hand!" and arresting notices of this kind should be conspicuous on the announcements, with such promises as "If you want to learn how to circumvent them, see 'A Child of Mystery."

THERE is a travelaugh by Hy Mayer on the program for December 26, which is worth special boosting. It is all about life in Alaska, and it would be a good notion to dress a small man in the costume of an Eskimo, with plenty of furs about him, and send him through the streets with an announcement of the picture. Or you can put him in a sleigh, if there is snow enough in your town, and send him around like that, and mind that he has plenty of sleigh-bells.

THE L-KO for December 7 is called "The Perils of a Plumber," and Dan Russell is the aristocratic plumber who goes to work all togged up in a top-hat, frock coat, gloves and a cane, with a minion to carry his tools behind him. Have some one dress like Dan, with spats, a flower in his button-hole and all the smart touches you can think of, and send him swaggering along the streets, with a little man in regular plumber's garb following him with the soldering outfit, etc., which all real plumbers carry. The big man should also have the announcement of the picture attached to his person, and the little one should seem to be much in awe of the impressive person in front of him. Some such wording as "Plum & Co., Plumbers Always on the Job," followed by the name of the picture, theatre, etc., should be used.

ON Thursday, December 28, there is a corking Victor comedy called "Good Morning, Judge," which was directed by Francis Ford, and in which Ernie Shields and Mina Cunard have the leads. It is all about a ruby necklace which is supposed to have been smuggled, and which causes no end of trouble, until a maid finally puts it around the neck of a pet dog, who makes off with it. Have some one lend you the services of a well-trained canine, who won't mind promenading the streets with a large "property" ruby necklace instead of a collar. If you can get a white dog the red stones will show up better. Have some one with him, of course, with the appropriate announcements.

THERE is a Laemmle drama on December 30, called "The Face on the Screen." A good way to announce this beforehand would be to have a large shadow of a woman's profile thrown on the screen at the end of the program, each time is it repeated, for sometime before the picture is shown. At first, show only the profile, then follow it with a question mark, or the caption, "Who Is It?" and finally with the announcement of the picture and the date of its showing. It will not cost much to have three slides like this made, and they should be run in sequence at the close of the different pictures which you are running on your program.

If the feature fans throughout the country could see all the five or more reel features that are shown every week——

THEY WOULDN'T GET THE VARIETY, NOR THE SATISFACTORY ENTERTAINMENT THAT IS OFFERED ON THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM.

That's the answer, Mr. Exhibitor, to your problem of what to show your patrons, so as to please the greatest number of people in your neighborhood the greatest number of performances.

Having a good house two nights a week because you happen to strike a good long feature won't keep the sheriff from your door.

But the Universal Program, with its never ending variety of one, two and three reel subjects; its fascinating presentation of the pictures the people like to see—that they can drop in and see at any time without having to sit through the tail end first—is proving in thousands of SUCCESSFUL houses all over the world TO BE WHAT THE MAJORITY OF THE PEOPLE WANT.

YOU GET YOUR PROFIT FROM THE MAJORITY. THINK IT OVER.

Universal Animated Weekly

The most popular one-reel subject now before the public.

The one and only short subject that draws like a special multi-reel release. The one and only form of moving picture entertainment that will drag them into your theatre on the dull day that always cuts into your profits.

The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY is in a class by itself. It not only entertains, instructs, informs and amuses, but it shows all the world's greatest news events FIRST ON THE SCREEN.

The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY is released on the regular Universal Program—and for a long time was released only to users of Universal Service.

PROGRAM

ITS TREMENDOUS popularity has created a demand that is now being supplied by all Universal Exchanges under a new sales plan. By this arrangement any Exhibitor can now book the Universal Animated Weekly whether he is showing the Universal Program in whole or in part or not at all. Write for complete information to any Universal Exchange, or UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY, 1600 Broadway, New York.

Universal Screen Magazine

The latest and most popular screen Novelty.

It is to the popular magazine of the millions what the Universal Animated Weekly is to a great newspaper.

Covers the widest variety of fascinating subjects—moving pictures of the latest inventions; domestic science; beauty hints; the latest fashions; what the industrial world is doing; imaginative comedies—things that never happen; all the wide range of fascinating magazine subjects thrown on the screen for the entertainment, amusement and instruction of your patrons.

A huge and overwhelming success from the start. A novelty that will put over any performance. A full reel every other week. Released on the Universal Program, but can be booked separately by those not using Universal Service. The UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE is needed in your house; you can get complete information from any Universal Exchange, or

FROM THE TRENCHES.

John D. Tippett,
London, England.

Dear Sir—I write this letter to you to let you see what I think of the Trans-Atlantic Films.

I am a soldier in a certain regiment and have just recovered from some severe wounds. Well, long before the war broke out, I have always been a keen admirer of your films, and I am pleased to say they are the best films produced. I have seen the seventh episode of "Peg o' the Ring," and I am pleased to say it was excellent. When I was in the trenches fighting, the film "Peg o' the Ring" was booked with success, because I told my comrades of the two best stars of the film. They are Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Ask Grace Cunard who I am and she will tell you with pleasure. If you have a review book published each week send this letter to be printed and boom all your films.

Would like to receive a letter in return. Kind regards,
A. H. WITTS.
113 Sulton Road,
Portsmouth, England.

ABSOLUTELY NOTHING BETTER.

Universal Film Exchange,
New York City.

Gentlemen—You of course are aware of the reluctance, amounting almost to prejudice, that I in the past entertained regarding Red Feather features and in fact everything the Universal Program had to offer.

Bearing in mind the old adage, "Only fools do not change their minds," I was finally persuaded to give your productions a fair try-out and it gives me the greatest satisfaction and pleasure to tell you that after having used more or less of them during the last few months, I have arrived at the conclusion that there is absolutely nothing better in the market, and I regret very much my stubbornness in having given you the by-go in the past, for your productions would have saved "The Scenario" from $40.00 to $50.00 per week.

Not specifying any of your features in particular, but taking them as a whole, they are as good as those I am paying from 150 to 200 per cent. more for. As an illustration: Yesterday we had King Baggot in "The Man From Nowhere," and it brought over $11.00 more business, and gave more Universal satisfaction to our very critical patronage than the highest-priced feature shown here, barring Saturdays, for some time, and as to your Nestor comedies, it is my opinion that "they simply lay over deck: furnishing good wholesome fun without the least verging on the suggestive, which I regret to say only too many exhibitors think necessary to entertain an up-to-date public with, and too many directors mistake for humor.

Again assuring you of the pleasure and gratification it gives me to send these few lines, I beg to remain with best wishes,

Very truly yours,
SALO ANSBACH,
Scenario Theatre.
Newark, N. J.

L-KO'S CAN ALWAYS PLAY HIS HOUSE.

Miss Alice Howell,
L-KO Motion Picture Kompany,
Hollywood, Cal.

Dear Madam—This letter may or may not interest you, but I thought that I would write a few lines and tell you that you have one booster (if I must use that word) in a man with "The Matinee Girl" Co. His name is Gross. We had the pleasure of playing Mr. Gross and his company here for three days. On the company's last night here, Mr. Gross announced the coming attraction, which was another tabloid musical company, also a three-reel L-KO featuring Alice Howell. Now I am not a big booster for the Universal Program or any other program, but an L-KO can always play my house as long as I have anything to do with a theatre here or elsewhere. The picture that Gross announced was "Tillie's Terrible Tumbles," and it was everything that Mr. Gross said it was going to be—one big scream from start to finish. I don't know whether he had seen the picture or not, as he seemed to know just what was going to take place and what the picture was about. Anyway, he made my patrons believe that Mr. Dan Russell and Miss Alice Howell were the best comedy people the picture field has or ever will have.

In short, an L-KO with any one of the above actors can always play my theatre. Yours very truly,
D. S. PRUITT,
Oilton, Okla. Gem Theatre.

UNIVERSAL JUBILEE.

Cincinnati Buckeye Film Co.,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

Gentlemen—Can you arrange to send my Thursday show, November 30th, to me on Sunday, December 3rd, along with my regular program and Red Feather feature, as I am arranging a big Universal jubilee day for that date. Advise me if you can make this change and I will thank you for any favor you can do in aiding me in this. Don't overlook the fact that I did not get my L-KO comedy Friday, and if by any chance, let it come, for L-KO comedies are always a good drawing card.

The Universal Program now, in my mind, is the only real regular program in the market. The stars, the plays, the directors, paper and advertising, are all that any exhibitor could ask for, and when it comes to making the right kind of pictures for a regular program, you've got to give it to the Universal. Yours truly,
ED. C. PAULL,
Alhambra Theatre. Springfield, Ohio.

CABLE CONGRATULATIONS.

The L-Ko Motion Picture Kompany has received a vable message from John D. Tippett, managing director of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., which must have given the L-Ko people considerable satisfaction. It reads as follows:

"Gaby's Gasoline Glide" great. In our opinion it is superior to any Keystone. This class of subject means everything to us. Keep up the good work. TIPPETT.

"IF YOU WANT TO STAY"—

Universal Film Manufacturing Co.
New York City.

Gentlemen—Have been a long user of Universal Program and can recommend it to all exhibitors who want to stay in the motion picture business. Will say that they are doing more for the exhibitor than any other film concern existing to-day.

Yours for Universal pictures,
J. I. WRIGHT,
Rex Motion Picture Theatre.

NEWS OF THE THEATRES.

(From the Evening Sun.)

Managing director Rothapfel of the Rialto has received the following letter from George F. Ungar, patron of his temple of music, color, dancing and motion pictures:

"I was glad to read your letter to the Playgoer in last week's Evening Sun on the troubles of the exhibitor of feature films. I think the real trouble of the feature picture is that it is a bore and hardly ever worth being produced, much less being featured. Out of probably a hundred one-hour pictures I have seen, I think not more than two or three are really good, and even the fairly good ones are spoiled by being stretched to last out the hour.

"The fact is that at the rate a story can be told in pictures it would take an extraordinarily big idea to furnish entertainment for an hour's run. Compared with the one or two reel film, the feature film is a gross fraud. There is more plot and more interest in the rapidly told short film than in the long. It is better told, more entertaining and artistic. The pictures featuring stars are among the worst. And think of the fine music often wasted on these films. A really good picture can easily forego all music. Proof of this is evident when you consider that music often stops in the middle of the picture and you do not notice it. When you feel the need of the music you may be sure that something is wrong with the picture.

"You have already done such good work in this field that I think you would be entirely successful if you continued in your pioneering spirit and broke with the big film entirely, except when it was really worthy, and exploited the shorter ones. I should much prefer to see several good short pictures, like the one act plays, than sit through a long uninteresting feature. I should like to point out, as you doubtless know, that these short pictures go on their own merits and are not dependent for their success and the notoriety of the players. After studying the moving picture theatre for some time, I have come to the conclusion that the feature pictures are the least entertaining part of a good programme. I think that your success is largely due to your recognition of this."

How About It, Mr. Rothapfel?

OLD LETTER, BUT GOOD.

St. Thomas, Ont., February 21st, 1916.
Canadian Universal Film Company:

Dear Sir—Your letter fixing date for "Graft" received and is satisfactory to us, and we have already set the machinery in motion which we expect will make a huge success out of that serial. "The Broken Coin" is now playing to capacity and it looks as though we will have to make some arrangement for more room.

"My Old Dutch" last week, was a stunner. Everybody says it is the best picture they ever saw. I am showing a slide on the screen that arrangements are being made for a return date. What can you do us in that respect? By the way, we have heralds here for Jane Cowl in the "Garden of Lies," and we would like to have this as soon as it is convenient for you. There are some others of the first releases that we have not had. "Judy Forgot" is one, "Judge Not" and "Just Jim" are two others.

B. C. GRAVES, Mgr.
St. Thomas, Ont.

PERPETUALLY GOOD PROGRAM.

Universal Film Exchange, Chicago:

Gentlemen—Enclosed find check for service and let me thank you for the excellent service you are sending me. It cannot be equalled anywhere. "Under Southern Skies" was a better picture than any I have seen. Mary Fuller can be seen at her best in this pretty Southern drama. Representatives from other companies have knocked the Broadway Features, but the other companies, Paramount, World Film, Fox and Pathe cannot send me one good feature after another. They all produce good pictures now and then, but they do not do it all the time. I have tried them all. I know. The Universal is ahead of them all for furnishing a perpetually good program. Yours very truly,

Majestic Amusement Co.,
DAVE UDELL,
Paxton, Ill.

STRONG FOR VARIETY.

Central Film Service Co., Louisville, Ky.:

Dear Sir—As you well know, we are known, more or less, as one of the Louisville's "regular" Universal threatres.

Like many other exhibitors throughout the country, we have put on features when the "craze" was at its height. Our experience with them has taught us that people do not care to sit through a picture more than three reels in length—I don't care how good they are. Right now we are advertising the fact that we are making a specialty of showing one- and two-reel subjects.

You know how I feel personally about features, when you are supplying me with several short pictures in place of the Red Feather. You know I am not prejudiced against the Red Feather—but feature—for the present—cannot tempt me. We're a five-cent house and are going to be satisfied to let the ten-cent houses run features.

Variety was the keynote in the early days and it should be now. A patron likes variety, and if he has to sit in a theatre two hours to get it, he's not apt to be a "repeat" patron. Without the feature, you can give him variety in an hour's time.

I have an idea that "program" theatres would be delighted if progressive companies like the Universal would concentrate as much as possible on one- and two-reel subjects—they could even "let up" a little on three-reel subjects and not get in bad with exhibitors. Yours very truly,

JOSEPH GOLDBERG,
New Hippodrome Co., Louisville, Ky.

GETS THE MONEY.

Universal Film Manufacturing Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—My congratulations on your splendid serial "Liberty." It sure is great the way it gets the money. The public are shouting for more of it, and can't wait for the next episode.

I surely would welcome the news that you had extended this serial, and I think, or rather know, all other exhibitors would welcome such news.

I am writing this, and no doubt many others have written you the same, in hopes that you would extend this serial if you received enough requests. If there ever was a serial that needed extension, "Liberty" can stand it. I remain,

Yours truly,
JOS. ZINKL, Mgr.,
Milwaukee, Wis. Parke Theatre.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"Polly, Put the Kettle On." With Douglas Gerrard, Ruth Clifford and Zoe Rae. A Close to Your Heart Drama. Forty-ninth Red Feather Production. Directed by Douglas Gerrard. Released January 1. I just saw this picture and I don't know whether to laugh or cry. I did both in the projection room, because it was dark and no one could see me. It's one of those "tears and smiles" plays that make moving pictures popular. The movie world is full of people who are constantly going to theatres in the hope of getting their emotions all fussed up, and this picture will appeal to 'em all. Douglas has a rich and crabbed old aunt, who has a job for him in the bank, but he says, "Nay, nay, auntie. I am to be a playwright." Ruth is her companion and is fired the same day Douglas leaves home. She has a brood of brothers and sisters to look after, so as long as his money lasts Douglas looks after her. How in a heroic moment Douglas goes blind; how he writes a play that becomes a success without his knowing it; how auntie finds she still has a spark of human kindness left, and how many cross currents affect our paths through life are wonderfully and entertainingly told in this super Red Feather. The sort of picture that plays return dates to crowds of grateful fans.

"An Old Soldier's Romance." With William V. Mong and Nellie Allen. Two-Reel Gold Seal Heart Interest Drama. Directed by Wm. V. Mong. Released January 2. Ever listen to the comments of your patrons after they have seen a fine character portrayal? You ought to. You'd get a line on what they like. "Great, wasn't it?" "Hard to believe that old man is a strong young actor, ain't it?" That's what they say. William is an inmate of a soldiers' home and he is fond of kids. His one dream is to have one of his own, and when he falls heir to a fortune he stands for the butler and the strange clothes and tight shoes just because he can afford to fill the house with babies. He takes an old comrade with him, and they are a great pair of nurses, believe me. When Nellie comes to the door with a baby, fainting from lack of food, and when her story is told; how the officers are after her young husband—well, that just prepares you for a punch climax that's a whale, no less. They'll all like this.

"On the Trail of the Lonesome Pill." With Phil Dunham and a great cast. Two-Reel L-Ko Hop-Joint Drayma—no, COMEDY. Released January 3. Phil smokes a pill. It should have made him ill, but if it had there'd be no story to spill. Can you imagine a director visualizing Phil's hop-dream for those comedy-loving fans of yours. Some comedy. What an L-KO comedian can't do under the influence of hop isn't worth doing. The trick photography, the lively action and the rapid-fire stunts in this scream make it a big winner. Put that in YOUR pipe and smoke it!

"Blood Money." Harry Carey and Louise Lovely ———, what d'ye think of that? Two-Reel 101 Bison Big Western Drama. Guess that's goin' some, yes? Harry Carey—heap big star. Louise Lovely the prettiest screen star of 'em all, to my notion—putting on a big two-reel picture for the always wonderful Universal Program. Harry has a price on his head, and Louise has a bum for a husband. The latter are going west in a prairie schooner when they discover Harry wounded. The husband wants the reward, delivers Harry to the law, and gets it. There you are—Harry in the coop; hubby drunk on the reward money; and Louise—well, don't you believe but that Louise is busy, too. She is preparing one of the biggest climaxes you ever saw, and it winds up a very fine Western picture that will turn 'em away.

COME IN!

(No. 158. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

SOME of the feature manufacturers are being stung by their own bees.

When the first feature man got ready to separate the exhibitor from his money, he made the operation painless for a time by chloroforming him with the announcement that only world-famous stars would appear in his features.

These stars, he said, would bring the people to the theatre in droves and cause them to dig down for two dimes where they had only dug down for one before. Nothing was said about the identity of the person who was to pay the salaries of these stars.

So the man who had been paying in the neighborhood of $80 a week for a service of one, two and three-reelers, found himself paying as much as $50 for a five-reeler for one day. And when his moan of anguish at the lack of profits in his box office receipts reached the ears of the feature man, the latter calmed him by declaring that everything would be lovely just as soon as the public awoke to the fact that stars were appearing in pictures. Now, I'm not saying that stars won't bring business. They will. But how do you gain by the extra attendance, if the money it means is swallowed up in the cost of feature rental?

I remember that back in the old days every one of us who knew how to manage our houses made money, lots of it, on our regular service program. And we had no stage stars' names to help us, either! $200 was considered a top price for a player and because of this, it enabled the manufacturer to turn out one, two and three-reelers that made money for himself and the exhibitor.

COME IN!

What's the situation today? According to the trade papers, the feature manufacturers are issuing cries of agony because the high cost of stars is steadily going higher! And since you can't sell a product for less than it costs you to manufacture, the high cost of service also gets higher! Right now, the feature men tell us that $1,000 players are as common as daisies in a field, while a really popular star wouldn't for a moment think of endangering his or her health by appearing before a camera for less than $3,000 a week!

Where's it going to end? Search me! Or, I should say, search the stock quotations of the feature organizations. If you can find a single one now on the market selling anywhere near par, bring it to me and I'll eat it!

One thing I do know is this. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has been turning out one, two and three-reel productions that, picture for picture, will stand comparison with the BEST five-reelers on the market. While feature organizations have been squandering money on stars who tomorrow may jump to a competing concern, we have been quietly laying plans to help our exhibitors earn the return on their investments to which they are entitled. There's room in the Universal fold for every showman who has got his bellyful of features, feature stars and their attending evils.

There's room in the Universal fold for every exhibitor who wants a program that is of the same dependable quality today, tomorrow and all the time------

COME IN!

THIS wonderful Bison was written by Harry Carey, who also plays the lead. The screen adaptation was made by Fred A. Kelsey, who also had charge of the production. During the making of the picture Carey had a very unpleasant experience, which might have been much more serious. He is the sort who will try anything once, and he has tried most things; so he consented to a very realistic representation of the hanging scene, which is the climax of the story. The sheriff is supposed to shoot the rope with which the cowboys are hanging the outlaw, just in time. An old-time member of a Wild West company, a sharpshooter of renown, was chosen to do the shooting. When the supports were knocked away from under his feet, and Carey hung suspended, the man fired. His first shot missed. Things began to look rather bad for Harry, but fortunately the second shot found its mark, and the actor fell to the ground. He was black in the face and nearly choked. He found it impossible to continue work that day, and was taken to the Universal City hospital, where Dr. Mace gave him expert massage treatment. Carey was hoarse for several days after his uncomfortable experience, and declares that he has become a convert to the anti-capital punishment league, since he has tried what it feels like to be hanged.

The name of a very important member of the cast is omitted from the list, because the editor, unfortunately does not know it. The collie, which really shares the lead with Carey, does everything in the picture but talk. The story follows:

Sheriff Crane's wife and child are preparing for a little journey with their wagon and team. On arriving at the store, the wife, on attempting to get out, stumbles and startles the horses, which causes them to run away, the child hanging on to the wagon.

This is seen by Harry, who, on horseback, is leading a pack horse. He releases the latter and gives chase, captures the runaway horses and returns the child, unhurt, to the mother. The latter returns home to tell her husband of the bravery of the stranger.

Harry stops at the saloon kept by one Vesta, which is patronized by rough Bill and his gang. While there a poor old man enters, accompanied by a dog. He begs for something to eat for himself and the animal, saying that the dog will do tricks in payment. After the performance Bill abuses the dog. Bill strikes the old man and is called to account by Harry. There is a struggle and the gun explodes, killing the old man, but before dying, the latter gives his dog to Harry, begging him to care for it.

Harry leaves with the dog and a threat from Bill. Later, Harry returns and there is a general fight. The gang get after Harry but he escapes. Later he is shot and falls from the horse. The latter races on and Harry crawls into the brush. The gang, misled, ride on. They meet the sheriff and tell him of the affair, saying that if they fail to capture Harry it is up to him.

Vesta, cutting bacon in the saloon, is called away by one of the men, the dog enters, sneaks the bacon and takes it to Harry. Vesta cannot understand where the bacon has disappeared to. The following day the same thing occurs but the dog is seen by Vesta, who shoots, wounding him in the leg. He follows and sees him take the food to Harry.

He returns to the saloon and tells the gang. Harry is captured and brought to the saloon to be lynched. He is seen by the sheriff's wife. She explains to her husband that he is the man who saved their child's life.

The sheriff gives Harry his horse and allows him to depart, the child waving him good-bye.

A Voice from the Border

A. KATZ, the Bluebird operator, now bugler with the 12th New York at McAllen, writes feelingly of his experiences. His facility with the projecting machine adds greatly to his popularity.

A. Katz, Bluebird Motion Picture operator and a member of the 12th Regiment at Camp McAllen.

The editor of the Weekly has received a letter from A. Katz, formerly operator in the projection room of the Bluebird, detailing interestingly his experiences since arriving with the Twelfth Regiment, of which he is bugler at Camp McAllen, Texas. Mr. Katz promises the editor of the Weekly a collection of pictures taken with his own camera, which the editor in turn promises to run in a forthcoming issue of the Moving Picture Weekly. Many of the men on the border complain that the firms which promised to continue their salaries had not kept their word, but no complaint of this kind will be heard from Mr. Katz, for his salary each week is sent to his wife by the Bluebird Company.

Paul Gulick,
Editor Moving Picture Weekly,
1600 Broadway, New York.

Dear Mr. Gulick—Have been receiving The Moving Picture Weekly each week, and wish to thank you most sincerely for your kindness in sending them to me, as they have been one of the few ties that have connected me with New York since I have been here.

I have got a wonderful collection of pictures and views together since being here, most of them being actual scenes along the Rio Grande River and the adjacent territory. If you are able to use any of these pictures in your Weekly I certainly shall feel that my time was amply repaid for taking them.

We have certainly had a varied and interesting experience since our arrival in this busy metropolis (McAllen). It has been one continual round of hardships and a few short spasms of fun now and then. But altogether we have had a checkered career such as we will be able to tell to our children and wives around the fireside in the future.

Soon after our arrival here we were started on our so-called "hardening in" process. Can you imagine stepping off a train in a strange semi-tropical country and starting in with the terrible prospect facing you, of clearing several acres of cactus covered ground teeming with reptiles and insects, when each step would find you face to face with an evil-minded rattlesnake or a deadly scorpion? Sleep was the exception rather than the rule on those first never-to-be-forgotten nights when one might wake up from his uncomfortable bed on the ground, and find a large rattler or numerous other poisonous reptiles as his bed-fellow. Add to this the dismal howl of the coyotes, which made weird music during the entire night, and you can easily see why some of our boys, in fact, the big majority, longed for home sweet home.

Next in the cycle of events came the big hike. This is what broke the hearts of many of the boys. Starting out in the morning with strong, confident steps, and in perfect condition; it was almost impossible to believe it was the same men who came staggering into camp at sunset. Faces and lips parched from the rays of the hot, southern sun and crusted from flying dust of the hot Texas soil. This was kept up for ten days. At the end of each day it seemed as though each step would be the last, but here was where the power of the will overcame the body, and rather than drop out many a man kept on, sustained by his will power only, and fairly staggered into the camp site for that night. Then after getting rid of our packs, which proved to be as heavy as a wagon load, long before the welcome word to halt was given, we had to collect firewood and start our camp fires.

Next came the most delightful thing of the day, that of washing up, but the very scarcity of water curtailed this enjoyment, for we were only allowed a small bucket apiece to bathe and scrub clothes in. For, in this country of waste desert spaces, water is very nearly worth its weight in gold. But oh! the torture of getting up in the morning after lying wrapped up in a blanket on the ground drenched with dew and shivering with the cold. At first it seemed as though our legs and joints would never get unlimbered, but after the sun rose and we began to sweat, all the torture and unpleasantness of the previous day was enacted. At last we reached the limit of our march, and best of all, plenty of water. For we had arrived at Sterling's Ranch, where camp was made and every one had shower baths, the most welcome thing we have enjoyed for many days. Resting here for a day we started to return to our base camp and after more of the same tortures we reached the long looked for end of our march and settled down to daily camp life and drills.

Having quite a lot of spare time on my hands I started practicing on an alto horn and after a few of weeks of diligent practice have become a member of the regimental band. In addition I am running the moving picture shows at the Y. M. C. A. here, and since this is such a small place it makes me quite a popular personage. Can you imagine four or five thousand men trying to amuse themselves in a small town of a few hundred which has only one real street and everything else in like proportion?

Yours sincerely,
A. KATZ,
Twelfth Infantry,
McAllen, Texas.

P. S. I hope this letter will find you and all at the office O. K. Am printing up a set of cards, and will send you them in a few days. Please give my regards to Teddy, the operator. Accept my best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

CHICAGO'S policemen teaching dozens of kiddies to skate in Chicago's ice-covered parks, dozens of lucky fellows buckling on their very best girl's skates, society women, school girls, youngsters, beginners and just plain lovers of the sport furnished the cameraman, in Animated Weekly Number 53, some of the very best views of ruddy-faced skaters that have ever been made, and some of which will find a hit-home spot in the consciousness of every skater in every part of the globe. "I don't feel it a bit," pipes a Hyde Park school girl, though it is several degrees below and all Chicago, skating now, agrees with her. The opening of the skating season, in the various large and small parks and squares of the city, the crowds going and coming, the preparations for the afternoon's sports, the "place of meeting after school," the entertainment of many society women and the crowds of onlookers, with every sort of expression, are just a very view of the wonders

A CHURCH AND—A JOLLY ONE.

IF you were a wounded soldier, hundreds of miles from home, what would you think if, on Christmas morn, you were given a wondrous ride over the snowy country, all snug and warm, thanks to the Motor Voluntary Aid Detachments? No other Christmas present in all the world would be so very welcome to you, one may safely wager.

At the various towns in England containing hospitals for wounded soldiers, splendid work is being carried on by the aid detachments. On the arrival of the Red Cross Ambulance trains they are met by the Detachment's motor cars and driven off to the hospitals. Then again, when soldiers are on the way to convalesence they are bundled up and given a ride across the country, under the best possible conditions. The detachment marching to Cliff Town Church (Southend-on-Sea) and the parade through the town afterwards, headed by the Royal Scots Pipers, gave the cameraman, in Animated Weekly

McADOOS SING CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

THOUSANDS of grown-up kiddies sang Christmas carols on the steps of the United States Treasury Christmas morning, and none of them enjoyed the old-fashioned celebration more than Mr. and Mrs. McAdoo and Miss Margaret Wilson, older daughter of the president, as the close-ups of the cameraman, in Animated Weekly Number 53, colorfully reveal. Human-interest sidelights make this strip of film aglow with interest for every type of audience.

small, piquant features. She is the personification of the adjective "dainty." She wears her dark curls in a tumbled mass which is as careless as it is becoming, and dresses the part in fluffy, youthful frocks, which make her look more like a debutante than a wife. The development of this childish character through suffering and realization of the anxious problems of life is one of the most interesting things in the drama. It is only necessary to add that the two male roles are in the capable hands of William Stowell and Lon Chaney, to demonstrate that this play has been most carefully cast. Mr. Stowell is a stranger to Bluebird patrons, but his good looks and sincere acting will win him many friends. Mr. Chaney has no need of an introduction. His work has already won him a secure place. His role in "The Piper's Price" is something new for him, in that there is not a spark of villainy about it. A summary of the story follows:

Ralph Hadley's divorced wife, Jessica, was a business type of woman while Amy, his present wife is her antithesis in every way. For many years Billy Kilmartin, a lawyer, had been an admirer of Jessica's—years before she was wooed and won by Ralph Hadley, and now that she is free he is quite persistent in his attentions.

Ralph and Jessica hold considerable stock in a certain concern and it becomes necessary that they both attend the directors' meeting. Jessica offers some very good suggestions which win the approval of the company and Ralph feels a thrill of pride in her keenness. He invites her to take lunch with him and some of his friends see them together. That very day Amy overhears her husband and Jessica being discussed. She is very much hurt and fears the other woman. That day the family physician has informed her that she is to become a mother, and she decides, after hearing the talk regarding her husband and Jessica, that she will not tell Ralph the secret.

It so happens one day that Amy visits Ralph's office and finds him and Jessica together; the two women are introduced and Jessica leaves. Amy accuses Ralph of being too friendly with his former wife and makes a scene. This angers Ralph as he knows that it all has been a matter of business. As time goes on, however, he sees Jessica more frequently, and soon the two discover that they are falling in love again.

They spend much time together and one day, while in the woods, Ralph awakens to the fact that Jessica is the one woman. He tells her so, but she reminds him of his present ties. He wishes to forget it; and she, realizing that she really loves him, allows him to shower her with presents and attentions.

Meantime, Amy senses that something is wrong and is very unhappy. Finally she calls upon Jessica in an endeavor to find out if the two are really in love. Jessica thinks Amy has come to beg her to give back her husband. Amy confides her secret to Jessica, who after a fight with herself, sees her duty. Thereafter when Ralph calls she is not at home.

Finally he can stand the suspense no longer and sends her word that he will remain until she will see him. Seeing no way out of it, Jessica goes to the library where a few moments later, Billy arrives. Ralph is told that the two had married that morning. Jessica tells Ralph when they are alone that although they might think they could be happy, yet they had tried it once and made a failure of it, and sends him home to Amy.

Ralph feels that he does not love Amy and so decides to kill himself. As he is on the point of doing so, the doctor comes in and asks him to come to see Amy. To his surprise he discovers that he is the father of a boy. Then, like Jessica, he sees the path of duty before him.

HARRY CAREY ANIMALS' FRIEND.

HARRY CAREY, featured in the Bison picture "The Bad Man of Cheyenne," probably possesses more dogs than any other actor at Universal City, and it is questionable if any one can claim the distinction of being other than a mongrel. No stray dog ever approached Harry and looked up at him with wistful eyes without being invited to dinner and offered a place to sleep.

A few days ago the well-known western actor was at breakfast at the ranch restaurant at Universal City when something brushed against his legs. He looked down and saw that it was a dog, of no particular breed.

"Hello, Ptomaine," said the actor, "had breakfast?" The dog wagged its tail. Harry beckoned a waiter. "Get my friend a steak," pointing to the dog. Ptomaine's breakfast cost Harry fifty-five cents and his own check was only thirty.

Greetings on the Screen

The screen has been used in a unique fashion by the Universal to convey to its patrons throughout the world the New Year's greetings of many of the most prominent Americans. All of the New York papers ran the story of this remarkable feat on December 31st. The Associated Press carried it and other news services took it to their papers. The messages of good will are reproduced below.

"LOOKING into the future, as we all do at New Years' time, I am sure that none of us are so without hope and faith that we cannot see in that future the possibilities for service which are ours as individuals, and, as a nation, it should be our sincere prayer that when the opportunity is offered we will be ready."

Robert Lansing,
Secretarry of State.

"ANOTHER Christmas finds the American people at peace with the world and in the full enjoyment of inestimable blessings. God has not favored this nation so bountifully without imposing upon us the duty and responsibility of contributing something of our great prosperity and of our moral and potential strength for the alleviation of the sufferings of the sorely stricken nations of the earth. God grant that the spirit of charity may fill our hearts and prompt us in this time of happiness and contentment at home to make generous contribution to every charity that will bring joy and happiness to those who are less fortunate than ourselves and particularly those who are suffering the cruelties and horrors of war. And, above all, may our beloved country under the guidance of God, be able to exert its great power and influence successfully for the restoration of peace throughout the world in the year nineteen seventeen.

William G. McAdoo,
Secretary of the Treasury.

"IT is a cause for profound gratitude that this nation has preserved both its peacefulness and its honor. Whether by comparison, with previous years, or by comparison with the remainder of the world, our country never has come to a new year with more cause to be thankful."

Newton D. Baker,
Secretary of War.

The maid meets the wealthy girl.

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama. Scenario by Harry Ditmar. Directed by Francis Grandon, with Violet Mersereau in the appealing role of a little housemaid.

CAST.

Margaret Norton	Violet Mersereau
Edgar Mason	Johnnie Walker
Mr. Marshall	Charles Slattery
Mrs. Marshall	Nellie Slattery
James Mason	Fred Hearn
Mazie Carter	Helen Gautier

VIOLET MERSEREAU is the charming heroine of this Gold Seal mystery drama, which was written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Francis Grandon. The touching story gives the little star a chance to portray many changing moods, from gay to pathetic, in the manner in which she excels.

Edgar Mason had been left a fortune by his father, but a proviso was attached to it. Unless he was married by the time he reached his majority the estate was to go to his uncle. Edgar was nearly twenty-one, and the task of finding a wife in a hurry was staring him in the face. He has received an invitation to visit his friends Mr. and Mrs. Marshall, and though he at first refuses, they induce him to change his mind when they say that their guest, Miss Wells, is just the girl for him.

In the Marshall home is a little housemaid, Margaret Norton, born for better things, but forced to the position of servant by the illness of her mother, which makes it imperative for her to get work of some kind. She is a pretty girl, and the sight of the handsome possessions, and many clothes of Mrs. Marshall and Miss Wells is almost too much for her. She cannot help contrasting her lot with theirs. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall receive no answer to their invitation from Edgar, so they do not know whether he is coming or not. They decide to take Miss Wells to the theatre, and they tell Margaret that if Mr. Mason arrives, he is to have a certain room.

As soon as they have gone Margaret goes to Miss Wells' room and tries on one of her evening gowns. She also puts a string of pearls around her neck. The cook has gone out and she is alone in the house. As she is dressing the bell rings, and she has to go to the door. It is Edgar, and of course he takes her for Miss Wells. They spend a happy evening, though Margaret is on pins and needles for fear that the Marshalls will return. She leaves Edgar, and returns the gown and jewels to Miss Wells' room. Then realizing that she has done an unforgivable thing, she writes a note to the Marshalls, saying that she must leave immediately, and packs up her things, ready to go in the morning.

The other maid, is in reality Mazie Carter, the sweetheart of a thief, and she has arranged with him to rob the house that evening. He steals Miss Wells' jewels and makes his getaway, promising to meet Mazie at a certain spot in the morning, and they will leave the city together. When the Marshalls return, Edgar has gone to bed. In the morning he is introduced to Miss Wells, and, of course, there is a mystery. Then she reports the loss of her jewels, and at the same time they discover that Margaret has left the house, and find the note in which she says that she has done an unforgivable thing. They think that she is the culprit, and the police agreeing, an officer is sent to arrest her. Another officer, however, has recognized Mazie as a character well known to the police, as she opened the door to him.

"When Damon Fell FOR Pythias"

FIRST two-reel comedy produced by the wonderful Jokers, whose vogue grows week by week. A burlesque on the famous Universal feature "Damon and Pythias." It ran for a week at the Rialto Theatre, New York. Adapted for the screen and produced by W. W. Beaudine.

CAST.

Damon	William Franey
Pythias	Charles Conklin
The Emperor	Milburn Moranti
Calanthe, a Roman matron	Gale Henry
Damon's wife	Lydia Y. Titus

"I could not part such friends as youse."

FIFTEEN minutes after this corking Joker two-reeler was shown in the Universal's projection room, it was booked for the Rialto Theatre, one of the largest picture houses in the world, on the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway, New York. Every one remembers the great feature "Damon and Pythias" which was produced by Universal some years ago. This is a burlesque on that great theme, produced by W. W. Beaudine, the Joker's live-wire director. Here is the story as he has arranged it in two reels of continuous laughter.

Besides being president of the Senate, and the husband of the homeliest, most shrewish woman in Syracuse, Damon was a ninety-horse power souse. His legislative assignment was confined to keeping his jug full, and this was no easy task with half the country working for prohibition.

"Stop! I'm back!" cries the noble Damon.

Now Damon's best friend was Pythias, a noble soldier who loved the clanging of swords and women's laughter, and was married to Calanthe, a Roman beauty full of pep. One day Dionysius spied Calanthe, and asked his prime minister who the chicken was.

"Why, that's Pythias' wren."

"Call Pythias to me," said Dionysius. "I have an idea." And straightway he sent his faithful soldier to capture a band of moonshiners in order to establish for himself a rep, meaning, when the good friends corrected him, to cop his dame. But Pythias routed the moonshiners, and brought the ringleader back in chains, much to Dionysius' discomfiture. Also to the dismay of Damon, who saw his source of happiness thus shattered.

Now Pythias knew that Mrs. Damon would never forgive her spouse if he did not say good-bye to her before being deprived of his head, and offered to stay in jail as hostage for him while Damon went home to bid farewell to his better half. But poor Damon had little heart for the business, and when he espied Calanthe, he straightway forgot all about his duty to die. At last the sight of his wife recalls Damon to duty, and he arrives at the palace just as faithful Pythias is about to lose his head. But the Emperor relents, saying, "I could not part such friends as youse."

The Man on the Cover

THE ROMANTIC STORY OF THE LIFE OF UNIVERSAL'S FAMOUS PLAYER OF REAL MAN'S PARTS, READS LIKE ONE ONE OF HIS OWN PLAYS. HE IS A JACK OF ALL TRADES, BUT A MASTER OF SEVERAL.

By MARJORIE HOWARD

WHEN they put Harry Carey's name in "Who's Who," they'll have to give him more space than they devote to the President of the United States, in order to give readers of that impressive work a bare outline of his accomplishments. Every other year or so, until he made such a reputation in pictures that any other career was out of the question, Carey wrote a different profession, or avocation, after his name. Here are a few of the things that he has been: Cowboy, street railroad superintendent, author, lawyer, playwright, stage-manager, athlete, prize-fighter, expert swimmer, prospector, and director of photoplays. And Carey is only thirty-three years old! There is an old saying which declares that "a jack-of-all-trades is master of none." If you attempt to apply that to Carey, however, thousands of screen fans will rise up all over the country and call you anything but blessed.

Carey was not one of the traditional youths who starts with a dime in his pocket and dies a millionaire. He had every advantage of position and education, which it was in the power of his father, Judge Henry D. Carey, one of the best known jurists of New York, to bestow upon his son. Their home was on City Island, where members of his family still reside. From the time he was twelve years old, Harry began to distinguish himself. His first remarkable feat was to swim, at that age, from City Island across Long Island Sound to what was known as Huckleberry Island, a distance of three miles. At school he was always first in everything connected with both books and sports. His father believed in raising his boy to be a soldier, and Harry went to Hamilton Military Academy. Here he was captain of the football team, and pitcher of the nine. He spent his vacations at home, but not in loafing. His father was the owner of the City Island Street Railway, an institution which, at this time, boasted three cars and ten horses with a circuit of two miles. Harry asked to be made superintendent of this flourishing transportation company, and he set to work to reorganize the whole thing. The result of his efforts was that, some time later, the Judge was offered and accepted $10,000 from a syndicate for this valuable franchise. And the beginning of this prosperity was laid by a sixteen-year-old boy.

Harry was intended for the bar, and sent to New York University as a preliminary. He entered at seventeen, and continued his athletic career. He held the record for the running high jump for some time, and also for throwing the sixteen-pound hammer. He also played football and baseball on the college teams. But staging plays for the dramatic society gave him keener delight than even athletics. He not only staged and acted in these theatrical efforts, but was often the author of them as well. He read law, and was duly admitted to the bar, and won his first case. But, to paraphrase Kipling, "if you've heard the stage a-calling, you won't never heed naught else." Harry got the idea of writing a real, dyed-in-the-wool Western play, and he determined to get his local color at first hand.

So he shut up his law office, and hiked to Montana, to try the life of a cowpuncher. It suited him down to the ground, and he was able so completely to enter into the spirit of the life that later, when he put it on the stage in a play called "Montana," he scored an emphatic success, not only in New York but all over the country.

As in so many cases, the play which eventually made a hit, was turned down by every manager to whom it was shown. Harry persuaded his father to back him, so that he could produce it personally, under the condition that, if it proved a failure, he should return to the law and give up the theatre for good. "Montana" was produced in New Rochelle, with Harry himself in the lead. It held the boards all season, and was sent out on the road the next year with four companies. The Judge received a handsome profit on his investment, and was reconciled to his son's abandonment of the legal profession.

Harry had an idea for a play about Alaska, but he felt that he did not know the country sufficiently. So off he went, with some of the proceeds of "Montana," and remained this time for eight months prospecting in the new country. Then he came back with the scenario of "The Heart of Alaska" in his head. He took the leading role himself, and the play scored a gratifying success at the Majestic in New York, and on tour all over the country. It was while touring with this play, that Carey had an experience which might have tempted him away from the stage. He is a strong and clever boxer, and at one time held the title of champion middleweight of New York State. In Minneapolis, Battling Nelson was advertised to meet all comers for three rounds, and Harry's manager persuaded him to take up the challenge. The meeting was to be quite "friendly," but in the first round Nelson gave Harry a jab which got him going, and in the next round Carey decided to make it a real match. The result was that Nelson absolutely refused to believe that the actor was an amateur, and all the sporting fraternity begged him to enter the square circle in earnest, declaring that he was wasted on the stage.

But instead of a prize-fighting career, Carey decided to go into pictures. He thought he saw there a fine opportunity for the employment of his "punch." People scoffed—pictures in those days were considered below the dignity of a "regular" actor. Harry usually knows what he wants, however, and he signed up with the old Biograph players. Henry Walthal was in the same company, and after a while the two young men decided to produce pictures "on their own." City Island offered an ideal place for a studio. So they installed themselves there, under the title of the "Progressive Film Company." They produced some very good pictures, but found great difficulty in marketing their products. One six-reel feature, in particular, a screen version of "The Master Cracksman," which Carey wrote and directed, as well as playing the name part, is still remembered as a fine achievement. About a year and a half ago, Carey came to Universal, and was a "hit" from the start. His first picture was a five-reel feature "Just Jim," and all his friends hope that it may be a very long time before the chronicler has to record his last. No one believes more firmly in the mission of the screen than Harry Carey. Pictures call out the best that is in him, and he gives himself unsparingly to them. He will take any risk, dare any stunt, to add a thrill to a film. H let himself be very nearly hanged in order to give realism to the Bison play "The Bad Man of Cheyenne," which is illustrated on the cover of this number of the Weekly.

Carey "bulldogging" a steer.

Carey's company directed by Fred. A. Kelsey, who is kneeling behind him.

Carey's screen work is distinguished for its sincerity and restraint. He never overplays, he never rants. He strives for the highest degree of naturalness at all times. For this reason he always works without make-up. This is what he says himself about his screen life. "I was one of the earliest converts to the 'silent drama' long before moving pictures came into their own, chiefly, I suppose, because I inherit a love for the great outdoors. The happiest days of my life have been spent in the open with my horse and rifle; many of the plots for my stories and plays have come to me at the campfire. To me the motion picture art is capable of higher development than that of the spoken drama. Does not the theatre with it four walls, its footlights and painted scenery, so force itself upon the consciousness of the artist, by its artificiality, that he is compelled to act rather than live the character he is portraying? Behold the contrast of the photodrama with the whole universe for its stage! In such an atmosphere can one call it acting to portray the big, kind-hearted, red-blooded adventurers as one knows them?"

"FIGHTING FOR LOVE"

RED FEATHER Photoplay. Story and production by Raymond Wells. Scenario by Fred Myton, featuring Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Mulhall. The romance of a little Queen of Nowhereland and an Arizona cowboy, with warfare and love-making in equal proportions.

CAST.

Sylvia	Ruth Stonehouse
Jim	Jack Mulhall
Ferdinand	Jean Hersholt
Johnny Little Bear	Noble Johnson
Bill Guard	J. F. Briscoe
King's Favorite	Ruby Marshall

"I'm a Kink!" said Jim.

WHEN you have seen this picture, you will regret keenly that you cannot dispatch a troupe of cowboys to fight for whichever side in the present conflict has your sympathies. In this thrilling romance, written and produced by Raymond Wells from the scenario by Fred Myton, the cowpunchers prove conclusively that their ideas of warfare and love-making would be very acceptable to the people of the other side of the hemisphere, for whom life has lost its first illusions.

This story is all about a queen of one of those tiny little principalities, which we should think just about big enough for an estate for the great John D., or some other king of industry, but which is equipped with all the formal ceremony of a court of one of the major powers, and clings all the more closely to the outward show of royalty, because there is really so little basis for such pomp. Sylvia was queen of just such a pocket handkerchief state, and across the way lived the king of another, about the same size. He was a pitiful degenerate, and the spunky little queen utterly refused to have anything to do with him. So what do you think he did? He called his army together and declared war on her. He had at least six more men in his army than she had in hers, so things looked rather serious for her future. But Jim and Johnny Little Bear, his inseparable companion, an educated Indian who used the most high-brow language, just happened along, on a sight-seeing tour of Europe.

Well, he met the queen, and he was hers. So when she confided her difficulty, he sent for his gang and they cleaned up the place in wonderful style. Johnny's reversion to type under the excitement of real warfare is one of the many amusing touches of this rib-tickling comedy, which bubbles along at a rapid rate, and takes our entire sympathies with it. Here is a brief outline of the story, which does little more than suggest the good things to come.

In adjoining kingdoms rule Sylvia, beloved of her people, and Ferdinand, who is forced to exact homage from his subjects. He spends his life in riotous living and his name stands for all that spells the unfavorable. One day the two meet, and straightway Ferdinand decides that he will marry the beautiful queen, sending his prime minister with the proposal. But she refuses it. He delivers the ultimatum that unless she consents to his proposal within a certain space of time, he will declare war.

"They say you ought to marry me!" stammered Jim.

In far-away America, near the Western coast, two cowboys, Jim and Johnny Little Bear, discover a rich mine and decide to spend some of the money traveling. The two start out.

And it so happens that during their travels they stop near the kingdom of Sylvia, and Jim, wishing to see a real queen, makes bold to climb the wall. He sees a beautiful lady, who is none other than Sylvia herself, but he thinks her one of the court ladies. She finally confides the predicament of the queen, and he tells her that he will come to the assistance of the great lady, thinking to find favor in her eyes for now he is madly in love with her.

He wires to Bill, one of the cowboys, and tells him to come on with the whole gang. When he rides to the palace to tell the lady, he finds that she is the queen.

Meantime, Ferdinand's favorite, seeing that her reign is coming to an end, tries to hold him, but he refuses to have more to do with her. Both sides prepare for battle. Ferdinand, with his army, attacks Sylvia's force before the cowboys arrive, and they are being forced to retreat when Bill arrives and saves the day. The favorite is killed when she tries to slay Sylvia, but is hit by one of the bullets.

Jim explains to the boys that he is in love with Sylvia, and they finally persuade him to ask her hand in marriage. But Sylvia kindly explains that though she loves him, yet the dictates of custom compel her to marry royalty.

Bill and the boys, seeing that Jim is feeling this keenly, leave him in the palace and after a time return, telling him that they have captured the whole of Sylvia's forces, and that now he is the king. Sylvia is informed of this and with queenly dignity places her crown upon Jim's head—and so accepts his proposal of marriage.

"That's what war means!" said the Queen.

RUTH STONEHOUSE STAR OF "FIGHTING FOR LOVE"

SWICKARD FILMS EAST INDIAN STORY.

DIRECTOR CHARLES SWICKARD has under production at Universal City a powerful photoplay with an East Indian and English atmosphere, "Beyond the Pale," written by J. Grubb Alexander. The leading role has been given to Claire McDowell, who declares it one of the best she has ever attempted in her screen career. L. C. Shumway plays opposite in a strong part which gives him a real opportunity to display his abilities as a juvenile actor. The heavy is enacted by Hector Sarno, who has been especially engaged for the part, and who also played several prominent roles in other Universal productions.

CAREY OPENS NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

UPON the opening of the Colonial, a handsome motion picture theatre in South Pasadena, the management selected a big Universal feature written by Peter B. Kyne, as the premier offering.

In addition Harry Carey, who was featured in the production, was invited to come to the theatre and make an address, which the well-known western actor did in fine style. He was accompanied to the playhouse by the different members of his Universal company, including Director F. A. Kelsey, Claire DuBrey, the leading lady; S. W. Lawson, assistant director; William Gettinger and Vesta Pegg. The theatre was filled and hundreds stood outside awaiting the second performance.

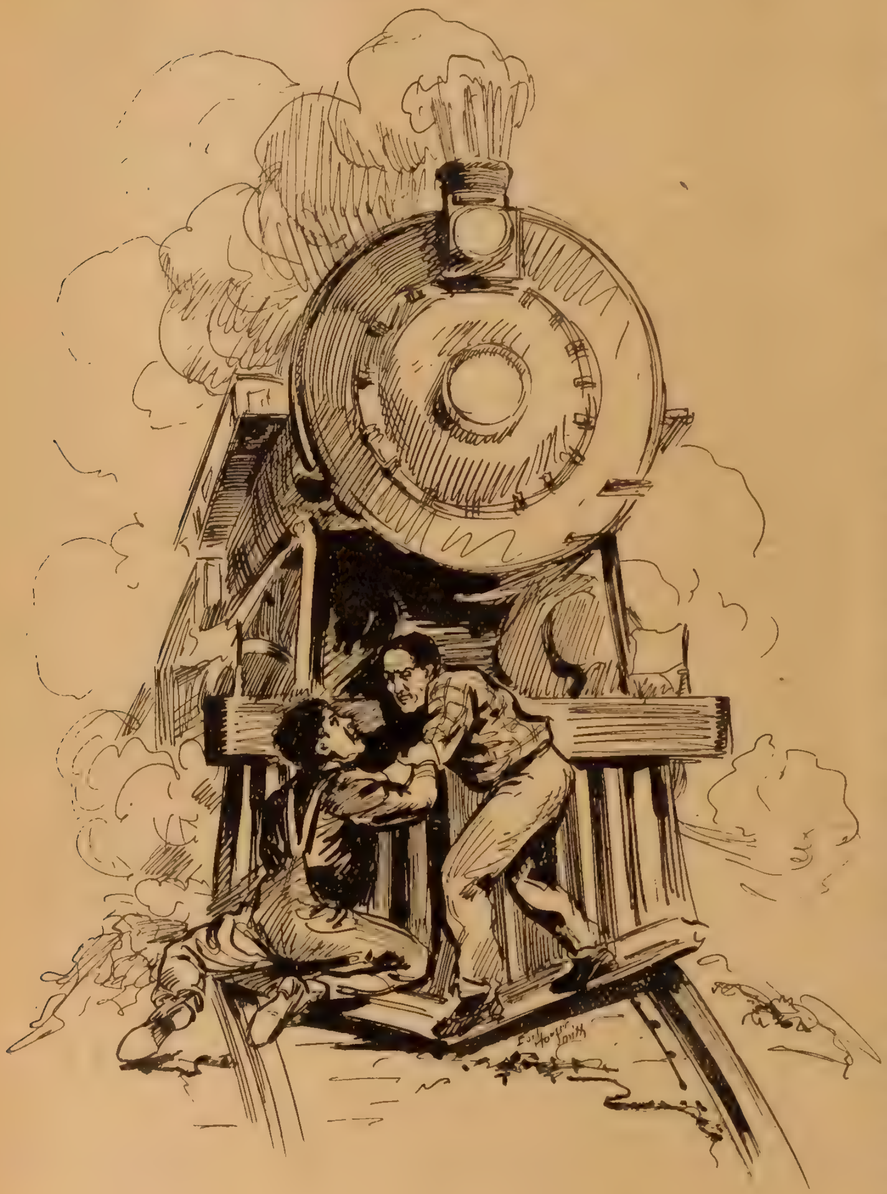
BEN WILSON RAREBIT FIEND.

THERE is no savory preparation that appeals to the palate of Ben Wilson, leading man of the Lois Weber company at Universal City, more than Welsh rarebit, and Wilson was in his glory one day this week.

He plays the role of an artist in Miss Weber's current production and one of the scenes is laid in his studio where he entertains a dozen or more of his friends at a dinner. Real Welsh rarebits were prepared for the guests, and during the making of the scene Wilson lost no opportunity of "sneaking" a spoonful of the appetizing rarebit whenever he could.

"Fortunately I am blessed with one of those cast-iron stomachs you have heard about," said Wilson, "and I can eat a Welsh rarebit any time of the day or night without any disastrous consequences."

"The Call For Help"



BIG U Two-Reel Mining Drama of Mexican border. Produced by Henry McRae and featuring Val Paul, Betty Schade and Marie Walcamp.

HENRY McRAE is the producer of this remarkably thrilling drama, which finds its main locale in Mexico. It is the biggest, the most intense thriller, both from a spectacular and dramatic standpoint, that McRae has directed in months. And that is saying much. Hundreds of cowboys, miners, and Mexicans have been used in many of the scenes; there are genuine scenes of a big mining camp where, in one of the scenes, the most spectacular, terrific mine explosion that has ever been shown in motion pictures takes place. A fortune has been spent to make the picture stand out with realism, to make it a gripping play of the first water. A complete train, with miles of track, was secured at great expense for the tremendous scenes which show the bloody three-cornered fight between the miners, detectives and Mexican Indians.

Here is the story of the play briefly told:

A young U. S. mining expert is in love with the daughter of a wealthy mining man. Being poor, the old father objects to his suit. The play opens with a beautiful ballroom set. It is the coming-out party of the young girl. The mining man has just received word from his mine in Mexico that the mine is not paying through improper management. The father conceives the idea of sending the young expert down with the promise that if he makes a success of the mine in six months, he can claim the girl. The expert accepts the proposition, and leaves with a band of miners of his own choosing.

On arriving, the Mexican foreman is made the assistant foreman of the expert, and the Indians, resenting the intrusion of the Americans, are discharged. The leader, the brother of the Mexican foreman's sweetheart, plans for revenge against the young expert. He manages to arouse the assistant foreman's jealousy and secures his aid.

When the young expert is down with his companions in the mine investigating conditions, a huge blast of powder is lowered by the Indians and exploded. The expert escapes with his life by mere chance. He immediately wires an account of the affair to the owner, advising him to send on detectives. The sweetheart, hearing of the trouble, persuades her father to accompany the detectives, taking her with him.

The assistant foreman learns of their coming and, with his followers, plans to attack the train. The attack is made in a spectacular manner; the train is started again, after being stopped, and there is a fight on the train itself; one of the most exciting and thrilling imaginable.

The young expert hears of it and leads his men to the assistance of the detectives and train crew. After great excitement the owner and his daughter are finally brought to safety and the young expert secures consent to marry the girl.

"Purple Mask" Heroine Carries A Bird Cage

Grace Cunard Introduces Novel Fashion Fad in New Universal Serial.

GRACE CUNARD has the reputation of being the first to do things, whether they are sartorial things or otherwise. In "The Purple Mask," the new Universal serial in which she is starred with Francis Ford, she is one of the first, if not the only, actress to carry a live bird in a bird cage, as ordinary mortals carry bags and pocketbooks.

Miss Cunard did not invent the fashion. Somebody started it at Newport last summer, in rivalry of the fad of the winter before, which consisted of carrying a tiny monkey or two in a chiffon scarf. But to Miss Cunard belongs the credit of introducing the idea to the screen. That's only one of the original things that she does in the sartorial line, in the new serial. She had not time to come on to New York to shop for the picture, as she usually does, but she sent to her regular dressmakers and Fifth avenue stores for unusual things, and they all appear in "The Purple Mask."

The heroine of the new serial has a passion for animal pets. She has a kennel full of dogs, fifteen of them at present, but the number is continually on the increase, because all her millions of screen friends know her delight in them, and from time to time a new one arrives at her Hollywood bungalow, from an unknown admirer of her work. Some of them come from a long distance, and most of them bring their pedigrees as credentials.

One of the features of her establishment is an aviary, containing many specimens of rare birds, ranging from parrots to canaries. It is from this collection that the bird was chosen to make a screen debut with her in the fourth episode of the serial. In the second, some of her dogs became actors, a Pekinese, imported from China in defiance of the imigration laws, and a toy spaniel. Others of her unique menagerie may possibly appear from time to time.

Carrying pets of some sort has been popular with fashionable women, ever since the days of William the Conqueror, and every school child remembers that his date was 1066. In those days the smart women went about with hawks on their wrists, which were trained, when let free, to catch field mice, small birds, and even rabbits. You could make no pretension of belonging to the chic world, if you did not own one. Dogs, and cats, and even squirrels on slender silver chains, took the place of hawks as the world grew older. There are portraits of the middle of the last century which depict ladies of the gay world accompanied in society by their pet parrots. But it has remained for the present year to conceive the idea of putting a bird into an expensive and highly decorated cage, hanging it from the arm by a ribbon, and making it do the act of Mary's little lamb of historic memory. Miss Cunard appears at the picture exhibition in the fourth episode of the serial, so armed, and when she overhears a plot to dispose of her own fair self she probably decides that it is too dangerous for her pet to remain in her immediate neighborhood, for the bird goes out of the picture, and we do not see it again. But you never know what an original person like Grace Cunard may be planning, and it is a good idea to watch carefully what she does in sartorial matters from week to week in the serial.

There are many costume surprises coming. In the third episode we see her first in a chic evening gown, and then in her Apache garb, which consists of a black blouse, black tights, and a big cloak. She will wear many other new things.

Grace Cunard and her newest fad.

How Miss Gale Henry Refuses a Suitor

SHE has to do it regularly now, you know, because —she's married.

IN the last number of the Weekly, we gave the details of the wedding of Miss Gale Henry, of the Jokers, to Mr. Bruno Becker, assistant director at Universal City. The cut herewith illustrates the fate which he escaped by her acceptance of his offer of his hand and heart. It is from next week's Joker, "Barred from the Bar," and shows the rigor and ruthlessness of her method of dealing with unacceptable suitors. Milburn Moranti is the spurned one, and Director Beaudine, as the sheriff, is interrupting his protestations of undying affection.

Miss Henry's face looks like nothing in the world so much as a Japanese print which has been smeared out of all original semblance to a human countenance, in the making. That is the exact expression with which all suitors for her hand have been turned down, until Mr. Becker arrived on the scene. It is said of Miss Henry that no man who was once refused by her, has ever had the temerity to offer himself a second time; and we can well believe it. There is a certain air of finality about her mouth, and a definite rejection in the pose of her good right hand.

"Barred from the Bar" is the very comedy upon which the company was working when she announced her intention of becoming Mrs. Becker. In it, she begins life as a sort of comedy-vampire, and turns, later, into a champion of prohibition.

Note the supercilious expression on Gale's face as she orders "Officer" Beaudine to remove the suitor in "Barred From the Bar."

"GOOD will really prevails between most of the people of the world, even in this time of horror; ask the soldiers on all sides of the war if this is not so. Wasn't it Boswell who said that the man you didn't like was the man you didn't know?"

Franklin K. Lane,
Secretary of the Interior.

"MY Christmas sentiment is that the world may soon witness a restoration of peace on an enduring basis of right."

W. B. Wilson,
Secretary of Labor.

"AMERICAN homes were brightened last week by the unparalleled performance of three hundred thousand postal workers who delivered on time one hundred and twenty-five million Christmas gifts and two billion Christmas messages. You brightened the homes of these three hundred workers by every parcel, letter or card, that you mailed so early so that necessary work in post-offices on Christmas might be reduced to the minimum."

A. S. Burleson,
Postmaster General.

"PEACE on earth and good will among men; for this let all men work and pray."

William C. Redfield,
Secretary of Commerce.

"IN the words of Tiny Tim, 'God bless us every one.'"

Champ Clark.

"REPRESENTING the people of the State of New York, it is a great pleasure for me to give expression to their good will and good wishes for all their fellow citizens throughout the land."

Charles S. Whitman,
Governor of the State of New York.

"THE most important practical lesson of the present war, to America, is that the command of the sea, and the command of the land are worthless without command of the air. The millions expended on our army and navy and on our coast defenses will be wasted; the millions put into the Panama Canal will be thrown away; the billions of value in our great cities will be subject to ruin and the very existence of the United States will be in danger unless we have a great air fleet which shall give us the command of the air."

Rear Admiral Robert Peary.

Our Japanese Correspondent

OUR Japanese correspondent is evidently very proud of the New Years' edition of the Katsudo No Sekai, or the Japanese Moving Picture Magazine, for he sends a copy to the Weekly, without comment, allowing it to speak for itself. It is indeed an imposing number, from its "front" cover, placed in Nipponese fashion at the back, upon which there is a reproduction of a Japanese beauty in six colors, to the last ad on the front cover, which on the other side of the world, they call the back.

Inside there are innumerable full-page reproductions of Japanese actors, of the screen and of the stage. It is rather a Barmecide feast for the Western movie fan, for though there are most exciting situations portrayed, he has not the faintest idea what it is all about. The general impression that he gains from looking it over, is that in the Flowery Kingdom, you play everything with your feet spread very wide apart, in a bent-kneed attitude which we associate chiefly with Swedish exercises.

One of the illustrations is reproduced on this page. It shows the interior of a motion picture studio, with one of the "idols of the screen" posing for a "still," surrounded by Nipponese beauties. From the expression of his ears, the picture seems to be a comedy. Such aural appendages could not be tragic if they tried. Note the bank of lights at the left, and the director telling them to look at the point which he is indicating. There is a long description at the side. Don't you wish you could read it?

WELLS FILMS REMARKABLE SCENE OF CANNIBAL VILLAGE.

ONE of the most interesting sets ever erected at Universal City was provided for the use of Raymond Wells, who is directing Ruth Stonehouse in "Love Aflame," the Red Feather production in which the star of "Fighting for Love" will next appear.

In this photoplay Miss Stonehouse enacts the role of a boy and is required to go through a large number of thrilling adventures in different countries. Jack Mulhall, Fronzie Gunn, Jean Hersholt and Noble Johnson have important parts in the cast. This particular set depicts a cannibal village where the wild men and women are seen to capture Hersholt and plan to cook him for a feast. Several hundred people were used. The dancers were Universal actresses whose bodies had been colored for the different scenes.

KINTARO SAKAMOTO.

Tokyo, Japan.

This set, a cannibal village, was constructed without any regard to expense. In it were seen not only the cannibals with the spears and shields of the South Africans, but in the trees were monkeys jumping about, parrots and cockatoos were perching in the boughs and wild animals were even prowling in the background. The set attracted a great deal of attention not only from the visitors at Universal City but all of the other directors and players. Wells worked all of the time with four cameras filming the scenes from different angles.

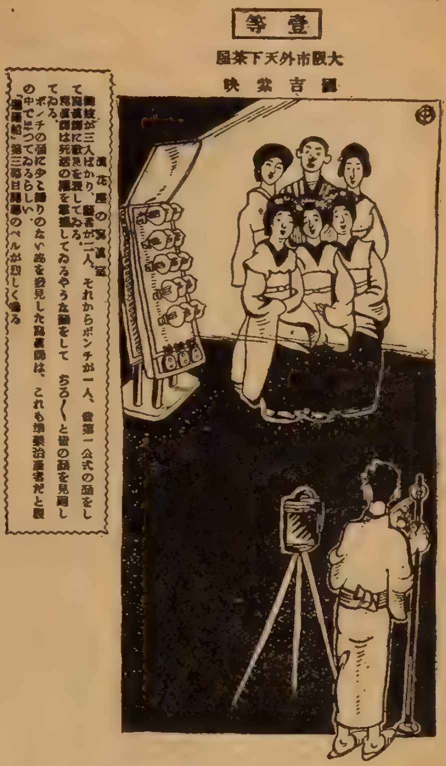
SPENT XMAS IN NEW YORK.

MARTIN MURPHY, who is assistant director to Stuart Paton at Universal City, has been given a leave of absence to spend the holidays with his mother in New York. Murphy was with Paton in the West Indies when the submarine scenes for the big Universal production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," were filmed and he has not had a vacation in two years. No sooner had he reached the metropolis than he received a telegram for Mr. Paton to return at once, as he was to start on the new "Voice on the Wire" series and needed him. So Martin wished every one a Happy New Year and hopped onto the Century on Tuesday for Universal City again.

CALLS ZOE RAE "MOVIE QUEEN"

A SASKATOON, CAN., admirer of Zoe Rae, six-year-old film star of Universal City, refers to her as "The Little Queen of the Movies." Her next appearance will be in "A War Waif," a Universal Special Feature, released on February 1. Probably few actresses in the world have more admirers than little Zoe, and there is a constant demand from all parts of the country that she appear personally with her film plays. This, however, is impossible as her services are required daily at Universal City.

Her Canadian correspondent writes her that she feels as if she could go up to the screen and kiss her, as she is her favorite of all. Baby Zoe receives an abundance of mail daily which her mother is very careful to answer. Many of the letters contain some little remembrance from Zoe personally.



MULHALL DISLIKES LIONS.

"HEREAFTER I want to confine my associates to the actors and actresses at Universal City and nothing doing on the lions and leopards," declares Jack Mulhall, leading man for Raymond Wells' Universal company which recently produced "Love Aflame," a Red Feather, featuring Ruth Stonehouse.

In a number of the scenes of the five-reel production several of the Universal lions were used, and during one of the waits between scenes, Mulhall was asked to guard one end of the enclosure containing the lions. Something outside interested these denizens of the jungle and they started—so did Mulhall in the same direction. By the time the keepers of the lions came the young actor had sought safety in a tree. He declares it is the first time in his life he knew he had any of the attributes of a monkey.

A BEAUTIFUL Persian picture is being filmed by Allan Holubar, director of artistic productions at Universal City. It is an original story by Grace Helen Bailey of the Universal scenario staff, who has been engaged in its preparation for the past three months. In addition to directing the picture Holubar will enact the leading role in the play, which is entitled "The Broken Bowl."

"THE WHISPERED NAME"

REX Two-Reel Melodrama. Story by Wm. Wallace Cook. Scenario by Chas. J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by Donald MacDonald. Featuring Lois Wilson and Lee Hill in a crook story with original touches.

CAST.

Wm. Standiford	Lee Hill
Madeline Evers	Lois Wilson
Orrington Fyles	Hayward Mack
Ethel Fortesque	Nellie Allen
Holmes	T. D. Crittenden

IT sometimes seems to the devotee of the movies, that crooks, crime and consequences of the predilection of the one for the other are the favorite of favorites as a subject for the screen. It is true that, ever since the invention of the detective story, this topic has dominated not only the realm of the stage, and from it the screen, but fiction as well. All imaginable forms of breaking the laws of the land have served authors as the main feature of their plots. So popular has the whole field become with writers that it seems impossible that any branch of crime should remain unexplored. That is what makes this Rex drama, from a story by Wm. Wallace Cook, adapted for the screen by Chas. J. Wilson, Jr., and produced by Donald MacDonald, a very unusual achievement. The omnipresent subject has actually been treated in an original way, or rather, the scheme of a band of crooks which serves as a basis for the picture, is really an original one. Lee hill is the "best man" of the coming wedding who is forced to join the criminals, by a combination of the most remarkable circumstances; and Lois Wilson, looking prettier than ever, is the bridesmaid.

On arriving in the village of Hopeville to act as best man at his friend's wedding, Standiford finds a note stating that his friend has been delayed and for him to amuse himself at the County Fair or call upon Ethel Fortesque, the future bride—adding that he would meet Madeline Evers, who was to act as bridesmaid.

Madeline and Standiford, not knowing each other, meet by chance at the County Fair, when Standiford returns a purse that she has dropped. Standiford finds a pin, which he places in his scarf. A country rube is wearing a pin of the same design and he winks at him knowingly. Standiford follows the rube and sees another man, wearing the same style pin, hand him a wallet. He is jostled by a tramp, who whispers "Do you take or keep?" Standiford answers "I keep." Whereupon a purse is thrust into his hand, the same one he had just returned to Madeline, and on opening it he finds Madeline's card. He compares it with the letter left by his friend. A warning is whispered in his ear. Then Grimes, the deputy sheriff, arrests him, giving as an excuse the pin in his scarf. Three of the gang witness his arrest and plan to aid his escape. Two of them wait at the entrance with a wagon while the other one appears against Standiford in order to allay suspicion. The crook who is to appear against Standiford reaches the sheriff first and whispers to him mysteriously, also handing him a telegram. Madeline has reported her loss and is waiting in the office on the grounds when Standiford is brought before the sheriff outside the office. Embarrassed, Standiford gives the name of Benjamin Parker until he can explain the situation to the sheriff alone. The sheriff reads the telegram, stating that a gang of pickpockets are operating at the fair, each wearing a scarf pin of the same design as Standiford's. The crook swears that Standiford stole his wallet. Standiford denounces him but none will listen to him. The purse and Standiford's wallet are found on him. The purse is returned to Madeline and the sheriff points to Standiford as the thief. She defends him, but the sheriff shows her the wallet they had found on him and says Standiford has just given the name of Benjamin Parker. The escape is affected by the crooks and Standiford is taken to their rendezvous, where he is discovered by Fyles, their leader and a society crook. Fyles forces him, under threat of death, to join them in a burglary that night.

Unknown to Standiford, the house they plan to rob is that of Judge Fortesque. Tops, Holmes, Fyles and Standiford make up the party and with the butler, as an accomplice, gain entrance. Miss Fortesque and Madeline return home and Fyles forces Standiford to seize Madeline when she enters the room. He whispers that he is her friend and to pretend to faint. She does so and is carried to a chair near the table. Standiford then takes off his mask and, telling Fyles of his true identity, defies him to force him to go any further. Fyles draws his revolver but is stopped by Madeline with a revolver. Standiford seizes the opportunity and disarms Fyles. Meantime Holmes has seized Tops and they are struggling. Standiford hears it upstairs and, tying Fyles up with the rope, he rushes downstairs and gets into the fight. The sheriff and his deputy arrive. Standiford has subdued Tops and later finds out that Holmes is a detective and gives Standiford all the credit for the capture. As the picture fades a suggestion of a deeper affection between Standiford and Madeline is given.

"THE PURPLE MASK"

EPISODE - THE CAPTURE - THREE

EPISODE THREE of the super-serial, written by Grace Cunard and produced by Francis Ford, is entitled "The Capture." Pat is crowned queen of the underworld, and the plot thickens more and more.

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Detective Kelly	Francis Ford
Mrs. Van Nuys	Jean Hathaway
Silk Donahue	John Duffy
Pete, Kelly's assistant	Pete Gerald
Bull, another assistant	Jerry Ash
Stephen Dupont	John Featherstone
Jacques, the butler	Mario Biannchi

IN the last episode, Detective Kelly was just about to arrest Pat for the robbery of the pearls in the cafe. The detective ordered the whole company to be searched, and we were somewhat apprehensive, for we felt sure that Pat was responsible for the theft. This episode is concerned with her clever outwitting of Phil, and the result of her ability. The Apaches hear of her great dexterity and nerve from Silk Donahue and the butler, who have helped her engineer the deal. They decide to crown her queen of the underworld. The episode gives Miss Cunard an opportunity to appear in two absolutely different styles of dress, first a smart and becoming evening gown, and later in another costume, equally becoming but quite startling. It consists of little more than a blouse and a pair of black tights. The story of this chapter follows:

When Phil Kelly, The Sphinx, reached the table where Patricia and her aunt were seated, he returned the handcuffs to his pocket. It was clear that Kelly was "bluffing," and Pat smiled tauntingly as he turned from the table defeated in his purpose. The Sphinx stationed his men at every exit and gave orders that guests of the Cafe Chic must be searched for the Dupont pearls. Had Kelly's eyes been as keen as Pat's hand was swift and sure, he would have discovered the pearls—for the girl slipped them into the outside pocket of his coat, just before she submitted to a search by one of the maids in attendance. And when Kelly invited Mrs. Van Nuys and Pat to accept his escort to their home, the ladies accepted—for a purpose Pat had clearly in mind. Seated beside Kelly in the cab, the clever girl again secured possession of the Dupont pearls by slipping her hand into the pocket where she had placed them and swiftly and deftly extracting them from Kelly's safe keeping. So cleverly had Patricia engineered the robbery at the Cafe Chic her fame spread in the underworld and the Apaches decided to crown her as their queen and put her in supreme command of their operations. Jacques engineered the coronation, and among those who attended were Phil Kelly and several of his assistants. Pat was radiant and boyish in the Apache costume she had selected as her "coronation robes"—a black velvet blouse and black tights that reached to her hips. It was well that she had freedom of movement in her attire, for the Apaches had barely assembled for the merrymaking when Kelly swooped down upon the Cafe Chat Noir and tried to arrest everybody present. But the Apaches were not to be so easily caught. From the Chat Noir ran numerous dark passages that led to the network of sewers that make Paris a marvel of sanitation. The Apaches piled into these great, high passageways and fled in all directions. Kelly made it his personal effort to capture Patricia and her garb made her easy to follow. Finally, after a long chase, the Sphinx overtook the girl in her mad flight and, lifting her in his strong arms, carried her out of the sewers and directly to his own apartments, still masked and disguised in her Apache garb.

Kelly thinks he has his quarry at last.

What the Screen Magazine Offers

The waffles pan and the waffle fiend.

The Horace Mann School instructor, who exemplifies the Screen Magazine's athletic exercises.

WORKING in direct accord with the New York Board of Health with which it is affiliated; going down to the very bottom of every subject investigated; sparing no effort and no expense to present the human side of every public problem and its every possible preventitive; safeguarding the health, the appearance and the housewife, The Universal Screen Magazine, already recognized as a national force, brings to thousands, in the most entertaining and instructive form, the activities of the world of achievement.

Universal Screen Magazine No. 5 issued next week proves the most exceptional thus far.

Thought to have reached the acme of usefulness to the spectator of every walk of life, this number develops a new series of features which doubles its appeal, triples its entertaining attributes, and furnishes invaluable knowledge for personal appearance, digestion and pocketbook.

While military preparedness occupies the world today, physical preparedness has always occupied its thought. From the early Spartans and the Greek runners, to the Roman gladitorial contestants, and on down to the present moment, men and women have ever recognized the high necessity of being physically prepared.

The Universal Screen Magazine, abreast with the trend of modern thought and realizing this need of exercise, while appreciating the demands on the strength and time of modern humanity, has begun in No. 5, a series of the most practical and at the same time simple lessons—lessons which can be taken in any place, by any one, and which require but twenty minutes of time every day.

They include exercises for fallen arches, an exercise to strengthen the back and reduce the hips, for the arms and the legs, for those who bend at work, balancing exercises, movements to increase circulation, exercises to keep the blood in circulation, lower back and abdominal exercises, exercises to increase the lung capacity and exercises that make for the general health of the body.

Thousands of girls and men bend over daily tasks. Thousands of them, whether working in sweat shops, banks or leisurely spending the hours, are confined within doors, stooping, sitting, or in worse positions. Thousands of them have read books on "How To Keep Well." But never before have they been shown, simply, clearly, logically and in minute detail, just how to perform the simple exercises in their own rooms, or on roof or porch, which will keep them well, happy, good-looking and better able to increase their earning or pleasuring capacity.

This splendid series of lessons begun in the next Universal Screen Magazine will be followed by other powerful messages—to the business girl, the hotel clerk, the tired mother, the debutante, the schoolgirl, the business man. And almost hand in hand with this constructive work will come the Beauty Hints, sure to find the very strongest favor in the eyes of every woman. In fact, so interesting and comprehensive are these pictorial talks that one well-known woman, a guest in the Universal projection room, declared after seeing a picture showing the proper care of the hair, that she had received hints more beneficial than those procured from any hairdresser she ever visited.

Under the title "Our Dumb Animal Friends," the magazine contains a strong and at the same time absorbingly interesting exposure on the dishonest feeding of chickens and the work of the Bureau of Weights and Measures in New York protecting the public against dishonest feeding, overcropping and inhumane treatment. New York City alone consumes between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000 worth of chickens yearly. Educating the public against fraudulent dealers, views which show thousands of chickens in their coop cars, how chickens are starved before reaching the market, how the dishonest merchant mixes sand and gravel with corn to make them overweigh, how inspectors search for and find overwatered crops and how to protect yourself when buying a chicken for the family dinners, makes this one of the best and most informative food exposures ever shown on the screen.

Feeding sand mixed with corn produces the heavy crop on the chicken at left as compared to a normal chicken shown on right.

Starving chickens in a car en route to New York.

How a normal crop looks on the scales in comparison with a graveled one.

And it will be followed by others along every line of food product—eggs, cake, candy, fruit, vegetables, fish, meat, etc., thus making unsanitary and fraudulent conditions impossible, and insuring you, by your own knowledge against wrong measures and imperfect products. The New York Board of Health, constantly in touch with the Universal Screen Magazine, makes this phase of its work of inestimable value to the world.

The National Housewives' League, endorsing the work of The Universal Screen Magazine No. 5, attractively furnishes the authority for the making of waffles, showing the best and easiest way to make them and every detail from mixing to the final consumption by the satisfied young diner. No other Domestic Science picture has ever so fully and so plainly shown on the screen the actual making of culinary delicacies. They are pictured so comprehensively that any woman in the audience can whip out her paper and fountain pen, and rush out of the theatre, the Southern article as good as in her mouth.

Engineering, or the loading of coal by machinery, saving, by modern methods, time and labor, is another splendid achievement of The Universal Screen Magazine No. 5. How 80-ton cars are loaded with ease, and how unloaded cars are switched to other tracks by means of gravity, are accomplishments which every man thinks he appreciates—but which he realizes he did not fully appreciate after he has seen the pictures.

The Travelogues of the Universal Screen Magazine are comprehensive, easy to follow, and of the most entertaining type, in that they introduce to you the names of the owners and occupants of buildings and houses, famous throughout the world, and with which New Yokers themselves are not always familiar. In Universal Screen Magazine No. 5 there is shown the central section of the Empire City, its big and well-known hotels, its throbbing thoroughfares, its stations, its Public Library, and its buildings, known throughout the world by name though not always by appearance. Homes of men and women whose names are household words in America, where they live, achieve and enjoy life, are views sure to interest men and women in every spot of the globe.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. Bach.

TORONTO.—The long waited License and Tax Bill was introduced on Dec. 19 in the Assembly House in Quebec Province and dealt with many subjects, but one of particular interest was in regard to the tax on tickets of admission to theatres. For this a sliding scale is made. The Government will do the collecting in all municipalities, but will turn over to the municipalities one cent on each ticket collected and keep the balance. The rates to theatres, moving picture places and other places of amusements are also changed and increased.

Toronto's newest moving picture theatre, The Crown Theatre, Roadview Ave. and Gerrard St., opened on Monday evening, Dec. 18 to a capacity house. This theatre seats 925 people and is of a most substantial construction. There is no doubt that it is the handsomest theatre in the east end of Toronto, and it makes one more in the long chain of big neighborhood houses which are extending around this city. Universal and Bluebird Service is being used in conjunction with other features.

The following article states very clearly the opinion of the Quebec Exhibitors on the matter of Sunday opening in that Province, which is a topic of considerable interest down there just now.

Sunday Moving Picture in Sherbrooke.

Last week was opened for the first time the exhibition of pictures at the Casino Theatre in Sherbrooke. Mr. J. W. Greguire, the proprietor of said theatre, is to be congrulated on such a move. Pictures showing on Sunday are largely patronized and seem to give satisfaction to the theatre-goers and especially to those who cannot easily afford to go during week days. It is not given to all to have the means of motoring on Sundays or to have other luxurious recreations. Mr. Greguire is meeting with opposition from the City Council, but has been able so far to keep open since his opening. It is to be hoped that the City Council will give up its opposition to this kind of amusement and thereby give satisfaction to the theatre-goers in general.

"MINES AND MATRIMONY."

Joker Comedy.

Story by Irene Blake.
Scenario by Karl Coolidge.
Produced by William Beaudine.

Widow Bean	Gale Henry
Bill	William Franey
Pete	"Heine" Conklin
Milt	Milburn Moranti
Sheriff	Harry Mann
Sheriff's Daughter	Yvette Mitchell

Widow Bean, the village hash dispenser, is loved by both Bill and Pete, who work in the mine close by. The widow's son is in love with the Sheriff's daughter, but father Sheriff will have nothing to do with him. The widow sneaks out to look for her son, who has not come home to dinner. He comes blubbering up and tells her that the Sheriff will not let him have his daughter.

In the meantime Bill and Pete have gone back to the mine, but Bill comes up for air. He proposes to the widow, and she accepts, as he has saved a gold brick. Pete overhears them. He sneaks home, goes to Bill's mattress and takes out the gold brick. Hearing a voice outside, he throws the brick out the window. Milt and his girl happen to be passing and it hits Milt on the head.

Pete rushes on looking for the brick and Milt and the girl watch him. He buries the brick and Milt and the girl see where he hides it. Bill, all dressed for the wedding, goes to get the brick and discovers the loss. At the church the poor widow is waiting. The "friends" go to their shaft and look down. Then Pete gives Bill a kick that sends him down in the hole. Milt asks the Sheriff if he can have his daughter if he discovers the thief, and he consents. Bill has been having all sorts of trouble trying to get out of the shaft. The widow is all ready to marry Pete when she hears about Bill and tears to his rescue, while Pete goes to dig up the brick. She makes him help pull Bill out. He and a miner grab a rope and swing in, but this makes even balance with Bill and minister. Pete realizes that the only way to get to the top is to throw out his brick. This he does, and no sooner gets to the top than the Sheriff arrests him. The widow grabs the minster and they drop down the shaft and balance even with Bill and the parson. The widow with a smile says: "Marry us." This the minister does.

Priest	Allan Holubar
Girl	Zoe Rae

While a priest sits in his room he hears his doorbell ring. He can discover no one, but finally admits a girl who seemed to be drenched to the skin. He goes with her to administer the sacraments to a dying man.

She leads him to the tenement district, where the priest finds that the police are searching for a murderer, but knowing the priest, they let him pass, not seeming to notice the girl. She stops at a house, but the landlord declares that there is no one occupying his rooms but the girl leads the priest up the stairs to a small bedroom where a man is found to be mortally wounded. He is surprised to see the priest, who wishes to call a physician, but the dying man only asks that he administer the sacrament.

The priest, this office done, asks the dying man what he wants to do about his daughter, but the dying man says he has no daughter. On the table is a picture of the girl who had lead the priest to the house, and the dying man declares she is his daughter. The priest thinks the man has forgotten about sending the girl for him but is astounded to hear the dying man say that the girl had died some years previous a nd since that time he had taken to drink.

At the other side of the bed appears the girl, but when the police enter the room she vanishes, and the priest gently tells the police that they have no need of the man as he is dead.

CAST.

Poor Mary Wright	Edith Roberts
Rich Mary Wright	Violet Schram
Frank Brewer	M. K. Wilson
Rich Mr. Wright	Malcolm Blevins

Two Mary Wrights start out the same day to spend a vacation—the one with the anticipation of enjoying everything that money can buy—the other to realize the culmination of weeks of saving and scrimping.

It so happens that their destination is the same town, although the rich Mary puts up at the hotel while the other "batches" at a small camp nearby. Soon the rich Mary is bored with the dullness of the place.

Her father informs her that he is sending down Frank Brewer, a very eligible young bachelor, to keep her company over the week end.

When Frank arrives he finds a note telling him that she could no longer stand the dullness of the place and had left. He meets the other Mary Wright, but thinking she is the one he was supposed to meet, he decides not to disclose his identity. Before he leaves for town the two are engaged but he tells her that he knows her address and will call upon her in the city—this she cannot understand, as she is certain he does not know her address.

Meantime, Mr. Wright has received word from his daughter that she expects to be engaged before she returns home. Frank declares that he is engaged to Mary. While they are talking, rich Mary walks in but she does not know Frank nor he her, and she introduces her fiance to the astonished father.

Frank is in a quandry until he meets on the street the right Mary Wright.

George Hillar	L. C. Shumway
Driver	Fred A. Kelsey
Judge	L. M. Wells

George Hillar, who had served some time in the army, is finally honorably discharged. He is very much attached to his mount, Patsy, who also has been taken out of active service. Hillar goes to the captain to buy the horse so that he will be certain that it will always have good care, but discovers that he has not sufficient money. He determines to get a job and buy the horse.

Some time elapses. Hillar now has charge of a gang of men and one day while he is standing near the street he sees a truck driver beating his horses unmercifully. Hillar goes to him and tries to dissuade him from this cruel treatment, and before he has finished Hillar has given the driver a good beating. Much to his surprise he later finds that the horse the driver was beating was his beloved Patsy.

The driver has Hillar arrested and when the man is taken before the judge he tells him that he is perfectly willing to pay the fine and graphically tells the judge the experiences of Patsy and himself while in the army. After he has finished, the judge declares the case dismissed and requests the driver to name his price for the horse, which the driver does, and Patsy becomes the property of Hillar.

Later we find the man and horse the best of friends and feel certain that Patsy will have kind treatment as long as he lives.

"THE MYSTERY OF MY LADY'S BOUDOIR."

Margaret is arrested at her mother's home and taken to the station. She declares her innocence, but she is held for examination. The Marshalls are sent for to appear against her. They arrive, with Edgar, who is suspicious, and who recognizes the girl who entertained him so charmingly. He tells her that he believes in her innocence. Things are looking black for Margaret, when the other officer appears, having caught Mazie and her friend with the goods. Margaret is dismissed, with many apologies from Mr. Marshall. She goes out with Edgar, who begs her to marry him immediately and save his fortune. This she consents to do, and her bad days are over.

"GOOD luck to all good Americans."

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice,
British Ambassador to the U. S.

"ON behalf of my country, I wish the people of the United States of America a happy New Year, which may bring peace and prosperity to the whole world."

J. von Bernstorff,
German Ambassador to the U. S.

"MAY the New Year bring to the suffering world durable peace with justice; for without justice there can be no happiness, and without happiness there can be no durable peace. May the people of our country never be unmindful and unworthy of the happiness they enjoy, and may America's example be a guide and an inspiration to the governments and peoples of the earth."

Oscar S. Straus,

"EMPLOYERS as well as workers are more and more appreciating the human equation, and realizing that mutual respect and fairness produce larger and better results than suspicion and selfishness. We are all coming to see that there should be no stifling of labor by capital, or of capital by labor; and also that there should be no stifling of labor by labor, or of capital by capital.

"The use of steam and electricity, resulting in the development of large-scale industry with its attendant economics and benefits, has of necessity erected barriers to personal contact between employers and men, thus making it more difficult for them to understand each other.

"Must it not be that an age which can bridge the Atlantic with wireless telephone, can devise some sort of social X-ray which shall enable the vision of men to penetrate the barriers which have grown up between men in our machine-burdened civilization?"

John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

"PEACE and plenty are the portion of the American people. Let us be sharers of our God-given plenty with Europe's war-stricken millions, and bearers to all the world of such peace as is our own—the peace that rests upon equity between man and man, upon righteousness from nation to nation. To the least of men and peoples may the year 1917 bring peace and justice and honor."

ELLA HALL IN DANCE PLAY.

BLUEBIRD Director Jack Conway has completed a five-reel production featuring Ella Hall in the role of a little girl who is unable to keep her feet still, so strong is her love of dancing. A beautiful allegory dealing with mythological characters is a feature of this production, which was written by Maie B. Havey of the Universal scenario staff, and is called "Her Soul's Inspiration."

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

Here is an idea that will help you get some valuable and unique advertising in connection with your presentation of "The Piper's Price." Get a photograph of William Stowell from your Bluebird exchange and have a halftone cut made of it. Print this cut on a series of throwaways containing the following copy:

1—REWARD OFFERED

This man owes me a debt. I want to know where he can be found.

For further information apply to "Piper" at (give the street address of you theatre here).

2—DO YOU KNOW HIM?

Do you know where he can be found? A reward is offered for this information. He owes a debt that MUST be paid.

"Piper" address (give address of your theatre).

3—I'VE FOUND HIM AT LAST!

My offer has had its effect. To-morrow he is due to pay

"THE PIPER'S PRICE."

Dodging and hiding proved unavailing and I invite YOU to be on hand at the where this man will be compelled to pay the debt he owes me.

Be on Hand!!!

The first of these circulars should be liberally distributed about five days before the showing of the Bluebird photoplay. The second should be sent out the third day before the presentation, while the third should be handed out the day before the picture is shown. Properly handled, this teaser campaign is bound to be effective.

Another idea is to have a man dressed in ragged clothes to slowly slouch through the streets of your community. The more he looks like a real "down-and-outer," the better. As he drifts along, have him hand out circulars reading: "I've Paid the Piper's Price. I'm Down and Out. See the Cause at the ——— Theatre To-morrow." For that matter, a pole sign can be made to serve the same purpose.

Dear Friend—Although the patrons of the (name here) Theatre have been taught to expect the unusual in Bluebird photoplays, there's a wonderful treat in store for them in "The Piper's Price," the feature of to-morrow's show.

"The Piper's Price" tells the story of two women's love for one man. And the unusual twist is given to this situation in that one of the women is the man's wife, while the other is his divorced wife.

Can't you just picture the tangle that a situation such as this is bound to create? Can't you imagine the battle of wits between the wife and the ex-wife in their efforts to obtain the mastery?

At the same time, there is absolutely nothing of the tiresome vampire theme about "The Piper's Price." Instead, it is a story that will go straight to your heart and fill it to overflowing with sympathy for the two women whose love for Ralph Hadley is so great.

A mighty good bill in addition to this Bluebird photoplay will be shown to-morrow. Don't fail to come!

Cordially yours,
——— Theatre,
Manager.

P. S.—I forgot to mention that Dorothy Phillips, one of the most popular stars in filmdom, enacts the wife's role.

"A LIMBURGER CYCLONE"

Phil and his cabaret charmer.

The terrible effect of the limburger perfume.

A BREEZY, cheesy L-KO Komedy, in which Phil Dunham is rescued from a honeymoon in jail by the timely intervention of a cyclone.

"THE side that first employs limburger in sufficient quantities against its foes will win the war," this is the precious tip which the L-KO Komedy Kompany furnishes free, gratis, for nothing, to the belligerents. They know all about its deadly effectiveness, for they made a play about it, which bears the alluring title "A Limburger Cyclone," and in which Phil Dunham has to withstand the full offensive of the player of the title role, a large sandwich of the fatal cheese. Phil's adventures are fast and furious, and land him in jail for a honeymoon. But a timely cyclone rescues him and transports him, prison and all to the bottom of a cliff. The plot is as mysterious as any detective story, and there is no clue to it. However, this is something like it:

Phil, employed as a waiter, is madly in love with a cabaret dancer who returns his affections. One day a customer orders a limburger cheese sandwich and when it is taken from the icebox by Phil it hops all over the place. Odd adventures follow until Phil finally captures the recalcitrant cheese. Meantime the perfume has caused many patrons of the joyshop to faint.

The bar man, watching the chase, then conceives a plan whereby he can put Phil out of the way and win for himself the heart of the admired cabaret dancer. He takes $500 from the till and informs Phil it is the bequest of his late lost uncle. Then the bar man informs the landlady that Phil has robbed the till and the chase for him begins. But ere this he is safely wedded to his cabaret charmer and when the capture is finally effected the two are thrown in jail, there to spend their honeymoon.

A terrible cyclone, however, interrupts their bliss, and their prison, among other things, is blown over the cliff. The picture fades as explanations, denials and accusations are made by the whole crew lying in the ruins.

UNIVERSAL WOMAN DIRECTOR FILMS SCENE IN CITY.

DIRECTOR RUTH ANN BALDWIN took her Universal company into the heart of the business section of Los Angeles a few days ago where she made a number of scenes for her current production. These called for the use of automobiles, street cars, newsboys and shoppers, and when Miss Baldwin started to make the scenes at Sixth and Broadway at noon, when the traffic was heaviest, crowds gathered around and the streets and the sidewalks became congested with people. This was only for a few moments, however, for the director had the scene so well mapped out that with the aid of the traffic officer and other policemen she was able to keep the crowds moving. A little later Miss Baldwin took her company to Fifth and Spring, another business corner, where she remained almost a half hour and here the crowds practically were just as large.

The making of motion pictures in the busy thoroughfares of Los Angeles at a time of day when the rush of people was at its height, and with a woman directing, was quite a novelty, especially as it was the first time that the people of the southern city had ever seen a woman directing in their streets.

UNIVERSAL COMEDIES

Whether it's an L-KO, a NESTOR, or a JOKER there's always punch and pep in every Universal Comedy.

Whether it's Alice Howell, Dan Russell, Phil Dunham, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Edith Roberts, Gale Henry or William Franey, you know the actors in these companies are giving you STAR comedy of the highest class.

Whether it's polite and refined, or novelty stunts, or slap-stick, you know that the brand of humor in Universal Comedies is clean and JUST PURE, PURE FUN.

Whether you write to any Universal Exchange or to the home office you know you will get full information that will add to your profits and popularize your house—if you take advantage of it. Are Effects Effective?

By M. Winkler

IN many a moving picture orchestra there is more attention given to securing "effects" of a low comedy nature than real consistent "effect." Sandpaper and bear growl, the slamming of a door and the screeching of steamboat whistles, imitation of a dog barking, gongs ringing out while a burglar sneaks through a chimney—burlesque realistic "effects" of this kind are anything but "effective" if not exactly timed. We are very apt to get the would-be effect after the reason for it no longer exists. In many cases these forced "comedy effects" are vulgar and likely to offend the better taste of an audience. And quite indefensible is the introduction of "comedy effects" into serious or tragic pictures. An occasional laugh may be secured, but at the expense of that which is artistically right and fitting. It should be remembered that the majority of people who attend the photoplay houses are "serious in their serious moments," and object to the introduction of comedy where it is out of place.

Comedy has its own legitimate field where humorous effects are in order, and in the company of music players the drummer is the leading comedian. But he should confine his efforts to his special field. To quote an authority on the subject:

"A comedy is the only battlefield for the live drummer. He should try to work in all possible effects to get a good laugh from the audience. But he should not get the laugh owing to the confusion arising through being always too late with his instruments. I have heard a dog bark while a lady spoke—a locomotive bell ring for an ambulance!"

LOIS WEBER CLUB WOMEN'S HOSTESS.

A NUMBER of the well-known society leaders and club women of Hollywood, California, are taking an interest in the comfort of the many young girls employed as actresses in the different motion picture studios, and in order that they might see for themselves how the girls work and what their environment is like, a number of these women recently were guests of Miss Lois Weber at Universal City. They met the younger actresses, talked with them, visited the beautiful green room which has been provided for their comfort at Universal City and became thoroughly conversant with the studio life. At luncheon with Miss Weber the club women declared they were more than pleased with the treatment accorded the girls at the film capital and arranged for all of them to be guests at the new studio club which the women have organized as a meeting-place for the actresses.

Miss Weber is noted for the interest she takes in the younger members of the acting faces at Universal City.

DIRECTED BY LYNN REYNOLDS

If "GOD'S CRUCIBLE" should happen to be the first picture a man ever saw, he would ever after JUDGE photoplay entertainment by that picture.

Its standard is so high; its entertainment value is so intense; its production is so huge, and so out-of-the-ordinary; its stars and supporting cast are so gratifyingly satisfying that as a box-office attraction it is easily in a class by itself.

Any Exhibitor who can show a feature more than one day should certainly book "GOD'S CRUCIBLE" for MORE THAN ONE DAY. That's how good it is. Book through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or Executive Offices, BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

PUTTING IT OVER

A PAGE OF PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS.

THE holidays are over, and it is the Editor's hope that you played to capacity.

If you didn't, maybe it is because you haven't been making use of the stunts prepared for you every week on this page. Loud Lawfter!

Seriously, this page is intended for just that purpose. To suggest ways and means whereby Exhibitors can actually pack 'em in at every performance. Because we know it can be done, and what is more, we know it is being done by live Exhibitors all over the country.

And remember, please, it is not the fortunately situated Exhibitors who can get the most benefit from "stunts." It is the Exhibitor WHO, PRACTICALLY SPEAKING, HAS NO OTHER MEANS OF ADVERTISING HIS SHOW.

Think that over, and get busy this week.

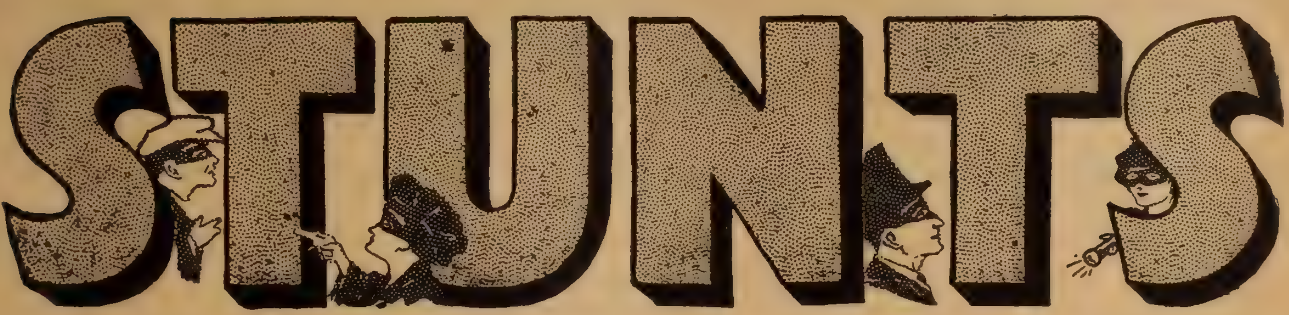
ALL the stunts suggested this week are for the benefit of the exhibitor whose house is in a residential neighborhood. This does not mean that they cannot be used profitably by the man whose theatre is on a business street; but that the needs of the other have been considered first. His problem is somewhat different. His house is in a section of the city where a parade, or a stunt which depends for its effectiveness on crowds, will not bring him direct returns. His best bet is his lobby, and it must have an appeal, primarily, to the women of his community, who are the ones who see it oftenest. Then they say to hubby, "There must be a wonderful picture at ———'s Theatre. As I went to the butcher's today I saw so and so in his lobby." And right after supper, the whole family goes to the theatre to see what the wonderful picture is. On January fifteenth, the Red Feather for that day is called "The Double-Room Mystery," and some mystery it is. Here is a stunt for the lobby to help the people of the neighborhood to realize that there is something unusual inside. Have a man seated in a chair, wearing six pairs of handcuffs on different parts of his body. On guard over him have another man with a revolver, who threatens him every little while. When it is advisable to give them a rest, have some one in the garb of a policeman enter the lobby from the theatre, and liberating the man, take him inside.

ON January sixteenth there is a Victor comedy called "The Masked Cupid." This suggests another stunt, which, this time, shows how another part of his house may be utilized by the man with the theatre in a residential neighborhood. The day before you run the picture, repeat the following at the end of the program each time that it is run. Have a pretty child, dressed to represent the traditional cupid, with wings on his back, wearing a black mask, and carrying a gilded bow and arrow, come running in in front of your screen. Have him aim the arrow up toward the screen, and let loose. As the arrow hits the screen, have a slide flash out "See the Masked Cupid hit his mark tomorrow in this theatre."

"HEARTSICK AT SEA" is the screaming L-KO for January seventeenth. For this you might dress up your lobby in nautical fashion. Put coiled ropes in prominent places. Hoist a mast in the centre and hang a light at the top of it. Have many ropes hanging from it. Put a red light at the left side of the lobby for the port light, and a green one at the right for the starboard. If you can get them, hang big, round life-preservers where they will be seen; if you can't borrow them cut circles of cardboard, and paint the name of a ship on them to look like the real thing. If you can have a comic sailor or two to busy himself about the "ship," so much the better. Don't forget plenty of announcements and posters as well, so that people will know what it is all about.

"BARRED FROM THE BAR" is the Joker for January twentieth. It is all about a leader of the anti-booze crusade, and how she finally succumbed to a barkeep. Lots of fun is caused by the confusion between two sandwich men, one with pro and the other with anti banners. Have a ragged-looking man parade in front of the theatre with a sign on a standard carried over his shoulder, and reading as the one does in the picture "In Case of Thrist, Try ——— First." In the blank space put the name of your theatre.

Novel Advertising



For That Sensational Serial "THE PURPLE MASK"

THE public likes stunt advertising. First, because it is amusing; second, because it is entirely different—out of the beaten path, daring and unusual, and, lastly, because it attracts their attention, and people love to be attracted by unusual things. Get the attention of the people, said the great P. T. Barnum and the rest is easy. That's why we have doped out the novel stunts for you printed here in the last two issues of the M. P. Weekly. Any stunt you use will prove a big winner for you, and the more you use, the more advertising and publicity you give your serial. Use them all if you can, and if you can't use them all, use most of them. You will find that it will pay you big.

Have two large purple masks made according to the trade-mark designs you will find in "The Purple Mask" Advertising Campaign Book. Arrange these joined at the top tent-fashion on the bed of a big truck. Cut the eye holes, and paint on the sides in huge white letters on the solid bright purple background:

See Grace Cunard
and Francis Ford

The two Greatest Serial Stars on Earth in

The "PURPLE MASK"

With the date and the name of your theatre, etc.

The masks should be large enough so that a girl dressed like Grace Cunard as shown in the advertising cuts in the Advertising Campaign Book and a man made up like Francis Ford, with top hat, cloak, etc., can stand upright between the masks. The girl should wear a purple mask and appear first at one eye on one side and then at the other on the other side, and the man should do the same. Sometimes their heads should appear in the two eyes on the same side at the same time, and at other times at different sides. A bugler or cornetist seated inside can play popular airs, bugle calls, etc., to attract attention. Play this up strong. Drive through all the principal streets, and you will draw a capacity crowd to your opening episode.

Have your cashier wear a Purple Mask every night. By so doing you will get the direct benefit of the advertising this will bring you as every person who buys a ticket will see her or him wearing this mysterious mask. You should arrange to have (him or her) wear the mask fully a week or two ahead of the showing of your first episode. This will create lots of talk, put an air of mystery on things and then when you announce on slides or advertising or other ways the coming of that great Universal Serial "The Purple Mask" the thing will be explained. But until you explain it everybody will want to know why your cashier is wearing a mask. Of course you understand that the mask is to be absolutely blank. No wording of any kind on it.

Here's a stunt you positively don't want to overlook. On the opening night of the serial and on EVERY night you show an episode, have your Ushers wear Purple Masks over their eyes while seating your audience. You can carry this same idea further and make even a bigger hit by having everybody in your employ around the theatre wear a purple mask on each night you show an episode.

This will impress everybody who attends and you'll find this kind of novelty advertising is very pleasing to the public in general.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"Heartstrings." Featuring Allan Holubar and Maud George. Fifty-second Red Feather Production. Directed by Allan Holubar. Allan, a wealthy young doctor, takes little Jo into his home when her father dies. She shares his lonely life and grows to be a beautiful young woman. She is courted by Gerald, who has had an affair with a "widdy woman," and the doctor is quite right in looking into the young man's past life. The widow gets Gerald again into her net, and only the disclosure in a most unusual climax reveals the widow's wiles, who she is, and that Allan and grown-up Jo can be so happy with each other that Geralds and widows can be completely forgotten. Five reels crammed with incidents and surprises. Five reels of marvelous photoplay enjoyment. Five reels that will popularize your house and make you glad you booked this wonderful Red Feather. Now do it.

"The Battle of 'Let's Go.'" Two-reel L-KO Absurdity. With Dan Russell. Directed by J. G. Blystone. Released January 24th. Expect me to tell you all about this picture, don't you? You want the plot and who loves who, and how the villain is foiled and all the rest of it, no, yes? Whadda you think this is, a five-reel drammer? Guess again. When Dan hits his comedy speed there is about as much chance of reporting all the crazy things he does as there is of Dan playing the lead in a vampire feature. And that possibility is some remote, what? But the amount of fun and the number of laughs crowded into this picture will be measured by the stream of coin at your box office window. It's as funny as its title, and Dan registers sixteen laughs a second.

"The Fugitive." Two-reel Heart Interest Imp Drama. With Louise Lovely and Roy Stewart. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released January 26th. The trouble began when Roy's law partner coveted Roy's wife, Louise. By a ruse Harry got Louise in the office alone, and made violent love to her. By a trick of fate, Roy returns, and, bursting in the door, gives Harry what is coming to him. That's what makes Roy a fugitive. But it is only the beginning of the story, which is filled with swift action, covering Roy's eluding—not justice—but the unrelenting political boss who is—or was—Harry's father. A notable two-reel picture. A drama that will impress you with the strength and vigor of the Universal Program.

"The Desperate Chance." With Wm. V. Mong and Mina Cunard. A Two-reel Out-of-the-Ordinary Western. 101 Bison Brand. Directed by Wm. V. Mong. Released January 27. The pictures known as Westerns released on the Universal Program, need no touting from my feeble pen. Every Universal Exhibitor knows that when he has one on his program he has a box-office attraction that gets the money, no matter whether it is in one or two or three reels. And this is a whale of a Western—net—no discount. William is suspected of having held up the stage. And he is in love with the daughter of the guy who actually done the deed. Talk about your situations. Wow! Director Mong has given Actor Mong a punch to the foot, all right. And it will have your audiences asking for "another of those Westerns." 'Deed it will.

Tummy Ache o

(No. 159. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

THOUSANDS of picture fans are "getting sick of the movies."

This is a dangerous situation, due to nothing on earth except the fact that the market is flooded with five-reel "features" of miserable quality.

People are getting sick and tired of paying money to see a picture because some fat-salaried star is advertised in the lobby, only to find that it is five reels of junk.

If you have any doubts about this, watch your patrons as they leave your theatre after seeing a poor five-reeler. The old enthusiasm that they used to show is gone. They feel that they have wasted an evening or an afternoon. They have nothing to go home and enthuse about.

Before the five-reel "feature" cast its blight on the business, there was ALWAYS something on the program to enjoy. It was made up of a variety of subjects. If one of the subjects failed to please, the others were sure to give the people their money's worth.

Those of you who have nearly featured your patrons to death can still save your business. You can revive their old interest by giving them a varied program. You can make it possible for them to drop in any time during the afternoon or evening as they used to do. They still crave entertainment, but they resent having to see eight or ten or more features in order to find one that is fairly good.

Bear one thing in mind, namely, that the Universal doesn't care a tinker's dam whether the demand is for program or for features. Our organization can produce either, better than anyone else can. Therefore we are completely disinterested when we urge you to cut your feature days down to the very minimum---or eliminate them altogether. We are talking only for your good and for your future and the future popularity of the movies.

I've just heard of an exhibitor who is showing two five-reelers a day and changing every day---FOURTEEN FIVE-REELERS A WEEK! Ye gods and little dingbats!

If many others follow in his fool footsteps, some hundred million Americans will soon have film indigestion in such a violent degree that you won't be able to wheedle them into a picture theatre to save your soul.

Gentlemen, the Universal program is your salvation whether you want to believe it or not. It's the only thing that will make a sick business well again. It works for you whether you're asleep or not! If you have a tummy ache in the box office, take a liberal dose of it RIGHT NOW!

Universal Specialties

THE Specials listed below are of a class and character that are necessary to the Exhibitor who finds it advisable to book Special Features of one or more reels. They include, beside the Five-Reel Feature—Comedies, Cartoons, Educationals and the Greatest of all Screen Novelties—The Universal Screen Magazine.

Like the other releases on the Universal Program, these Specials may be booked separately—but Exhibitors must expect to pay extra for them. Not only because they are genuine Box-Office Attractions, but because it is manifestly unfair to expect to pick and choose from the entire Program, and get these releases at the pro rata price of that paid by the user of the entire Universal Service.

Specials Released on the Universal Program, Week Jan. 29, 1917

"The Prodigal Widow"

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama. Written by Walter Woods and produced by Ben Wilson. The latest version of the theme which Shakespeare used in "Taming of the Shrew."

SHAKESPEARE, the great master, has been called the first author who did justice to women. There is no doubt of the fact that he knew them, and that he portrayed all types in his immortal plays. His heroines are still quoted three hundred years after his death, as the typical women of our time. Among these unfaded feminine portraits, there is none which has appealed more strongly to his successors in authorship than Katherine, the heroine of the "Taming of the Shrew." It would be impossible to count the number of versions of her which have appeared, since her creation, in lesser plays, novels and stories. "Bina," in "The Prodigal Widow," is the latest version of the Katherine theme, and she was created by the combined efforts of Walter Woods, who wrote the scenario; Ben Wilson, who produced the picture, and Neva Gerber, who played the chief character. An outline of the story follows:

Paul Braintree had come west prospecting and had sought his fortunes in the mining district. His brother, Henry, had gone to Mexico and had acquired valuable oil lands—also a wife, Bina, a great flirt. Jack Winthrop, a young college student; a lawyer, Allen Bradley, and Dr. Le Rene are among her most devoted admirers.

Things have not been going very well in a financial way for Henry, and one day his lawyer announces that his credit is no longer good. About this time, Paul pays a visit to his brother, and for the first time in his life is attracted by a woman, but the hopelessness of it all quite bewilders him. Bina recognizes in him a new victim and when she confesses her love and asks him to care for her, he quits his brother's house, leaving a note to the effect that his business interests call him home.

Henry's affairs reach a crisis as the Mexican situation grows tense and he chooses the easiest route, feeling in his heart that his brother has deserted him at the crucial moment.

Bina wires Paul of his brother's suicide, as he has struck it rich and is celebrating with friends in the mining camp. He goes home and bitterly upbraids Bina, blaming her for Henry's downfall, and when she appeals to him he flings her from him and goes back West.

Repulsed for the first time in her pampered career, Bina plots to revenge herself on Paul. Dressed in clothes such as have never before made their debut in the mining camp, she arrives there and begins a flirtation with the gambling sheriff. She is entertaining the gamblers with a dance and song when Paul arrives in the room. She repulses him when he attempts to make her quit the place, and he goes home, calls for an old friend, leaves him with his cabin and saddles his horse. Arrived at the dance hall, where Bina is entertaining a crowd of admirers, he forces her with a gun to leave the place, holding off the men and starting a fight between them to distract their attention while he rides away with the girl on his horse, in front of him.

Arrived in the wilds, he forces her to don overalls and to cook her own meals, tantalizing her with the odor of his when she refuses. When he is chopping down a tree there is an accident. Paul falls over a cliff, and Bina, puzzled by her own sensations, is nursing him when Allen Bradley, her husband's attorney and an old admirer of hers, who has offered a rewards for information of her whereabouts, arrives and tells her her fortune in Mexico has been restored to her.

As she is wondering why the news fails to enthuse her, the gamblers arrive, determined to capture Paul. She fights for the man she finds she loves; refuses Bradley, and the picture fades as the spectator gets a very satisfactory hint of the paradise Paul and Bina have found in the wilderness.

FLASHES FROM THE NEWS WEEKLIES

"MAY THY NAME ALWAYS BE PEACE."

GLIDING slowly into the water, but with a certainty prophetic of what she might accomplish in an hour of need, the $500,000 coast and harbor defense submarine N-1 was launched the other morning, with an embroidered American flag merrily dancing from a pole temporarily placed in her bows and the applauding shouts of thousands arising above the din that resounded through the huge plant of the Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Company, Seattle.

"In the name of the United States I christen thee and may thy name always spell peace," cried Mrs. Davis, wife of Lieutenant Guy E. Davis, U. S. N., as she smashed a bottle of champagne on the shark-like diver's stem.

And then the vessel glided slowly down, down, while the winds of the bay caught up the silken flags at the bows and Old Glory unfurled itself at a flash, waving its folds triumphantly so that the picture that hung on the spectators' eyes, which Animated Weekly Number 54 reveals, is that of a slender shark of steel and the flag of the republic inseparably joined together in splendid unity.

"LAWSON, HENRY & OTHERS BEFORE THE SCREEN."

THOMAS W. LAWSON, noted Boston fiancier, who recently declared that the peace note "tip" let Wall Street benefit to the tune of some $60,000,000, and Congressman Wood, who demanded the "leak" inqury, together with Representative Johnson "talking things over" are features of Animated Weekly Number 54 which the cameramen did not overlook and which consequently you can look over.

Chairman Henry of the House Rules Committee who, it is alleged, deceived the 3,000-word letter said to have been written by Lawson, together with the arrival of the later in Washington and views of high and mighty law-makers and law administrators, are other interesting bits of the film.

WINTER CARNIVAL AT TOY TOWN.

A WINTER carnival in Toy Town, staged in Winchendon, Mass., recently, gave the cameraman some of the very best ice skating views of all his career. They include a girls' snow shoe race, mens' ski race, tobaganning, skate races, ski-jumping, "ski bob" jumps, sleds on skis and will be included as a feature of Animated Weekly Number 54.

A REALISTIC TOUCHDOWN.

RUGGED Pennsylvania football players practiced a "rush" on the main stage at Universal City during a visit to the famous motion picture capital the other day, while staid and sane members of the faculty became boys again.

Close-ups of prominent players, revealed by the cameraman in Animated Weekly Number 54, include Dr. R. T. McKenzie, head of the physical culture department of the University of Pennsylvania; Bryon Dickson, Captain N. Matthews, R. C. Folwell, head coach, and Dr. C. M. Wharton.

SPRINKLING STREETS WITH BOOZE.

SPRINKLING the streets with booze taken from bootleggers is some title, isn't it? But, strange as that statement appears, it's a fact accomplished over in Phoenix, Ariz., the other morning.

You've never before seen a sheriff and his deputies filling the city's sprinkling wagon with booze and sprinkling the city's streets with beer and whisky, we wager. But, Sheriff Jeff Adams accomplished the miracle and the cameraman got it—that is, the picture. See it in Animated Weekly Number 54 and you will have one brand new sensation to add to your list, no matter how long or how broad it is.

HOLUBAR VISITS HIS PARENTS.

JANUARY 1, 1917, was the first new years that Alan Holubar, star and producer of the Red Feather "Heart Strings," has spent with his father and mother in San Francisco in eight years.

Holubar played the featured lead in the big Universal production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," working both in the West Indies and in Universal City, and after the completion of that production was given the direction of his own company. Recently he has been making five-act features.

Holubar for a long time was a member of the Alcazar Stock Company, in San Francisco, and is well known in Northern California.

HOLUBAR PRODUCES FINE WAR STORY.

ALLAN HOLUBAR has produced a remarkable war story called "The War Waif," which will soon be released as a Special in two reels. In it little Zoe Rae has one of the best roles in which she has yet been seen.

PANAMA CELEBRATES INDEPENDENCE.

ONE of the most interesting strips of film ever shown contains the filmed story of Panama's recent celebration of its independence. Schools and colleges aided in the celebration, school children singing the national anthem in the public square at Panama City, and Americans, as invited guests, helping to make the occasion a memorable one, as Animated Weekly Number 54 reveals.

ELLA HALL in "Her Soul's Inspiration"

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, starring Ella Hall. Written by Mary Anson. Adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and produced by Jack Conway. The story of a life's ambition fulfilled.

ELLA HALL in this Bluebird photoplay, called "Her Soul's Inspiration," written by Mary Anson, adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and produced by Jack Conway, has one of the "little girl" parts in which she excels. She portrays the sympathetic role of a child who was born with music in her feet, to whom the career of a dancer offered the sum of earthly bliss.

Ella left school so young, to go on the stage, that she did not have time to take many diplomas, or for a great deal of the "finishing" such as is bestowed on most girls. But she finds that her screen career is a liberal education in itself. For her last Bluebird picture "The Bugler of Algiers," she had to study French. She introduced the screen innovation of speaking the titles in the actual language which would have been used by the Normandy peasant she was playing. For this picture, "Her Soul's Inspiration," she had to study dancing.

Little Mary hears bad news.

"I shall soon be a mistress of all the accomplishments," she said the other day, "if I keep on as I have been doing lately. French and dancing are considered very 'finishing' studies in girl's schools, aren't they? For my last two roles I have had to work very hard to acquire them. I shall possess all the graces if I go on as I have begun."

Little Miss Hall says that she loved every minute of this picture, but what caused her the keenest delight was the fact that a whole troupe of children was employed in the making of the first reel. We catch a glimpse of them in the first illustration, where they are making up in the background, while Ella Hall and Marcia Moore are powdering their noses in the front. Some of the kiddies were very tiny, and many had never worked in pictures before. It so happened that the weather was rather dark and discouraging. One day in particular the sun persisted in going behind the clouds every little while, and staying there for half an hour at a time. Ella, who is still a good deal of a child herself, did her best to amuse the tots, and to keep them interested, but the waits were very trying for them. At last she had an idea. She made the members of the company stage an impromptu fairy tale for the baby audience. She was the princess, Marcia the fairy prince, Miss Whistler the wicked old witch, and Director Conway the king of the mythical kingdom. Even the cameraman had to take a role in the production; he was an enchanted mountain in the background! The kiddies were so wonderfully amused that they begged Miss Hall to "play theatre" for them every day. An outline of the picture's charming story runs as follows:

Zella receives Mary's letter.

Mary steals away with Philip.

Ever since Mary could remember, she had been able to dance, and her one ambition was to be a great dancer some day. Her mother knew of this desire, and before her death made Daddy promise that he would do his utmost to see her desire become a reality.

So Daddy sold the farm, and with the money bought from some traveling showmen their van and show equipment, and Mary was launched upon her career. With the show was Madame La Rue, as wardrobe mistress, and her daughter Zella as star. Somehow Mary took a dislike to them both, which was increased when she found the two abusing some of the children.

Then Daddy grew ill and confided to Madame La Rue that he had a rich brother. He made her promise that she would send Mary to him, and take his body back to be buried beside his wife. La Rue then secured all his papers, and after the funeral sold the show for just enough to send the body back home. Then, with Zella, she goes to the uncle's home and tells him that Zella is his niece and she her nurse. The uncle accepts them and they begin a life of luxury.

Meantime, the show has been a failure, and some church people have secured enough money to send all the children home. But Mary has no home, so a shrewish-looking woman takes her to her house. Soon life becomes unbearable to Mary, and she runs away, back to her old home, to visit the grave of her father. As night comes on, she seeks shelter in a hut which seems to be unoccupied. The next day she makes the acquaintance of Bob, a fisher-lad, who teaches her to help him.

Mary finds her uncle.

The hut happens to belong to Philip, an author, who has been paying attention to Zella. She and La Rue have been using every effort to win Philip, but, while he is interested, he does not declare himself. He discovers Mary asleep outside the hut. She tells him her story, and without disclosing that he is the owner of the hut, he meets her there frequently, and the two become great friends. Bob is suspicious and jealous of the wealthy Philip.

Zella and La Rue cannot understand why Philip has ceased his attentions, and decide to find out what is keeping him away. To their astonishment, they find him pleasantly engrossed entertaining Mary.

As they stand watching, dumfounded, Bob approaches and they notice that he is insanely jealous. They approach him and tell the astonished Bob that Philip is Zella's betrothed and means harm to Mary.

Soon after, as Philip is leaving the hut, Bob attacks him and fells him with a blow. Leaving him for dead, Bob rushes back to the hut and tells Mary what he has done and that Philip is betrothed to another. When the two go to get the body they find it gone. In reality Philip is only stunned. Bob and Mary decide that they must leave the country.

Some years elapse. At last Mary's desire has become a reality, and she is eagerly sought as a great dancer. One day, Philip receives an invitation from a friend to attend a private dance at which Mary is to appear. For some time after she starts dancing, Philip cannot place her, but at length recognizes her. When she sees him, she thinks he must be a ghost, for she has long thought him dead.

Explanations are made and she takes him to her home. Philip declares his intentions to Bob of marrying Mary. Mary tells Philip of the grave of her father. From her story he thinks she must be the real niece. He takes her to see her uncle. There she finds Zella and La Rue, who soon beg for mercy at her hands. Mary has a locket with her father and mother's picture, which is quite proof enough of her parentage, and the two impostors make a hasty exit from their home of luxury, while the uncle welcomes Mary and Philip. Faithful Bob's task of chaperon to the great dancer is over, and he now goes back to his fisher-life.

WE TIP YOU OFF——

A REAL honest to goodness feature, though it is only two reels in length, is to be released on the Universal program on February first. The title is "The War Waif." We call attention to this picture merely as a sample of what the words UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE mean, and to prove over again, if such proof were necessary, that a picture does not have to be a five-reeler. Sixty per cent. of the five reelers could be told much more entertainingly in two. "The War Waif" is a wonderful feature shorn of padding. It presents two of the Universal's cleverest stars, Allan Holubar and Zoe Rae in a wonderfully absorbing story.

Get ready for it! And don't say we did not tip you off.

ELLA HALL'S "METHOD"

It Consists, She Says, In Not Having Any, But "Just Living" Her Roles

ELLA HALL studied dancing for the Bluebird photoplay "Her Soul's Inspiration," and this picture is from one of her dance interpretations, called "A Dream of Trianon." In it she wears a gown of the days of Marie Antoinette, and dances a sort of "Menuet Seul" with the very charming Louis XVI. flower-basket which she carries on her shoulder. She feels quite French, you see, since playing "Gabrielle" in "The Bugler of Algiers" so successfully a few weeks ago.

ELLA HALL, who has another of her "little girl" parts in the current Bluebird release, "Her Soul's Inspiration," was asked the other day to tell something of her method in the playing of children's roles with such extraordinary fidelity.

"Why, I don't have any 'Method,'" she exclaimed in surprise. "When I let my hair down, and put on a short, childish frock, I just feel as if I were twelve years old. People are so nice about my 'acting' a little girl, and my 'convincing portrayal' of youth, and lovely things like that. But I feel rather ashamed, for really, you know, I don't have to act or portray a child at all. It sounds as if I did all sorts of studying, and made great efforts to be natural in such a role, whereas all I do is just to live it."

Miss Hall does not call "just living" a role difficult at all, you see, but many an actor of reputation will envy her the faculty; and there is a wide-spread idea in the profession that the ability to live a part is the highest type of acting of all.

No one who knows her work will be found to say that her gift is limited to the portrayal of juvenile characters. Those who saw the last reel of that tremendous Bluebird success "The Bugler of Algiers," know that Miss Hall is able to give a most convincing and appealing portrayal of old age. She is not yet in her twenties; yet she played an old woman of sixty in a manner which completely disguised her young grace. Perhaps sne "just lived" that, too. Whether the script calls for a little country girl, a waif of the streets, a boy, a young mother, or an old woman, Miss Hall brings the same satisfying sense of reality in her work. It is no wonder that her name stands so high on the list of favorites in a popularity contest, and that her vogue has been growing from month to month, until she now finds herself one of the most admired and sought-after actresses on the screen.

"Facing Death"

UNIVERSAL SERIAL

EPISODE four of the super-serial is entitled "Facing Death," and leaves the hero, Detective Phil Kelly, in a situation in which he is powerless, for all his cleverness, to aid himself. Pat, who has teased, mocked and outwitted him at every turn, here takes his part against their common enemy. As the picture fades, we see her struggling to rescue her would-be captor from a horrible death. Preceding this, there is one of the most terrific free-for-all encounters, which even Ford and Cunard have ever staged. And all their admirers know what they can do when they turn their attention to the proper filming of a screen encounter. To continue the recital of the thrilling incidents of this episode in reverse order—the fight is preceded, in turn, by a studio supper in the Latin quarter, which recalls the celebrations in that famous novel of Parisian student life, "Trilby." Here is a brief outline of the excitements of this chapter:

Safely arrived at his own room with his captive, whom he has carried on his shoulders from the sewers where he had captured her, "Sphinx" Kelly seats the girl in a chair and throws off the cape which had previously concealed her features. Great was Kelly's chagrin to discover that the girl whom he had presumed was Pat, was not his fair tormentor by any means—but another girl whom Pat had dressed in a costume like her own to fool the great detective.

EPISODE four of the super-serial is called "Facing Death." It contains a typical Ford-Cunard fight, which leaves the hero in a precarious situation.

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Detective Phil Kelly	Francis Ford
Mrs. Van Nuys	Jean Hathaway
Silk Donahue	John Duffy
Pete Bartlett	Pete Gerald
Bull Sanderson	Jerry Ash
Stephen Dupont	John Featherstone
Jacques, the butler	Mario Biannchi

For some time Patricia refrains from activities and "Sphinx" Kelly imagines that his tormentor has given up her practice of trying to humiliate him in perpetrating crimes and misdemeanors which he was invariably called to investigate. But at an utterly unexpected time, Pat resumes her work and Kelly is once more compelled to test his powers as a detective. It came about, this time, at the Paris Academy where Pat decided to thwart a scheme to cheat out of his just reward the rising young artist she had befriended.

Pat had posed for the pictures and her old enemy, Stephen Dupont, the art dealer and money-lender, who had previously suffered from the girl's depredations, was determined that a cheap daub he had caused to be entered for the grand prize should get the award of judgment. Pat overhears a conversation in which Dupont arranges to bribe the committee of award. Pat breaks into the Academy, transposes the pictures, and the award goes to a certain numbered picture—when the drapes are drawn it is Pat's nude likeness that gets the prize.

In celebration of her victory Pat assembles her friends at the studio of her artist protegee, to have a jollification. Dupont hears of the plan and brings a gang of ruffians to clean up the place. Kelly also knows of the party and goes there in time to enter into the fray. There is a general fight, of fierce and rough-and-tumble sort, that ends in Dupont spiriting Kelly away in an automobile.

Pat follows with her Apaches, and breaks into the house where Kelly has been made a prisoner. Kelly is in a room on the ground floor where a drove of alligators is kept in a tank. Pat is in the room overhead, breaking through the ceiling as the episode ends.

"A Slave of Fear"

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Written by Phillip Gastrock. Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Fred A. Kelsey. The story of a bully and his victim and how the tables were turned.

CAST.

Robert Warner	M. K. Wilson
His mother	Jane Bernoudy
Mike O'Connor	Lou Short
Kate, his daughter	Agnes Vernon
Bud Stevens	Earl Page

Kate finds the bravado of Bud more attractive than Bob's gentleness.

THIS is the story of a bully and his victim, who finally turned and then found that he had been fearing a terror which existed only in his imagination. It was written by Philip Gastrock, adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates, and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, who is now directing Harry Carey. M. K. Wilson is cast in the role of the young fellow who has been brought up to think that a soft answer is enough to turn away wrath in every case, but who finds that this philosophy is of no avail against the persecution of Bud Stevens, a bully who makes his life a burden to him. The theme of the "worm that turns" is always a popular one in pictures, plays and stories, and Kelsey has handled it in a way which makes it seem quite new. Agnes Vernon, as the girl to whom physical prowess proves irresistible, plays the role of a factory employee, and has to part her hair in a most unheroine-like fashion, and wear most unattractive clothes. Yet she manages to look pretty, which is surely a good deal of a triumph. An outline of the story follows:

Robert Warner, a big, good-looking chap, but very meek and timid, is a victim of Bud Stevens, known as the "Bully." Robert is very much in love with Kate O'Connor, whose father is a policeman, but he is too bashful to declare himself.

Kate signifies her intention of going to work in the factory where Robert and Bud are employed, and, just as Robert anticipates, Bud shows him up to be a coward before Kate. To his mother Robert confesses his chagrin at the treatment he receives from Bud and the mother dramatically tells him the story of his father who believed in using brute strength. Robert decides that he will not follow in his father's footsteps.

One night while he is calling upon Kate, Bud arrives and insults him before the girl and her father. This is too much and Robert decides that he will teach Bud a lesson, and, securing a gun, waits for him.

He follows Bud for some distance and to his astonishment sees Bud receive, at the hands of his friends, the same treatment that he had given him. Later, he discovers the trio in the act of robbing a store and quietly takes Bud's knife which he had inadvertently left near the window he pried open.

The next day Robert uses the knife in the presence of Bud, who immediately demands his knife, asking Robert where he got it. Robert informs him that he picked it up from the place where Bud had left it. Bud now realizes that Robert has the upper hand and persuades his companions that they should "clean up" Robert. Meantime, Robert has told Kate about the robbery and she in turn has told her father, so that when Bud and his companions call at Robert's home they are taken in custody—and Kate decides that her love is for Robert.

DID THEY SUCCEED? WELL, RATHER!

WHEN six beautiful maidens turn Lochinvars and on New Year's day, when each of the six can ride a horse like a cowboy and make a Lillian Russell look sick, when each declares she will propose to the first eligible bachelor meeting her on her early morning ride and when bachelors by the hundreds flocked to a certain riding academy in Chicago to take the "dare," can you miss seeing the pictures which will be the very rarest treat the Animated Weekly has ever offered to you?

FAMOUS AMERICAN LAID TO REST.

IN West Norwood Cemetery, England, there was recently buried Sir Hiram Maxim, the famous American scientist and inventor of the world renowned Maxim gun.

Famous men in all walks of life followed the cortege as it left Streatham and proceeded to the cemetery where simple and impressive ceremonies were held at the grave. Close-ups of prominent men and women paying tribute at the bier of the famous American prove a very interesting feature of Animated Weekly Number 54.

Those Inseparable

By Marjorie Howard

Genial Eddie Lyons.

Lee in "A Macaroni Sleuth."

ANOTHER pair of names has been added to the list of historic friendships. Beside Damon and Pythias, David and Jonathan, and other classic chums, we must now place Lyons and Moran, the Nestor inseparables, whose tastes, careers and histories are almost ludicrously identical. Just listen to this.

They were born in the same State, in the same year. They are both of Irish parentage. Eddie's people came from County Mayo, and Lee's from County Kerry. They both use their own names in pictures. They are both five feet ten inches in height, and both weigh about one hundred and thirty-five pounds. They both describe their coloring as "medium."

Both began their stage career in vaudeville. To be sure, Eddie got a year or so's start of Lee, who went to college first. Eddie organized a "Newsboy's Quartet," and sang tenor in it; while Lee had a song and dance act of his own. Then both of them deserted the two-a-day for the sweet-strained inanities of musical comedy. Later, both took a look-in at old-fashioned "stock." Both learned what a "one-night stand" meant, from actual experience, and both decided, about five years ago, that a settled home, out-of-door work, and fifty-two salary weeks a year were better than any "legitimate" engagement in the gift of America's most famous manager. (Far be it from us to give him a name.)

Having arrived at this momentous decision, they sought the despised movies; Eddie with the prophecy of George M. Cohan ringing in his ears. "Lyons has the makings of a star," said that great authority on what the people want, "if he stays in the legitimate. But he will be lost if he goes into the movies." The sweets of revenge are now within the grasp of the Nestor comedian, for the great George M. has decided to lose himself in the same manner—only he is just at the beginning of his screen career, while Eddie's name has been twinkling in the filmy firmament for years!

Well, to continue the parallel of the lives of E. Lyons and L. Moran (by the way, do you notice that the very initials of their last names follow each other in the alphabet?), it was not long before these predestined friends found each other in the same company—Universal, of course. Exclaiming, "My affinity" or something like that, they promptly fell on each other's necks, realizing that fate had united their destinies. Since that happy day, they have worked together, played together, eaten together, roomed together, exercised together. They are co-stars of the same company; they live at the same club; they play the same games—handball in winter; swimming, tennis, riding and anything else that is strenous enough, in summer; they have the same friends; they even like the same kind of girl.

"That is just the trouble," they told the interviewer, looking as melancholy as only a comedian in his leisure hours can; "our tastes in girls are so hopelessly similar that I'm afraid we are condemned to eternal bachelorhood. We both have extremely domestic tastes, and we are perfectly certain that we'd both make ideal husbands, but what can we do when we admire exactly the same type of girl?

Eddie in "A Macaroni Sleuth."

"We really thought we had pulled it off, once. For days we went about avoiding each other. We each felt that we had found the one woman, and we each dreaded breaking the news of the dissolution of our partnership. At last we screwed our courage to the sticking point, and confided in each other. When we came to an exchange of photographs of the charmer, we discovered that it was the same girl! Now we are waiting for a broad-minded Congress to pass a law that will fit our peculiar case.

"We regret very much that there is no apparent prospect of our becoming Benedicks. We both just adore home-cooking, and as for some one to sew on buttons——! But we shall probably have to struggle on as we are, until we find a pair of twins, who are absolutely identical in looks, manners and dispositions. And then they'll probably refuse to look at us. No, it seems that there is nothing but single-blessedness for us, and we might as well resign ourselves to it."

They have resigned themselves rather comfortably. There are probably no two young chaps in the whole screen world, who get a better time out of life than Eddie and Lee. They are enormously popular, both personally and professionally. They are working at a job which suits them down to the ground, and in which they have won a large measure of recognition and success. Best of all, they are still a long way on the sunny side of thirty, and their good fortune has come to them while they can enjoy it to the very utmost.

"We may not have been born with gold spoons in our mouths, as the saying is," they sagely remarked, "but we are doing well enough to buy a whole set of them to stick in the mouths of our descend—— There we go again! There must be an epidemic of matrimoney in the air, and we have become inoculated with a stray germ of it. Well, the remedy is work. Bring on another comedy!" And they plunged back into the serious business of manufacturing laughs at the ratio of a thousand feet a week for the Universal program.

As Lee Moran really looks.

"I see you up there, Lee, but you're too good to be true." Lee turns into an angel in "Why, Uncle!"

POOR KIDDIES MADE HAPPY BY UNIVERSAL CITY FOLK.

A PLAYLET entitled "The Children's Christmas," written and directed by Henry McRae of Univercal City and produced by him at the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the night of December 22 with Betty Schade as the mother and Elizabeth Janes and Burwell Hamerick as the children, added to the joy of the 4,000 children who had been assembled by Al Malaikah Temple of Los Angeles to participate in a huge Christmas tree celebration.

The youngsters were the poorest little ones that could be found attending the schools of the southern city, and after the entertainment, which in addition to the playlet consisted of music by the Shrine band and songs by their male chorus of fifty voices, the little ones were presented with all the toys, fruits and candy they could carry away. The Shriners brought the children to the Auditorium in the custody of the school teachers and provided the transportation to and from their homes.

The affair was in charge of Chester W. Thompson, Chairman of the Shriners' Entertainment Committee, and was pronounced the most succesful of the kind that ever had been given in the Auditorium. In addition to the 4,000 children who were made happy through the generosity of Al Malaikah Temple there were present several thousand of the mothers and fathers of the youngsters and their friends.

“THE DOUBLE ROOM MYSTERY”

RED FEATHER Photoplay. Story by Stella Wynne Herron, author of “Shoes.” Scenario by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Hobart Henley. A new sort of detective tale, concerning a little slavey and a shyster lawyer.

HOBART HENLEY has been making steady progress as a director, and put some fine things to his credit. None is better from the producer's standpoint than this Red Feather, “The Double Room Mystery,” which was written by Stella Wynne Herron, the author of the sensational Bluebird success, “Shoes,” which introduced Mary MacLaren to the film world as a star. Mrs. Herron knows life as it is, and her stories have a grim reality and convincing power which makes them particularly well-adapted to the screen. The scenario in this case was prepared by E. J. Clawson, and turned over to Mr. Henley, with a company composed of names which are well known in Red Feather plays.

This is a detective story with unusual features. The villain in the case is a shyster lawyer, one of those men, as a sub-title says, “who never do any work, but always have plenty of money.” This is a character rather new to pictures. The scene opens in a typical New York boarding-house, with the parsimonious landlady, the down-trodden little slavey, and the star-boarder all complete. A net is woven around the little servant by the skillful manipulation of circumstances, until it seems impossible for her to escape. But of course, she is rescued in time, and sent to the country by a magnanimous “star” reporter, who captures the criminal, and refreshingly fails to fall in love with the slavey. Instead, he sends her away perfectly blissful, in the company of the boarding-house boy-of-all-work, who has long been casting sheep's eyes at her. An outline of the story runs as follows:

“She's terribly pretty,” thought Greely.

Silver Joe, a hardened and dangerous criminal, is imprisoned for grand larceny and has engaged William Greely, a shyster police court lawyer, as well as a grafter, to defend his case. As recompense, Silver gives Greely a tobacco pouch in which four valuable uncut diamonds are hidden.

Greely is powerfully attracted by a timid country girl who slaves for the proprietress of his boarding-house. Susanne is afraid of him and manages to keep her distance up to the time that she is arrested for the theft of several cheap rings belonging to the proprietress, which have been mislaid. While she is in prison, under the vilest conditions imaginable, Greely promises to pay her bail, if she is willing to meet his advances.

Greely takes the diamonds from the pouch, but denies the fact to Silver, as he is determined to get away with all of them instead of merely one, according to the agreement. He then refuses to take the case, and Silver is brought before the chief for cross-examination. Being left alone and unguarded, Silver slugs the chief with his fist, snatches up a civilian outfit and disappears through the window. He has learned that Greely has stolen the diamonds.

Susanne's case has been dismissed, although she thinks that Greely got her out and so allows him to lead her to his room. Arrived there, she struggles fiercely with him. A knock is heard and she is told to hide behind the dresser. Silver hastily steps into the room and as Greely draws his revolver, he also draws his, both shoot and Greely falls dead to the floor.

"I've decided to drop your case," said Greely.

Susanne is held for the murder, Silver having escaped into the room adjoining Greely's, in which Cannon, a newspaper reporter, is dressing to go out. Silver threatens Cannon, while he jollies Silver and thus saves trouble.

Meanwhile, James, a roustabout in the boarding-house, and an ardent admirer of Susanne's, becomes suspicious. He stacks up some furniture and peeps through the transom. While descending from this precarious position, he, with all the furniture, falls with a clamor. Silver is terrified by the sound and is about to draw his revolver again, when Cannon slugs him with a whisky bottle and then, with six pairs of handcuffs, makes his escape impossible. Leaving James to guard the captive, he dashes joyfully to the police station and to his office to write up his scoop.

Meantime, Bennett, another reporter, arrives at the scene of the murder and, too, looks over the transom, seeing Silver, still handcuffed and James stolidly guarding him. He phones for help and is greatly disappointed because of not being the first to get the story.

Susanne is now again free. Cannon, feeling sorry for her and James, sends them to stay with an uncle of his, where the two live happily ever after.

"Come out of that!" said the officer.

EDITH ROBERTS MEETS WITH SUCCESS IN COMEDY ROLES.

EDITH ROBERTS has becomes a shining light in Universal Nestor Comedy Company. Miss Roberts, who is a mere slip of a girl, has been in the pictures some three years, and it has been her good fortune to be in the hands of careful, paintaking directors, with the result that she is exceptionally well quelified for the work before the camera which she has been called upon to do of late.

Little Miss Roberts, playing in the Nestor comedy, "Treat 'Em Rough," has a keen sense of humor, and as she can adapt herself quickly to comic situations, is proving a great aid to Director Chaudet in the making of his rapid-fire productions. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the inseparable Nestor twins, whom she is supporting, both declare that Miss Roberts is the best comedienne the Nestor company has ever had.

"You two innocents go to the country," said "Speed."

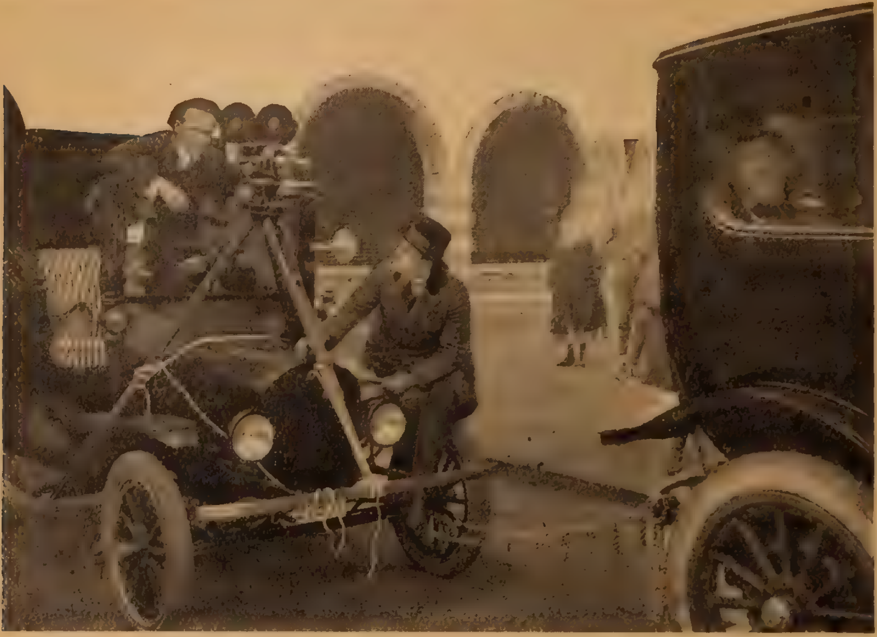
INTERESTING pictures of the varied activities at the film capital. Directors at work with their players. Distinguished visitors and a new wardrobe building, which is the largest in the world.



Allan Holubar directing a scene in "The Reward of His Government."

ALLAN HOLUBAR is accomplishing fine things at Universal City in the capacity of director. A five-reel feature—his first, by the way—will soon be released as a Red Feather photoplay, under the title of "Heart Strings." The cut shows him at work on another story of quite a different character, which is called "The Reward of His Government," and is a five-reel drama with a French atmosphere.

This picture gives away one of the secrets of film-making, showing, as it does, how a scene is photographed through the back of an automobile, as the machine is in swift motion. The director is seen on the mudguard of the runabout, with the script in his hand. He is looking at his cameraman, Roy Klaffki, who is perched in a most precarious position on top of the glass shield.

"That's all right when the machine is not in motion," he is saying, "but how will you manage to stick on when she's going full tilt?"

At the wheel of the runabout is Thomas Jefferson, who declared that as the machine was his own he would entrust its guidance to no one else. The dignified Parisian in the other car is Wadsworth Harris, playing the part of an important French official of the government. Doesn't he look like a Frenchman? Notice how the cameraman is much more careful of its safety than of his own. In the background is an interested group of spectators, for scenes of this character attract attention even in the film capital, which has become to a certain extent inured to thrills.

LATEST ADDITION TO UNIVERSAL CITY.

UNIVERSAL CITY seems to the visitor to be absolutely complete in every detail of picture-making, but like all up-to-date enterprises, the film capital never rests on its laurels, and improvements are continually being made in the huge plant. This is a new two-story wardrobe building, of which a picture is reproduced on this page.

They make a habit of superlatives at Universal City, so we are not surprised to hear that this is the largest structure devoted to the storage of costumes in the world. Here are kept more than 18,000 suits and dresses of all historical periods, to say nothing of the great collection of modern ones, which are ready to supply the needs of the photoplays. If a director is staging a story in any epoch of time, from the days of the Garden of Eden to the year 1917, his costume wants can be supplied at short notice from the almost priceless contents of this new building. The clothes are arranged in the most convenient manner in various periods, so that there shall be no delay in finding exactly what is wanted. Some of the larger productions at Universal City employ the services of thousands of extra people at one time. This army must be appropriately costumed, of course, when the scene is laid in another epoch; and an idea of the number of dresses on hand may be gained by the spectator of such a mammoth performance as the East Indian scenes in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," now running on Broadway.

In addition to its immense storage capacity, the structure contains great workrooms for the manufacture of new dresses, and the no less important repair of the old ones. Every room is fitted with the newest time and labor-saving devices, and there is perfect light throughout the big place. A tremendous number of employees spend their days in it, and every effort has been made to allow them to work under the most favorable conditions. Thousands and thousands of yards of materials are delivered at the big front door every day to be made into clothes.

NESTORS ENTERTAIN DARING DARIO.

WHEN the Vanderbilt Cup Auto race took place this year in Los Angeles, the Nestor Company was very prominently connected with the proceedings. They obtained permission to stage a comedy during the progress of the race, and to use the vast crowds, the grand-stand, the start of the race, flashes of the racers, and the finish as part of the picture which was called "One Thousand Miles an Hour." During the intervals when they were not actually at work, the members of the company occupied a conspicuous box, and their appearance in make-up did a great deal to add to the entertainment of the thousands of spectators who were present. Eddie Lyons had the role of an inventor who triumphs in the end, and Lee Moran was the sheriff who pursued him, and incidentally acted as one of the stewards of the race.

Their participation in the classic gave the Nestors an added interest in auto racing, if that were possible. So when the great speed demon, Dario Resta, visited Universal City the other day, they insisted that the honor of entertaining him should fall to them. They were staging a comedy, at the time, in which Eddie figured as the country boy, and Lee as the great "Detective Potts," a part which he has made famous.

THERE are very few women directors in the film world, but Universal City, which contains so many wonders, harbors three of them. Of these three, Lois Weber, producer of "Where Are My Children?" and "The People vs. John Doe" (to mention only two of her famous creations), if of course the chief. She deservedly bears the title of greatest woman director in the world, and there are a great many people who declare that the word "woman" should be dropped from the title, to make it really fit her.

The two other directresses are Ruth Ann Baldwin, and Ruth Stonehouse. Of these two, Miss Baldwin is a "regular," with a company of her own, and a rating as a producer for the Universal program; while Miss Stonehouse just takes an occasional flier into direction, in the intervals of starring for somebody else.

Miss Baldwin is shown in the cut at work on a two-reel picture, called "Retribution," in which Cleo Madison is starred with several well-known players in her support. She has produced only a few pictures so far, but her standard is very high, and each of them has been a hit. She has been associated with Universal for a long time, in several different capacities. She was a scenario writer, and later editor of the department. She was sent to England to collaborate with E. Phillips Oppenheim in the construction of one of the early serial successes, "The Black Box."

Miss Baldwin has long had the directing bee in her bonnet, and her first opportunity came in the form of assistant to Lynn Reynolds, one of Bluebird's most gifted directors. Miss Baldwin accompanied him into the redwood country, for the making of the beautiful "End of the Rainbow," in which Myrtle Gonzalez was starred. She proved herself so well adapted to wield the baton of authority, that she was soon entrusted with a company of her own. Among her photoplays are a charming child story called "The Rented Man"; a two-reel production called "Pink Fondant and Blue Serge," in which J. Morris Foster appears for the first time as a Universal artist; another two-reel play called "Bred in the Purple," and the present story, "Retribution," with Miss Madison.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

MONTREAL.—A meeting of the Montreal Moving Picture Exhibitors and Exchangemen was held Monday night, December 11, in the green room of Hotel Bouillon. Mr. W. R. Herring, manager of Mount Royal Theatre, was chairman of the meeting. Mr. Herring, in his remarks, said that the principal reason for the failure of former attempts at organization was due to the fact that it was only when a storm appeared on their business horizon that the average exhibitor realized the value of co-operation. He also touched on the proposed bill to increase the Charity Tax from one to five cents.

Following him, Mr. Ouimet, general manager of the Specialty Import Film Co., spoke at considerable length on the industry and its problems. Mr. Ouimet's motto was "Preparedness," and he thought it was a mistake to consider an Exchange Exhibitor Association and felt that an Association of Exhibitors should come first.

The following officers were elected finally from the motion introduced by Mr. Gerald Barrie, president of the Windsor Amusement Co.

President—M. W. R. Herring, Mt. Royal Theatre.

Treasurer—K. Spordakos, Maryland Theatre

Secretary—Mr. McMann, Independent Amusement Co.

Advisory Committee—G. Barrie, Mr. Perry, Mr. Robideau.

The remainder of the meeting was very lively in many respects, and much discussion was in order. However, the big thing was that the theatre men in Montreal have gotten together and succeeded in forming an association, which it is hoped will continue to prosper.

Toronto.—The Family Theatre, Walkerville, Ont., according to latest news received, has been entirely destroyed by fire. No cause as yet has been assigned for the disaster.

The employees of the Shipping and Poster Department of the Canadian Universal Film Co. made a very unique and pleasing presentation to Messrs. Hague and Lennon, Canadian managers Universal Film Co., on Saturday, Dec. 23d. This was in the form of cigarette holders and cigarettes, which were to show the appreciation of their employees for the treatment accorded them.

This has been a busy week in the head office of the Canadian Universal Film Co., owing to the fact of Mr. Hazza, manager of the Winnipeg Office and Mr. Finch from Vancouver, both being in town. Mr. Hazza reports business as being exceptionally good in his territory and prospects never brighter. Mr. Finch states that business in Vancouver is not nearly so good as it should be, owing to the fact that the supply of films greatly exceeds the demand and that censorship is unusually severe.

The Publicity Department of the Universal Film Co. are conducting a contest in the Toronto and Montreal papers in connection with the new serial "The Purple Mask." The idea is a contest for limericks which contain the names of Francis Ford, Grace Cunard and "The Purple Mask." The winners will receive large personally autographed photos of these two popular stars and judging by results up to date the idea will be success.

The first Canadian movies taken in the air have been completed by Mr. William James, a local Toronto photographer, above Long Branch on the north shore of Ontario. The flight was made under the auspices of the Curtis Aeroplane Co.

MINNEAPOLIS LETTER.

By JULIUS BERNHEIM.

ONE of the big events in the Twin Cities took place on December 3, which marked the opening of the New Palace Theatre in St. Paul. This beautiful playhouse is owned and controlled by the Northwestern promoters, Reuben & Finkelstein, and represents an investment of approximately three-quarters of a million dollars.

The New Palace Theatre is without a doubt one of the most beautifully decorated theatres in the Northwest, and has a seating capacity of nearly 3,000. It is devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, meaning of course, Universal movies.

The Reuben & Finkelstein interests have also arranged for the Universal pictures at their Minneapolis playhouse, the New Palace, which conclusively proves the popularity of the Universal program in the Twin Cities.

It is a hard task to-day to please 90 per cent. of the exhibitors, so it will be of interest to know that never before has the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis received as many complimentary letters on their booking and poster departments as at present.

These two departments have been reorganized by the local manager, Mr. J. F. Cubberley, and are certainly delivering the goods. Every sheet of paper and other publicity matter is sent out one week in advance.

THE MOVING PICTURE ORGANIST

By M. WINKLER.

THE Moving Picture Organist has a constantly widening field of activity owing to the increasing number of houses installing modern pipe organs. A good three-manual pipe organ is an ideal instrument for photoplay use. In a single instrument played by one performer, it approximates the wide range of color and expression of the orchestra and, where even a good conductor's men do not always respond on the instant to his lead, an able organist can immediately call forth from the keys the exact variations of mood and tempo the changing picture projection demands. Far more is required of a moving picture organist than of the church organist. The latter's service work is practically the same, year in year out, and his instrument is largely used for accompaniment. In motion picture work the symphonic character of the organ is emphasized. The motion picture organist needs a greater technique, a more ready adaptability, a keener sense of dramatic and musical values than his brother in this church. And not only must his repertory be larger—for it is drawn from overtures, ballets, operas, oratorios, songs and the music of all individual instruments—but his musical sympathies must be broader, he must have more imagination and greater readiness. These qualities are literally forced upon him by the conditions of his work. Yet once he has "found himself" in this new field, not only does a wider and more interesting vista of musical endeavor open before him, but he is assured of a more remunerative return for his labors.

AN OPERA SINGER ON THE PROGRAM

WHEN the Universal Film Company wants a Frenchwoman for a part in a film production, they are apt to send for Madame Yolande Duquette. Her latest part is that of the wife of the theatre manager in the Bluebird Photoplay "The Honor of Mary Blake," in which Violet Mersereau is starred. For this role, Madame Duquette was borrowed for Bluebird Photoplays by Director Edwin Stevens. She has often played in the support of Miss Mersereau in shorter pictures made a short time ago for the Universal program. Among them is the Gold Seal three-reel picture "Souls United," which will be released on next week's program.

Madame Duquette was born in Strasbourg, which, though German, is full of families of French descent. Hers is such a one. She developed a voice, and was a student at Strasbourg Conservatory, where she graduated. Later she went to London and was a pupil of the famous contralto Madame Albani. For two seasons she was a member of Oscar Hammerstein's London Opera Company, in the big opera house which he built to rival Covent Garden, the Royal Opera.

Yolande Duquette.

Madame Duquette has appeared in pictures for many companies, among them Fox, World, Peerless, etc., and is noted for her graceful gestures, and for her carefully composed costumes.

UNIVERSAL BUYS SCRIPTS of CELEBRATED AUTHORS

ALL critics of motion pictures are agreed on one point, namely that the greatest need of the industry is better stories. Production and players have improved to a degree which is astonishing, when one considers the youth of the film play, but it seems as if the material to work on, the plays themselves, had not kept pace in development with the mechanical and theatrical side of the profession.

The Universal Film Co. has taken a step which will do much to improve their output in this respect. They have just completed arrangements, through the Authors' Association Agency, for the purchase of 300 scripts.

The scripts are ready for immediate production, and include 1, 2, 3, and 5-reel stories. Among the authors whose work has been purchased, are such famous names, as C. C. and A. M. Williamson, as well as Epes Winthrop Sargent, Burton C. Durand, Harry Chandlee, Shannon Pyfe, Emmett Campbell Hall, Lawrence McCloskey, Elizabeth Carpenter, Adrian Gil-Spear, and Anita Loos. The sum paid for the scripts runs into an enormous figure.

NEW ENGLAND UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE WARMS NEW HOME

THE New England Universal Film Exchange, of Boston, Mass., in order to celebrate their arrival at their new quarters, situated at 13-19 Stanhope Street, gave a party to the children of the Catholic Home for the Destitute, on Tuesday, December 26th. Needless to say, the kiddies had a delightful time, as may well be judged from the accompanying photograph. The flashlight seems to have frightened some of them into hiding under their coats, but as soon as the exchange cameraman started turning his crank to take a movie of the children, they were themselves again, and endeavored to pose as prettily as possible.

Kiddies of the Catholic Home at Exchange Party.

The exchange ran off a number of pictures for their appreciative guests, who were shrewd critics and enjoyed the plays immensely. Between pictures they sang, and a light supper was served.

The party was a splendid housewarming for the Universal's new fireproof building.

TRUCK ENDS RUN AT BIG U

AFTER having negotiated all kinds of roads and facing conditions that a truck in ordinary service never would meet, the little Republic Dispatch — the first of the 1500-pound models — rolled into Universal City, showing a total of 4078 miles from Alma, Mich.

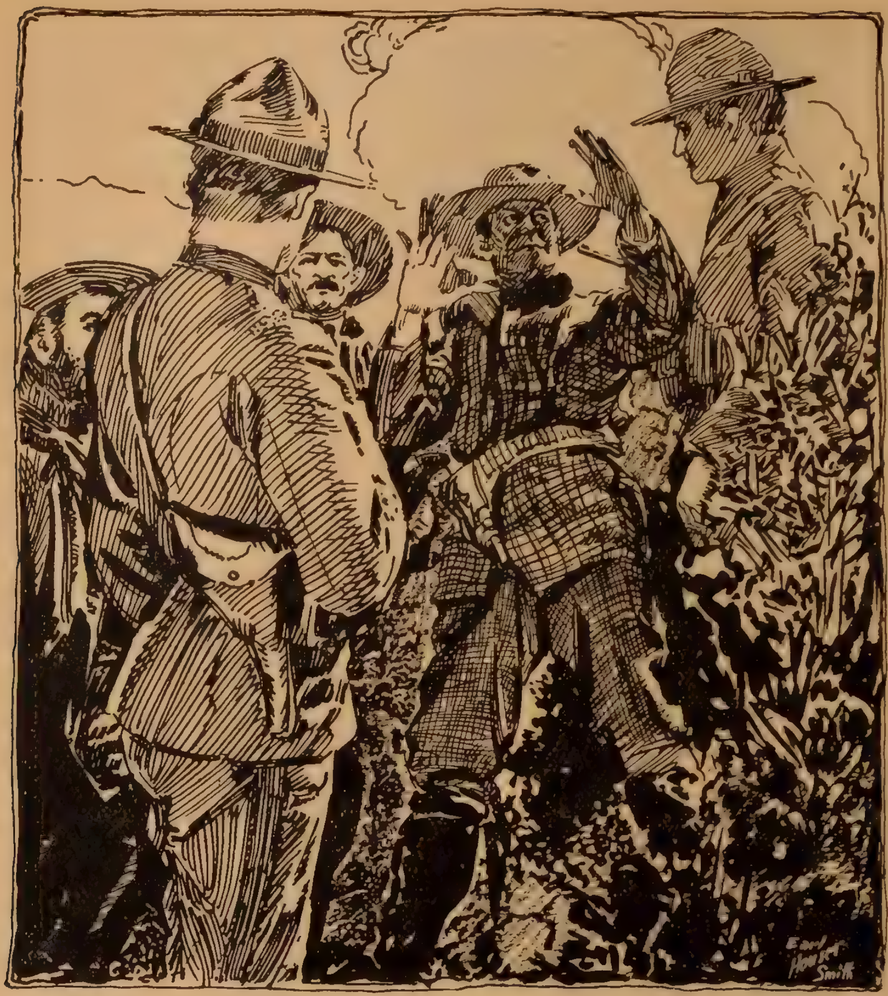
At the gates of the film capital the truck, driven by Lester Poyer, was met by an escort of Republic owners with trucks and touring cars, and after moving pictures had been made for the Universal Animated Weekly, the party was piloted through the big studios with the Dispatch leading the way. They had no trouble in making the test run from the Michigan factory to U City.

"Bloodhounds of the North"

BIG U Two-Reel Drama. Produced amid some of the most beautiful scenery in the United States, by Allen Dwan. A story of the loneliness of women exiled through the fault of their men.

CAST.

The Embezzler	William Lloyd
His Daughter	Pauline Bush
The Refugee	James Neill
Captain of Mounted Troopers	M. J. MacQuarrie
Lieutenant	Lon Chaney



THIS is a story of the most picturesque corps in the New World, the Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted Police—to give them their full, imposing title. The captain and his two lieutenants are sent into the mountain fastnesses to arrest an embezzler, who has taken refuge among a colony of law-breakers. Their innocent womenkind, forced into exile with them, are the chief sufferers, for through no fault of their own, they are cut off from civilization. Some of the most beautiful scenery in the United States has been used for the background of this strong story by Director Allen Dwan, who, with the collaboration of his cameraman, has produced pictures which are equal to any scenic effects ever recorded by the camera for our delight. It is doubtful if the effect of mountain mist, melting in the first rays of the rising sun, has ever been reproduced as in this Big U picture. An outline of the story runs as follows:

In an out-of-the-way spot in the mountains, a colony of refugees has gathered for mutual aid and protection. They are men from the United States and Canada, who are wanted for various crimes. One day, a man who is being sought for embezzlement arrives at the colony with his daughter Pauline. The embezzler is a man of brains and a natural leader of men. Thus, to James' chagrin, he becomes virtually the leading spirit in the colony.

In the meantime, two members of the Northwest Mounted Police, Lon and Mac, are on the embezzler's trail. As they near the colony the embezzler, without James' knowledge, stations his men and instructs them to fire on the mounted police.

As Lon and Mac have only revolvers, they are easy prey to the refugees with rifles. Mac is wounded. The embezzler's daughter takes him to her cabin. On one occasion the girl leaves the cabin and confers with her father. Lon follows her and learns her secret—that her father is the man they are seeking.

Believing that he has the girl at his mercy, Lon makes advances to her. Mac interferes because he, also, has fallen in love with Pauline. Lon then tells him of the girl's father. Mac's duty is plain to him. He goes to James and demands the surrender of the embezzler. James complies, and Mac arrests Pauline's father. The girl then appeals to Lon, promising him everything if he will save her parent.

Lon lifts his revolver to shoot Mac. However, other refugees watch the arrest of the embezzler and mistake Lon's intention. Lon is shot, and as they shoot at Mac the embezzler is shot and killed. They are about to finish their work when another man of the mounted police comes up and covers them, while Mac disarms them.

The picture fades out as the helpless girl looks from her dead father to Mac—a man she can respect, and has already learned to love.

WORLD'S CHAMPION SKATERS POSE FOR UNIVERSAL.

THE ice skaters, Earle Reynolds and Nellie (Donegan) Reynolds, winner of several International World Championships in every part of the world, recently posed exclusively for the Universal cameraman, and in Animated Weekly Number 54 there will be seen their original dance creation, La Bohemian, which created a sensation.

Fancy ice skating stunts, including The Aeroplane, the most dangerous ice skating feat in skating art, posed, originated and executed by the Reynolds, is another treat of this feature, including both ice and roller skating scenes.

Carter De Haven in "His Little Room Mate"

IT took four clever people to concoct the completed product which is presented to Universal patrons under the title of "His Little Room-mate," as a Victor comedy. Henry C. Warnack wrote the story in the first place. Then Harry Wulze and Maie Havey put it into scenario form, and Carter De Haven produced it and played the lead. There is a proverb which says that too many cooks spoil the broth, but in this case it proves itself to be a variable quantity, for the resultant broth is very palatable indeed. An outline of the story runs as follows:

VICTOR Two-Reel Comedy. Story by Henry C. Warnack. Scenario by Harry Wulze and Maie Havey. Produced by Carter De Haven, who also plays the lead.

His Father	Ed Clark
The Girl	Madge Kirby

Carter, at college, plays a trick on a professor by putting a skeleton in his bed. In doing so he knocks a vase out of the window. It strikes a girl below and she loses her memory. Carter thinks she is dead and carries her into his room. She recovers, however, and he finds himself the guardian of a very pretty orphan, who can recall nothing of her past. Carter has a terrible time keeping her hidden from the sight of the professor and his classmates, and is forced to spend his nights sleeping out on campus. One day, the maid, who secretly hopes to make a hit with Carter, discovers hairpins on the floor of his room, and she at once draws conclusions. She hurries to the professor and relates the story of her find. The professor listens and goes with her to make a search. In the meantime Carter has been forced to furnish a wardrobe for his adopted daughter, and the situation becomes so hot that he tries to make her leave. But, as she does not know where to go, or he where to send her, he is forced to keep her secretly in his room. The snooping professor learns the truth and orders Carter and the girl to leave. They do so, but not until Carter has had a battle with the professor and taught him some manners. Carter marries the girl and takes her home, secretly fearing she will turn out to be a missing mother of a pair of twins. His father and mother will not accept the girl as their daughter-in-law, till the real father turns out to be an old friend of Carter's father, and a wealthy oil magnate, when everything is settled in a satisfactory manner.

DIVERSIONS OF THE JOKERS.

THE principal diversion of the Universal Jokers on cloudy or rainy days, when it is impossible to work on exteriors, is playing checkers. Director W. W. Beaudine undertook to play the game a week or two ago with his Jokers, and was badly beaten. So he adopted the habit of cutting out the checker column of the daily papers to make a study of the different moves. As a result he claims now to be highly proficient and is willing to meet all comers, his particular challenge being directed against Gale Henry or William Franey, the star checker players "on the lot."

Miss Henry and Mr. Franey believe in innocent diversion and they declare that they will come to the front and centre with a new dance that will startle the world. The laugh-makers have been practising daily for the "Hokum step," which is a conglomeration of modern and eccentric dancing. Probably they will introduce the dance in some future comedy, but they propose to be ready for any charitable entertainment in Los Angeles, which may require performers.

Mr. B. Rosenthal,
Universal Film & Sup. Co.,
St. Louis, Missouri.

Dear Sir:-

I hand you herewith several house reports on a number of photoplays that I have personally paid considerable attention to. My main reason for watching very closely what we have used in the past three or four weeks is for the following reasons:

The Gem Theater some five years ago was one of the greatest successes as a picture house in the city of St. Louis, but like a number of other houses it went back and was finally closed for a period of about three years, when the writer was finally induced to open it up some two months ago. From the day we opened the house we used the entire output of the Universal Exchange, first run in the down town district, and there is no question of doubt in the writer's mind, from the rapid growth of our business, that within the next thirty days the Gem will be playing to capacity business, and I can say that 75% of the credit is due to Universal film. I have spent some 6 to 8 years in the picture business and I want to say that to-day the Universal is one of the best, cleanest and well balanced programs on the market, barring all competition, and there is not words that will express the quality of the L.K.O. comedies and as a money getter it has no equal. This might be placing the matter somewhat strong but the opinion is based from an unbiased standpoint.

Very respectfully,

WESTERN AMUSEMENT & INVESTMENT CO.

"Brute Force"

The circuit rider is captured.

Bess and Tess are confidants.

THIS is a mountain drama, produced amid beautiful West Coast scenery by A. W. Rice, from the story by Eustace Hale Ball, adapted for the screen by Earl R. Hewitt. In it George Pearce, an actor with a reputation in the "legitimate," and Jane Bernoudy, who has appeared in so many Universal releases, have the leading roles. A forced marriage is the culminating scene of many exciting episodes. The circuit rider has been captured by the moonshiners, and they try by torture to make him perform the ceremony between the girl Bess and the head of the outlaws. When they find that pain has no effect upon his resolution not to desecrate the marriage service, they turn their attention to the girl, and twist her arm unbearably until she is about to give her consent to be married to the ruffian. Just in time, the arriving officers succeed in firing the house, and in the subsequent disturbance, the circuit rider rescues the girl. The fire scenes are managed with astonishing realism, and some startling effects are produced. A short outline of the story follows:

John Clayborn	Geo. Pearce
Lew Sanderson	Jas. Farley
Bess Harding	Jane Bernoudy
Hank Harding	Mr. Hahn
Tess	Miss Hallenbeck

John Clayborn has been absent from a small mountain town for some time and when he returns he is an ordained minister. Tess' uncle, old Hank Harding, who owns a large farm, is not very much enthused over ministers as he likes his booze too well. Harding's daughter, Bess, is very devoted to her father—so much so that she will not leave him to marry Lew Sanderson, who is continually asking for her hand.

Lew is a rascally sort of chap and while he does care for Bess, the wealth which she will inherit from her father has much to do with his infatuation. He plies the old man with moonshine, as he is operating several distilleries.

Lew does not appreciate the arrival of Clayborn, as he realizes that Bess likes him as does Tess, but Clayborn considers the latter but a child. Lew is plotting to gain his ends and when Bess promises her father that she will not marry as long as he lives, Lew builds three or four stills on Harding's place and then informs the revenue officers that Harding is operating stills and the officers are sent to arrest him.

During his calls, Clayborn visits the home of one of the men who is dying and has worked for Lew and been mistreated. He tells him of the plot and Clayborn arrives at the station just in time to meet the officers and explain that it was only a trick against Harding. Lew had laid his plans well. He had taken a couple of jugs of moonshine to Harding's, plied him with drinks, until he was in a drunken stupor and left another jug beside him. Clayborn secures the aid of Bess and they destroy the stills, but the old man, hearing a noise, takes his gun and shoots Clayborn in the arm.

That night, Lew sends word for Bess to meet Clayborn at a certain house and sends word to Clayborn to meet her at the same place. When the minister arrives, he is beaten and taken to the loft; when Bess arrives she learns of the ruse that has been played upon her and Lew demands that she marry him or he will have her father sent to prison. He threatens Clayborn with damaging Bess' name if he will not marry them.

Just as he is on the point of performing the ceremony, the officers fire the house. Clayborn rescues Bess from the burning loft, and, at the risk of his own life, drags Lew from the burning building, but he later dies. Tess for a time is heartbroken because she has lost the minister whom she has learned to love, but she sees that she must resign him to Bess. The circuit rider and Bess are married as soon as she has been somewhat consoled for the death of her father. So all ends well after the excitements and obstacles of their courting.

Nestor Comedy.

Written by Bess Meredyth.
Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

CAST.

Jack	Eddie Lyons
His Wife	Priscilla Dean
Dave	Lee Moran
His Wife	Edith Roberts

Jack and Betty are married and Dave and Helen are married. But several years before, rumors were rife to the effect that Jack cared for Helen and Dave cared for Betty. So that as Jack gives Betty a very scanty kiss the latter feels in her heart that Dave would have been far more affectionate to another. And in the case of Helen, the same sentiments abide. And the two men are business partners, too.

Helen protests vigorously against Dave's going on a fishing trip with Jack. She therefore writes a note to Jack pleading with him to dissuade Dave from going and signs herself, "for auld lang syne, Helen."

Betty, finding herself without money, goes to the office, sees the signature, takes a taxi by mistake with Dave and they arrive in time to see Jack caring carefully for Helen, who has sprained her ankle. There is trouble to pay until a young grizzly happens along and solves the difficulties beautifully.

"THE MASKED CUPID."

Victor Comedy.

This is a comedy in which an irate husband thinks better of giving his wife a new frock and returns home to say so when their maid's steady decides to steal some jewels. Adventures meet Mr. Husband on his way home and the officers, following him, arrive in time to get him and the steady, who hasn't succeeded in getting the jewels, but some baby clothes which Mr. Husband does not know are in the course of construction. The happy news dispells tears and the officers, while an O-Cedar mop wipes up traces of trouble.

"MR. FULLERPEP—HE GOES TO THE COUNTRY."

Powers Com. Cartoon (Split Reel).

Mr. Fullerpep, tired of city life, goes to the country and with him goes a flivver. Both nearly never get back and their adventures cover much ground and fun.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 5.

This animated reel, filled with the world's activities, contains a Physical Culture Course given by a woman authority in which are seen twenty-minute daily exercises for all parts of the body; Our Dumb Friends, which shows the dishonest feeding of chickens and how to tell a bad from a good one; Engineering, the loading of vessels, showing how time and labor are saved; a Domestic Science course, after which any husband can make a good waffle, and the Travelogue, in which the central section of New York City is visited. There are views of the best hotels, street scenes, railroad stations, the Public Library, Fifth Avenue, homes of the best known men and women in the world and comedy aplenty in the scenes "How the City Looks to the Strange Visitor."

These last scenes are taken from new angles and show the traffic of New York as it is seen from unusual viewpoints. The resulting comedy is far too amusing to describe. These various features make Issue No. 5 of the Screen Magazine the best yet. It is steadily improving and beats its own record with every number.

"THE LITTLE REBEL'S SACRIFICE."

Big U Drama.

Edith Eldridge, daughter of Colonel Eldridge, disguises herself as a boy to enlist with her brothers in the Confederate Army. Her identity is discovered and she is rejected. Federal raiders burn the Eldridge house and Edith's father is killed. To avenge the murder, Edith turns spy for the Confederates. She goes through the swamps to the headquarters of General Johnson. The General pleads with her to give up her perilous undertakings, but she insists. Alone she enters the Union lines near the quarters of Lieutenant Phillips. She feigns illness and the officer carries her to the quarters. Slowly but surely Lieutenant Phillips is falling in love with Edith. She plans to secure the outline map of the Union fortifications entrusted to Phillips. By betraying her faith she secures them and makes her escape.

She safely gets the papers to the Confederate general.

As a result of the information the Confederates make an attack. During the battle, Edith sees both her brothers killed. She witnesses the danger of a Confederate ammunition wagon and attempts to drive it across the stream. The Confederates are repulsed and Lieutenant Phillips captures Edith, and takes her back to the Union camp as a prisoner.

A friend of Edith's goes to the governor and pleads for Edith's pardon. After telling the governor Edith's story from beginning to end, the governor tells him that he will think it over and will let him know shortly.

About two days later Edith is pardoned and she meets Phillips and the two live for each other.

"PUTTING ONE OVER ON IGNATZ."

Victor Comdy.

Written and Produced by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke.

CAST.

Maudie	Alida Newman
Tottie	Peggy Custer
Bud	Al McKinnon
Monty	Eugene Walsh
Ignatz	Walter Belasco

Maudie, a beautiful leading lady, has a wonderful tooth set with a diamond and reputed to be the gift of royal blood. The manager of the company absconds with all the cash, leaving the entire chorus stranded far from home.

Bud, the comedian, collects all the money in the crowd, which does not amount to $1, and sends one of the boys with Maudie to Ignatz's store to make a small purchase.

Ignatz is impressed by the tooth. Later, Bud sends Monty, the juvenile, to the store and Bud with Maudie visit Ignatz and tell him that Maudie has lost her diamond tooth worth $1,000, and offer him $500 if he can find it. She thinks she lost it in his store. They promise to return at a certain time to see if he has been successful in finding it.

Then comes Monty and tells Ignatz that he has found a diamond tooth—which Maudie has removed—in the bag of walnuts which he had purchased and the old man persuades him to sell it for $250.

With the money, the troupe proceed to the station. Ignatz appears and they are forced to run for their train, pursued by the tearful victim.

"IN THE LAND OF THE SON OF HEAVEN, AS SEEN BY DR. DORSEY."

Powers Educational (Split Reel).

The spectator thrills with Dr. Dorsey in "The Land of the Son of Heaven," the latest educational Powers' release. The far-famed temples of the sun-kissed land, the wonderfully heavily carved temples, in and out-of-door scenes in Peking and street scenes and festivities with their attendant ceremonies make the feature resplendent.

"HEARTSICK AT SEA."

L-Ko Komedy.

With Dan Russell as Mr. Dinty Doozleberry, supported by Katherine Griffith, Wm. Irving, E. Liserani and Vin Moore.

Mr. Dinty Doozleberry gets a letter from his uncle which informs him that he has left him $2.60, and so he starts to Hong Kong, China, to collect. A man and his wife are on the boat which Mr. Dinty Doozleberry adroitly takes passage on and trouble starts when he tries to serve them soup. Of course, he's put in the kitchen when he can't pay his fare. The chase after Mr. Dinty Doozleberry finally is staged on an aeroplane and some mighty good pictures and very funny situations are the result.

"HOMELESS."

With Matt Moore and Jane Gail.

Laemmle Drama.

A beautiful pet dog, the greatest treasure of his mistress, while out riding one day in his mistress' automobile, is suddenly attracted by the sight of a cat. He jumps from the auto to chase the feline. During the pursuit the collie is lost and tormented by two small boys, who tie a tin can to his tail and chase him, keeping him running for all he is worth. Later he is rescued by a ragged boy, whose home is any place in which he can lay his head. Upon restoring the dog to his mistress the boy is rewarded by a good home and good opportunities.

KING BAGGOT REVISES "ABSINTHE."

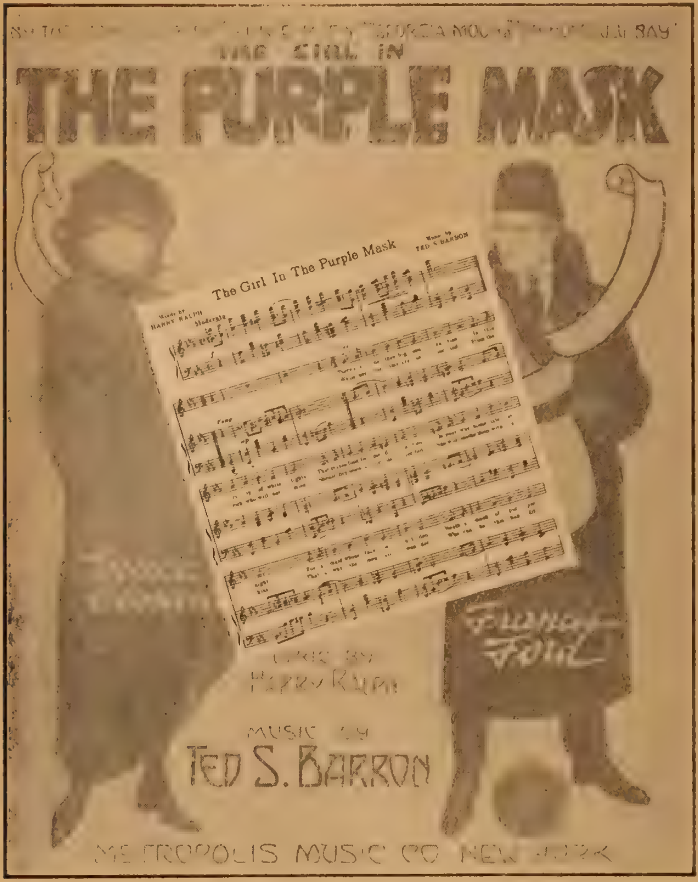
KING BAGGOT, who recently purchased the negatives of "Absinthe" in which he starred, and for which he is now selling the State Rights, gave an interesting explanation of his revising that great photoplay. He said that from his extensive traveling over the country he had come to the conclusion that the exhibitors and the public were tired of the white slave and sex pictures and would appreciate a photoplay that would get away from those subjects. He had in mind the picture "Absinthe" which touched such a responsive chord a few years back, and strove to duplicate or surpass the success attained by it. After several months of work, he decided the only thing to do would be to reissue "Absinthe." He then purchased the negatives from the Universal Film Company and commenced his work of reconstruction. Many scenes which were not essential were deleted while many forceful new ones were added. New titles were added as were many scenes of actual fighting taken in Europe. "Absinthe' in its new form is doubly gripping and forceful. The state rights are selling rapidly.

"UP THE FLUE."

L-Ko Komedy.

Mr. Shoestring was a burglar, and he made a sad mistake when he robbed a lady of her jewelry and presented it to her daughter.

When the lady recognized the donor and linked him with other "affairs," a series of incidents furnish lots of fun until the police arrive.



Front cover of new song.

PURPLE MASK INSPIRES ANOTHER SERIAL SONG

TED BARRON, popular young song writer, responsible for innumerable hits, including "Liberty," "On Honolulu Bay," "Lull Me to Sleep," and other "best sellers," has just completed a new and rollicking number, "The Girl in the Purple Mask," inspired by the smashing Ford-Cunard Universal serial of love and mystery, "The Purple Mask."

Clever lyrics by Harry Ralph and autographed cover portraits of Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, all done in purple, add to the attractiveness of this song number, every bar of which contains a "kick."

"There's another sensation in this city of white lights,
That makes food for meditation, on your way home late at night,
For a maid, whose face is hidden, 'neath a mask of purple hue
May, at any time unbidden, flash a gun and claim her due.

Chorus:
It's the girl in the purple mask,
Who set for herself the task
Of relieving men of all or a part
Of their ready cash, along with their heart."

Mr. Barron will be remembered as the composer of "Liberty," which was adopted by the "Liberty" Universal serial, as its official song. It was sung recently at the dinner in the Waldorf-Astoria tendered President Wilson, in honor of the illumination of the Statue of Liberty.

Episodes of "The Purple Mask," claiming admirers in every spot of the globe, inspired the song's composition by Barron, who wrote it in less than ten hours actual working time.

In addition to its merit as a composition, the song has unique advantages for exhibitors who are running "The Purple Mask" serial. The various clever plans for using the song may be obtained from any Universal exchange and copies may be secured there.

Referring to #101

Gentlemen;-

In answer to yours of Nov 29th. Will say that the present owners are not familiar with the vaudeville acts you put into pictures. If you think they will go, we are with you. We are using the Entire Universal Program and are satisfied with it and so are our patrons. However a change once in a while tends to help things along. Keep up your good work on the Bluebirds and Red Feathers. Look to us like the best in the market.

In answer to your letter of recent date asking us if we cared to book your new serial "The Purple Mask" Yes, Couldn't get along without it. The Kids are already asking when we start it. By the way — it is now 8.10 PM we have shown to 807 Kids to date first day of Liberty #15. How do you like that? If the "Purple Mask" can beat "Liberty" I'm going to put "We show the 'Purple Mask'" on our letter heads. You will note we've got all the good ones there.

We want to Book the "Mask" on Thursday and Friday same as Liberty. Can we get the first Episode on the same day that we show the Last of "Liberty"? Heres success to Cunard & Ford the best drawing card, bar none.

Sincerely yours
The Oracle Theatre

"THE BUBBLE of LOVE"

TWO-REEL Society Drama, written by E. M. Ingleton and produced by Douglas Gerrard. The story of a young man who overlooked the jewel of love until it was almost too late.

"THE BUBBLE OF LOVE," a two-reel Rex Society Drama, is the latest work from the producing hand of Douglas Gerrard. The story was written by E. Magnus Ingleton, prominent scenario editress at Universal City, and the scenario adaptation was made by Alice Von Saxmar. A strong cast supports Mr. Gerrard in the leading role, that of Jack Armstrong, a young man whose fancy and purse have been alike at the mercy of a heartless adventuress, while all the time at his very side the real love which was to broaden his life lay virtually hidden in the little ward whom he had saved from an accident. The story of the photoplay is as follows:

At one time, Jack Armstrong was very wealthy, but riotous living had left him almost penniless. He is very much in love with Daphne, a light, frivolous woman who appreciates a man for what he can give her—but to him she does not appear in this role.

CAST.

Violet	Ruth Clifford
Jack	Douglas Gerrard
Burton	Willard Wayne
Daphne	Betty Schade
Mrs. Seton	Nanine Wright

With his fortune gone, Jack writes her a note telling of his loss and also his love; asking if her love for him is great and big enough to help him start over again. He gives a last party to his friends at which time she is to give him her answer.

But, true to her nature, when Daphne discovers his change in fortune, she immediately transfers her affections to one, Burton Musgrove, who has made a clean up on the stock market. Daphne and Burton come to the party and arrive just in time to see Jack talking to Violet, "the mouse," an orphan girl whom he is educating. When later he attempts to explain about her, his friends only scoff at his story.

Daphne gives him her answer—she is to marry Burton Musgrove. Jack now feels that life is no longer worth living. Violet, whom he regards as a child, is in reality a woman and loves Jack. She divines that something is wrong and does not allow herself to be very far away from him—and well for him it is that she keeps this watchful eye upon him.

Jack arranges all his plans, but just as he is ready to drain a glass of poison, Violet dashes it from his hand and so saves his life. For the first time, he sees her as she is—a grown woman and realizes the love for him that she has in her heart.

UNIVERSAL CAMERAMAN ARRESTED AT TIA JUANA.

B F. REYNOLDS, of the staff of the Universal Animated Weekly cameramen, was arrested at Tia Juana this week. Reynolds had been assigned to cover for the news pictorial some special events at the San Diego Exposition, and the following morning took a run over to Tia Juana in his automobile to obtain a little racing film. No sooner had Reynolds started to "set up" his camera than a Mexican policeman came along and took him into custody. "Take me to the American consul," said the cinematographer to the officer, "I'll give you $2."

The sight of the money caused the Mexican to open wide his sleepy eyes and instead of taking the cameraman to jail led he led him before Uncle Sam's representative, who sent the policeman back to the track and Reynolds back to San Diego—minus his $2. "It was worth it to keep out of the Mexican jail," remarked the news photographer when he told of the incident to his friends at U City.

PUTTING IT OVER

A PAGE OF PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

DID you read what the regular stunt Editor said to you last week? Not the one who is writing this, but the real one, who hands you those clever stunts in every issue.

It told you that these stunts are selected for the man who can't advertise in newspapers. It told you that we try to get stunts that the man in the neighborhood theatre can use. It told you that we strive to please—all, but that we really sympathize with the man who couldn't attract people into his theatre with a circus procession, because he is on a side street, or in too large a town, or because of any one of a dozen reasons that you can easily imagine.

Now you know where our heart is. It's with the man who is anxious to make money running a moving picture house; who realizes that with the Universal Program money can be made in a moving picture house, but that sometimes there are handicaps that can be overcome if they are recognized and common-sense methods are employed to rause mit' em.

IN OTHER WORDS—TRY THESE STUNTS EVERY WEEK.

THE Red Feather for January 22d is entitled "Heart Strings," and was produced by Allan Holubar, the young actor-director, who has been giving us so many good things of late. This is the story of a little waif, who nestled her way into the heart of a bachelor doctor, and won him completely. The title suggests two ways of advertising the picture. One is for a street stunt. Have a well-dressed man with a big red heart pinned on the outside of his coat, walk through the streets, preceded by a little girl. From the heart on his breast there should be numerous strings, which she holds in her hand, so that she seems to lead him by them. If your theatre is so situated that a lobby display is more effective, then have a huge red heart suspended from the ceiling. From it have numerous strings, which should go to a picture of a little girl on one side, and to one of the doctor on the other. You can use posters, or have cut-outs made, just as you prefer.

THE Victor for January 25th is called "Black Evidence," and in it a crime is committed in a way that is really new. The clue in the case, is the trace which is left by the ink on a typewriter ribbon. From this the clever detective unravels the mystery. Here is an idea for putting this over. Have some posters made with "Black Evidence" on bold letters on them, and put them in widely separated places around the town, on a telegraph pole, on a barrel, on a fence. Between these posters have the sidewalks marked every little way with a big black spot. A man can do this for you, with some very liquid black paint or ink, if he lets a big brushfull fall from the height of his shoulder to the pavement. All the traces lead eventually to your theatre, of course, where a big announcement is awaiting the curious.

PERHAPS you would rather play up the Victor comedy for that day, especially if yours is a regular baseball town. It is called "The Black Nine," and is about how a ball-player saved himself from cannibals by pitching cocoanuts at them with the skill of an Alexander. A big colored man in a mixed costume, partly that of a ball-player and partly that of an inhabitant of the cannibal islands—with a grass skirt, for instance—would certainly cause some excitement.

ON Saturday, January 27th, there is a Laemmle drama called "The Blood-Stained Hand." Big blood-red hands, stenciled in prominent positions, on walks, fences, or barrels, with announcements under them, which tell just enough but not too much, would draw attention to the picture.

ON Sunday, January 28th, there is a fine Rex drama called "The Old Toymaker." It is about an old Dutchman, who comes to this country to make his fortune. His wife and child are lost at sea, and he makes a doll, which with the passing years comes to take the place of his baby in his mind. A good way to announce this would be to dress a little girl in the costume of a Dutch child—long, full skirts, with a bright-colored apron, wooden shoes and a winged white cap—and have her stand on a pedestal in the lobby, as if she were a doll. Have a man dressed to represent the toymaker, with a skull cap, long white hair, spectacles, and a big working apron on, wind up the little girl and show her off as if she were a mechanical doll. Every little while, when she needs a rest, he can carry her inside, and bring her out again when a crowd has collected.

PREPAREDNESS.

UNIVERSAL CITY was visited by a severe wind and rain storm the day before Christmas, the wind blowing at the rate of fifty miles an hour and the rain coming down in torrents all day.

Technical Director Barter, who watches the weather conditions closely, had anticipated the storm and had a large crew of men ready to take care of the important sets and properties on the various stages and in the field. This precaution saved the company from considerable loss. The wind played havoc with several of the lighter sets and tore a few of the diffusers to shreds. The damage was slight.

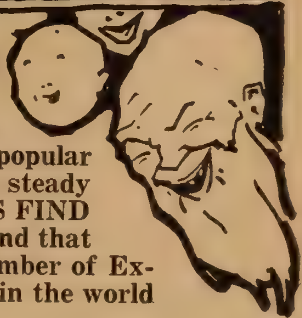
UNIVERSAL COMEDIES



In a Class By Themselves

We don't have to ask you, Mr. Exhibitor (no offense, please), whether Universal Comedies are growing in popular favor or not. When the number of prints required shows a steady increase, that means only one thing—EXHIBITORS FIND THAT UNIVERSAL COMEDIES ARE POPULAR, and that they are being booked by a constantly increasing number of Exhibitors, because THEY ARE POPULAR. Nowhere in the world will you find Comedies that compare with Universal

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"Love Aflame." With Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Mulhall. Fifty-third Red Feather Production. Directed by Raymond Wells. Released January 29. My Gosh, but this picture was well named. Love Aflame! Well, I should say so. And a volcano bursts into flame, whether from the fires of love or not, Mr. Wells fails to tell us. But, if you can imagine a far-off country, where every time the volcano gets busy it's the sign of an election for a new chief; and a bunch of guys who make a bet that Jack can't make the trip there by a certain date; if you can imagine his taking side-door Pullmans, stowing away on tramp steamers, and finding at the end of his journey that the nice boy who has travelled with him is none other than Ruth, yep, Ruth—well, maybe you'd better see the picture after all. It's there forty ways. It has action, and peppy action at that; a bully story, two handsome and popular stars, and the variety and lavishness of sets and scenes that make it absorbingly interesting.

"June Madness." Three-reel Gold Seal Romantic Drama. With Roy Stewart and Wadsworth Harris. Directed by Hobart Henley. Released January 30. When Roy got to his office that June morning all the world seemed making love. One of his clerks and the stenographer; across the court another couple; the elevator starter and the girl at the cigar counter; while in the restaurant every table seemed occupied by young people whose "idle fancy lightly turned to thoughts of love." Now Roy was a woman-hater (I never saw one, did you?), and he was disgusted. So he left town to look at some mining properties, and there was held up a woman bandit. Oh, indeed, yes. When Roy discovers himself in love, and that the ring the bandit-ess took from him is on the finger of the only girl—figure it out for yourself. It takes three full reels to tell it properly, and it is your duty to book them and see the finish. All the old young folks and the young old folks will go crazy about this picture.

"Faking Fakirs." Two-reel L-KO Just for Fun. With Phil Dunham to make sure. Released January 31. There's one thing the L-KO bunch can't do. They can't fake their fun. They simply have to give you the simon-pure lawfter powders; they don't even try to get a laff on the strength of their reputation; they don't depend on custard pies—on the face, or off—NO! They just hand out original stunts, dangerous, foolish, clever—57 varieties—and there's a demand for more prints every week. Are you wise?

"The Forbidden Game." With Edward Hearn. Two-reel Imp Underworld Drama. Released February 2. It's mighty convincing in the picture with a nice clean-cut chap like Ed going out after the midnight dough with a bunch of crooks "just for the excitement." Unfortunately for Ed, the gang is cornered and one of them against orders pulls a gun. Still more unfortunate, it is fired, and a well known citizen the next morning was reported "Shot by Burglars." Ed's brother, a reporter, is assigned to the case, and under the pretext of a slumming expedition, takes his sister and some friends to the gang's hangout. "Then the fun begins." Of all the screen fights you have ever seen, hand this one the loving cup. Book this and you yourself, as well as your patrons, will be on the edge of your seats watching the big climax.

SUBSEA FILM LIMIT OF THE MARVELOUS

Cinemasterpiece, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," at the Broadway, Shows How Man Is Fast Encroaching on the Realms of Nature.

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY

THE limit of the marvelous' Such, in brief is my estimate of '20 000 Leagues Under the Sea the cinemasterpiece that is now attracting the public attention at the Broadway Theatre

Jules Verne was the possessor of one of the most amazing imaginations ever known and but little inferior to the imagination of the distinguished Frenchman is that of Mr Stuart Paton who from Verne's famous novel, produced the wonderful combination of pictures I saw last night at the Broadway Theatre

The eight reels are full of such thrills as are to be found nowhere else I say this deliberately There is no end to thrills they are as thick as leaves in the Summer forest But there are thrills and thrills—thrills that affect the nerves mainly and thrills that reach and electrify the mind

It is the latter sort of excitement that abounds in 20 000 Leagues Under the Sea —the excitement of the Man within the Man the Man who thinks and peers into the mysteries of things and wonders at the miracles he runs across

NO TIME FOR WHOOPS.

In looking at the pictures in 20 000 Leagues Under the Sea one does not feel like raising the war whoop and scalping all creation and the rest of mankind he is just interested —deeply absorbingly

BOADWAY THEATRE.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company's eight-part feature photo drama, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" is smashing all "movie box office records at the Broadway Theatre where it will begin the third week of its run to-day

The thrilling and amazing scenes photographed at the bottom of the ocean add sufficient story to satisfy the masses of photo-play "fans" Then too there is an unusual quantity of scientific knowledge to be derived from the picture The mysteries of the sea are to a large extent graphically displayed and in such a manner as appeals to old and [illegible] alike. Then there is love interest when the "Child of Nature" is discovered on the "Mys- terious Island" by Lieutenant Bond, and the two are finally rescued by Captain Nemo who learns that she is his daughter the Princess Illa, who was abducted several years before, and for which abduction Nemo is partly driven to seek that revenge which supplied the basis for Jules Verne's story.

The full story of how he came to leave his princely home in the Orient to become the commander of the terrible undersea craft is not to be told here. The cold type can not do it justice. It has to be seen in photo-drama itself in order to be properly appreciated.

Speaking of THRILLS those who have seen the picture can never forget the one that came to them the sinking of Denver's yacht by Nautilus—Denver the scoundrel se violation of the code of honor nsformed the courteous and kind ted East Indian Prince into the ptain Nemo of the Monster the Sea

VALUABLE AS EDUCATOR

Taken all in all 20,000 Leagues nder the Sea the first and only submarine photo-drama bids fair to become if I may be allowed the expression a "howling success."

In its line it has no competitor n the strictest sense of the word is unique having no fellow any here.

Last but by no means least comes the fact that the picture is immensely valuable as an educator.

When Jules Verne wrote the novel from which the picture is produced all the world wondered at the author's brilliant and versatile fancy "Great snakes" everybody cried out "That fellow is crazy. Brilliant as he is in his imagination he is as mad as a March hare."

But fifty years after Jules Verne's book was given to the world we see its predictions more than fulfilled. The wild fancy of the brilliant Frenchman has become everyday reality a reality so familiar that all of us have ceased to wonder.

In looking at "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" the spectator is led to ask himself the question "Is there any limit to man's inventive genius, any end to the achievements of his God-like brain? Will not man go on from triumph to triumph until he has Nature completely under his control? Until the w M cle' shall have been eliminated from the vocabulary on the ground that everything will have become miraculous?"

EVENING WORLD,

JULES VERNE DRAMA DRAWS BIG THRONGS

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company's eight part feature photo-drama, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," is making records at the Broadway Theatre, where it will begin the third week of its run to-day. The thrilling scenes photographed at the bottom of the ocean have attracted much attention. Then, too, there is an unusual quantity of scientific knowledge to be derived from the picture.

The mysteries of the sea are to a large extent graphically displayed. Fishes of many sort are seen in their native waters, while men walk upon the ocean's bed and engage in combat with tigers of the deep.

Capt. Nemo, the hero of Verne's imaginative tale, is shown in many adventures aboard his submarine, the Nautilus. His rescue of a pearl diver who becomes ensnared in the tentacles of a giant octopus is one of the big scenes in this spectacle. There is a strong love interest when the "Child of Nature" is discovered on the "Mysterious Island" by Lieut. Bond, and the two are finally rescued by Capt. Nemo, who learns that she is his daughter, the Princess Illia, who was abducted several years before and for which abduction Nemo is partly driven to seek that revenge which supplied the basis for Jules Verne's story.

NOW SELLING

In response to the advertisements published in the Motion Picture News, Moving Picture World, and other Film Trade publications last week we have been swamped with inquiries and communications on State Rights on "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA."

Two of the biggest State Rights Buyers in America, who made a special flying trip to New York to buy this production were given evidence extraordinary (without any talk) by simply viewing the jamming, cramming throngs, three times daily, fighting their way into the Broadway Theatre where this production is now playing. Already the following states have been sold: S. Carolina—Georgia—Alabama — Mississippi — Tennessee — Arkansas — Florida — Texas — Louisiana — Maine — New Hampshire—Vermont—Massachusetts—Rhode Island and Connecticut—Illinois—Wisconsin—Minnesota—North and South Dakota—Montana—and arrangements pending for other territory.

Now Playing to S. R. O. at the Broadway, N. Y. C.

If every State Rights Buyer could but see the surging mass of humanity three times daily—2:15—4:30 and 8:15 P. M. daily at the Broadway Theatre, cramming and jamming their way in to see this remarkable film drama, there wouldn't be a State open for sale in five minutes after viewing this sight. Every house record at the Broadway has been smashed in point of attendance and receipts. For the weeks of December 25th to 31st and 1st to 7th the Broadway took in over $21,000 in cash, and a stream of cash has been and is NOW pouring into the Box Office of the Broadway daily. THAT'S THE ANSWER, MR. STATE RIGHTS BUYER. Ask for a copy of the elaborate Ad Campaign book that tells you HOW to get the big money in ANY city or town like it was gotten in Chicago and New York. Time for the

(No. 160. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

In the January 6 issue of the Moving Picture World M. F. H. Richardson has an article entitled "An Unfair Condition" which ought to be read and digested and ACTED UPON by every exhibitor who cares a rap about the future of the moving picture business. The Moving Picture World has given us permission to reproduce the article and you will find it elsewhere in this issue. (Page 37)

There are two paragraphs which you ought to cut out and paste in your hat. Here is the first:

> "The matter of salaries paid by the producers would not be of interest to the moving picture world if these salaries were really paid by the producers, but when we come to analyze the situation it is found that this is not the fact. True, the producer makes the contract and pays the actual money, but in effect he merely advances that sum, later collecting it from the film exchange, which in turn collects it from THE EXHIBITOR, WHO IS THE REAL GOAT."

Mind you, this refers to the ridiculously high salaries which have become so common in the picture business, especially among the new concerns which are said to be more interested in selling pretty stock certificates than in making pictures. The second paragraph is as follows:

> "The exhibitor has it in his own hands to remedy this condition by refusing to pay exorbitant film rental fees WHICH HE KNOWS ARE VERY LARGELY BASED ON UNREASONABLE SALARIES PAID TO ACTORS."

As far as I know, the Universal is about the only company which has never been stampeded into GIVING AWAY THE EXHIBITORS' MONEY FOOLISHLY! I do not deny that we have been tempted, especially when we have seen so many exhibitors eagerly throwing money to the four winds.

Goat to Butt

Exorbitant salaries are responsible for a great deal of the serious damage that has come to the picture business during the past year or two. They are responsible for the rotten five-reel features that have flooded the market and made hundreds of thousands of erstwhile fans sick of the movies. And every dollar of this waste comes out of the pockets of the exhibitors—THE ULTIMATE GOATS!

The Universal has had some bitter experiences with actors. A vast majority of the present "stars" had their training with the Universal. After we had given them their opportunity to become great, other companies offered them fabulous salaries to quit us. We could have held them by paying them exorbitant salaries, but we knew only too well that it would boost the cost of production sky high and that we would have to make you pay the freight! This in time would ruin you and leave us without customers.

Every move the Universal has made has been based on the future of the business, BECAUSE THE UNIVERSAL IS IN BUSINESS TO STAY, NOT TO UNLOAD A PILE OF STOCK ON THE PUBLIC AND SILENTLY FADE AWAY!

Our motives have been selfish, but of the sort of selfishness that is best for the exhibitors who hope to continue making profits instead of losses!

Read Mr. Richardson's article from beginning to end and then use the brains God gave us!

If you decide you are the goat as he says, remember that a goat has a butting apparatus. If you're too tired to use your brains, use your butter!

"SOULS UNITED"

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, starring Violet Mersereau. Written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Francis Grandon. Miss Mersereau has the role of an explorer's daughter brought up in the wilds of Africa.

CAST.

Marcia Randall	Violet Mersereau
John Randall	Fred Hearn
Burton Stanley	Harry Benham
Mrs. Stanley	Yolande Duquette

THIS is a story which alternates between London and the wilds of Africa. It was written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Francis Grandon, and serves Violet Mersereau as a good medium for the display of her gift of portraying alternate pathos and charm. A very appealing picture she makes in the trying costume which the exigencies of the script force her to wear. This is nothing more nor less than a sack, out of which she fashions for herself a garment as primitive as it is becoming. Not many leading ladies are young enough to look delightfully pretty in a sack. It is really quite a sartorial triumph.

Marcia, in the play, prefers this primitive costume to the ragged shirt and trousers which is all that is offered to her in the way of choice. This is another example of the eternal feminine—even a sackcloth petticoat is preferable to masculine attire, to the mind of a real woman.

The story is rather sad, but the ending is the only logical one, and it gives Miss Mersereau a splendid opportunity to show her powers as an emotional actress. She has one of those parts which she declares herself that she prefers. Marcia's character develops under the molding of destiny, from that of a playful, careless child to a woman who has to cope with an emotional situation. This change Miss Mersereau handles in an expert way. The picture was made some little time ago, and as Miss Mersereau has since become exclusively a Bluebird star, "Soul's United" offers a rare opportunity to see her on the Universal program. The story of the picture follows:

Burton Stanley, a noted London physician, returns from a long trip and finds his wife interested in another man. An expedition is about to depart for the West Coast of Africa to fight the sleeping sickness, thought thought to be caused by the tsetse fly. Stanley determines to join the expedition.

Dying of the illness is John Randall, an ivory trader, who, unable to remain in England after the death of his beloved wife, has taken his child, Marcia, and gone to Africa. A beautiful girl, she has grown up rather like a child of nature. She meets Stanley, after his entire party has deserted him, after learning that they are in to be caused by the tsetse fly. Stanley determines to join the expedition. the land of the sleeping sickness. Its symptons develop in an irresistable desire for sleep in the victim, and Marcia, feeling that her father has contracted it, rushes madly for aid. Stanley tells her he is a doctor, and together they seek the ivory trader. But he has succumbed.

Grief stricken, Stanley comforts the girl and a strong friendship develops between them which suddenly ripens into love. Intending to remain only a few weeks or months in the tropics, Stanley's stay covers a longer period, he teaching the girl the tricks of civilization and revelling in her innocent charm. Finally a letter arrives from his wife. She has regretted her folly in being temporarily interested in another man, and begs her husband to return to her. He tells Marcia the truth but promises her he will not go.

A young friend, Cecil Balfour, on a hunting expedition, arrives in Africa, and sees Marcia in Stanley's arms. He prevails upon the latter to go home, and he gives his promise to do so, telling Marcia he is going for new supplies and aid to fight the dread sickness. Thinking that he is going into the interior and attempting to prevent his departure, she empties his medicine chest, with preventatives in fighting the disease, into the ocean.

As Stanley prepares to leave, he becomes dizzy and knows that he has the disease. His medicine chest is missed and Marcia brings him the medicine he gave her father.

Meanwhile, the natives are in rebellion against the white doctor, declaring that he has put upon the village the "bad spell." So they repair to his hut to capture him. Marcia defends him until she is shot. Wounded, she tumbles to his bed, falling over his dead body.

Mrs. Stanley, arriving in Africa, is led to the single grave where, buried together, their souls have been united.

CAREY GIVES ACTRESS THRILL.

HARRY CAREY, featured western actor at Universal City, who is working under the direction of Fred Kelsey, has been assigned a new leading woman, Claire Du Brey, who for several months has been working in dramatic productions at the film capital. The young actress has been given some thrills by the well-known westerner and he is pleased with her grit.

In one of the scenes of his current production, "Their Hold-up," Miss Du Brey has to ride a horse down a mountain-side incline of forty degress. Carey appears next on the program in the Bison, "The Outlaw and the Lady."

How Would You Like to be The Cameraman?

Cameraman Bill Ganz.

DID you ever stop to think, when you were witnessing those explosions and fires and wrecks and hair-raising accidents of all kinds in the Animated Weekly, of the man who got the records of them for your edification? Of the risks he ran, the smoke he had to swallow, the cold he had to endure, the hours he had to wait without food or shelter, and all so that you might see pictures of the exciting and dangerous things which happen, every so often, in this big country? On Friday, January 12th, the great disaster in the munitions plant at Kingsland, New Jersey, happened in the afternoon, and the Animated Weekly had a picture record of it, ready for projection, at nine o'clock that night. This is how it was done, and Cameraman William Ganz, who did it, tells the story.

"I was up in the Animated room talking to Hy Mayer, when Jack Cohn says, 'There's a big fire over in Jersey; you'd better go over.' So I took my camera and hired a taxi and went over the Forty-second Street ferry. I saw where the crowd was going and followed them, until my driver would not go any further. He said it was a munition plant exploding, and that he wasn't raised to be a soldier. I wasn't either, but I got out of the taxi and went on as close as I could get to where the flames were spurting up into the sky. It was pretty exciting. Huge shells were exploding and some of them fell all around me. I set up my camera, and the bullets struck the very standards. They were not one-inch shells, such as caused such destruction at Black Tom—they were huge three-inch affairs, and the only difference between them and the ones that they use at the front was that the time fuses had not been screwed into their noses. But they would kill you just as nicely without a time fuse as with one.

"It was getting dark, and that's how I managed to get by the guards. Some of them yelled at me, but I went the other way. I picked up some of the unexploded shells, and some of the bits of those which did go off, for souvenirs." (One of them is reposing this minute on the desk of the editor.)

"No, I did not mind being 'under fire' much. I was getting some dandy 'stuff.' But what I did mind was the cold. It was awful! I left in such a hurry that I didn't have any gloves, and only B. V. D.'s, and I'm not a movie actor— only a cameraman—so I haven't any fur collar on my overcoat. I got the pictures and hurried back, and we had them ready to run at nine that night. Jack said I'd better go back in the morning and get some shots of the ruins. So I went and everything was knocked to pieces, hardly a house standing, the whole place in ruins. There were lots of guards now that it was light, and they all yelled at me to stop. I ran, but they caught me, and they were going to keep me under arrest and take my camera, but I chopped wood for them and made a dandy fire, and after a while they let me go."

The explosion at the Du Pont powder Works at Haskell, New Jersey, fired the Animated Weekly with a desire to score another beat. Cameramen Whipple and Gold were in an automobile speeding toward the scene ten minutes after it happened. But they were unable to get any record, as the explosion, being merely a powder explosion, left no fire behind it, and it would have taken a Mackensen or a Hindenburg to have plowed through the barbed-wire entanglements with which the plant at Haskell is surrounded.

CALIFORNIANS seldom have a chance to buckle on the skates and when they do—good-night! You'll see just how adroit they are in Animated Weekly No. 55.

"HEART STRINGS"

A RED FEATHER Photoplay, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, adapted for the screen by Fred Myton and produced by Allan Holubar. The tale of a little waif who nestles her way into the heart of a bachelor doctor and makes him her own.

THIS is the first five-reel photoplay which has been produced by the young actor-director Allan Holubar, who has been doing such fine things in both capacities lately. It is safe to predict that it will not be his last. The story is one of those tales of every day life which is best described by the words "heart-interest." From the beginning, which shows Jo as a child, to the end in which she takes her rightful place as queen of the doctor's heart, we follow her history with breathless interest, and alternate smiles and tears. Nor is the darker element wanting in the picture. The character of the unscrupulous Leonie, who ensnares her victims only to ruin them, furnishes the contrast of shadow to the sunshiny theme of the doctor and his little protegee.

Mr. Holubar has produced the picture with the greatest care. His sets are realistic and lavish alternately. The reproduction at the head of the page shows what a fine interior he used as the home of the doctor. Jo's bedroom, the garden, and other scenes are as well staged as this. Virginia Corbin—all of five years old—makes a most attractive little waif in the first part of the picture, while Francelia Billington is distractingly pretty as Jo, grown up. Mr. Holubar himself gives a convincing and carefully studied portrayal of the doctor, who is ready to resign his treasure to other hands, but only if they are worthy of it. The story in brief is as follows:

Dr. John McClean	Allan Holubar

John McClean is a hard-working doctor, who has worked all his young life to gain comfort for his mother in her old age. Unfortunately, just as fortune begins to smile on him, his mother dies, and so at the age of thirty, he is left a successful but a lonely man, waited on by a kind old housekeeper and with just one friend, a little brown mouse, which he has tamed.

The doctor sees the wedding gown.

One night he attends the death-bed of a poor musician, who leaves a little girl of eight, penniless. John has shown kindness to the child and on the night of the funeral she appears at his door, saying that she has come to be his housekeeper.

He tries to explain the impossibility to her, but finding her starving and ill-treated, with nothing before her but the workhouse, he begins to weaken, and when the child goes to sleep in his arms, he determines to adopt her. Her only rival in John's affections is the little brown mouse, whose name she steals.

Ten years later we meet them again. John's success has continued, and he has become quite wealthy. His adopted daughter (christened Johanna, but called Jo for short), has become engaged to Gerald, a handsome acquaintance of the doctor's. When John's consent is asked he unselfishly hides his deep love for Jo, but questions Gerald about his past, knowing that he has recently had a love affair with a widow of doubtful reputation. Gerald assures him that all that is done with, but the re-appearance of the widow and the quickness with which she re-establishes her power over Gerald, soon puts a different light on the matter. When Gerald remains away from the doctor's, and offers no explanation, for two or three days, John, entirely on Jo's account, goes to the house of Leonie (the widow), to learn the real truth. He discovers her on the eve of departure with Gerald, who, though ashamed, cannot withstand the spell of his enchantress. She defies the doctor and laughs openly at his solicitude for the innocent Jo. After a strong scene, John leaves them and then the preparations for departure continue, although Gerald is much shaken by the unconcealed contempt of his old friend John.

Amongst Jo's friends, is a poor girl called Sue, whom she and the doctor have befriended. She was about to be married to a bank clerk, when he became attracted to a young widow (one of the depositors at the bank). By degrees he neglected Sue, and the matter ended in his serving a term of imprisonment for theft, at the instigation of the woman.

At the time of Jo's trouble, Sue's sweetheart has been released, and he comes back to her husband a crushed and broken man.

Sue recognizes in Leonie (the widow who has fascinated Gerald), the same woman who ruined her sweetheart. She takes him to her house and forcing an entrance, exposes the woman to Gerald. Leonie tries to deny her guilt, but proofs are too strong. Left alone, she determines to be revenged. John's words are fixed on her memory, "Jo does not know that such women as you exist." She sends for Jo, who comes in answer to a telephone call that seems to come from Gerald.

Leonie is about to open her eyes to the horrible side of life when she discovers that Jo is her own child, deserted by her years ago, when she left the poor musician whom she had married. She sends Jo home without a word. Next day she goes to John, telling him the truth and demanding the girl.

Jo is busy with preparations for her trousseau.

Leonie receives Gerald.

After a strong scene between the two, her better nature conquers, and she leaves forever, without disclosing the truth to Jo. Meanwhile, Jo discovers that John loves her, and she realizes that the love of such a man is worth twenty times more than that of the weak, vacillating Gerald.

MONG DIRECTS JEFFERSON.

"THE CASE OF SIMON DUDSBURY" is the title of a three-act drama being directed at Universal City by William V. Mong and featuring Thomas Jefferson. It originally had been intended that Mong would play the leading role himself, but a boil of large proportions appeared on the back of his neck, causing both inconvenience and pain. Consequently, another had to play the role and Jefferson was selected.

UNIVERSAL'S "ROBINSON CRUSOE"

ROBINSON CRUSOE" on the regular program as a special for the week of February 12! Gee, that Universal Program is getting generous. A Big State Rights feature to every Universal exhibitor. "Robinson Crusoe" is a three-reel masterpiece production based on De Foe's world-famed novel, known to every man, woman and child in the civilized world. With the exception of Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which the Universal has been enabled, through the Williamson's invention, to film as it originally was written, the Robinson Crusoe novel is the most famous in the English language. Exhibitors will make a tremendous drive with this remarkable three-reel classic.

LEAVE NOTHING FOR IT TO FEED ON, AND NO FIRE CAN EVEN GET UNDER WAY. GOOD HOUSEKEEPING WHEREVER FILM IS USED IS YOUR BEST INSURANCE.

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., is distributing a pamphlet to the motion picture industry in order to stimulate an interest in fire prevention and thus effect a cooperation between the industry and governmental authority mutually helpful. Good housekeeping is the basis of industrial as well as domestic happiness in the opinion of the Association, and it is this slogan which they intend to carry, not only to the film manufacturers, but to the exchanges and the exhibitors as well.

The Universal is entirely in accord with this bulletin, and is very glad to give it space in the Moving Picture Weekly. When the huge studio and factory were erected at Leonia, so greatly impressed were the officials with the necessity for prevention of fire that they went to extreme lengths to construct everything in the most approved fashion, and no step was taken without the approval of the Fire Underwriting Boards of New York and New Jersey. The same carefulness has been exercised at Universal City and it is very strongly urged in all of their exchanges. Following is the letter, and in the opposite column will be found ten kinds of fire insurance which won't cost a penny in premiums.

The centre of the folder contains two cuts, one showing a horrible example of a film exchange run in utter disregard of all precaution, and the other showing an exchange run as it should be. The first has unguarded radiators, unprotected electric light globe over the film, wire wrapped around the steam pipe, film scrap and lengths of film on the floor, willow waste basket used, film on the fire extinguisher, waste paper and newspapers on the floor, posters kept in the same room with film, loose film all over the place, and the manager smoking. The other exchange shows an automatic sprinkler system, the radiator and electric lights properly guarded, metal waste cans, the floor free from all scrap, loose film, papers, etc., a minimum amount of film on each table, and all film except that in work being kept in cans, metal furniture used, one and a fourth inch hand-hose and fire extinguisher in proper place ready to be used, and a large "no smoking" sign.

FIRE PREVENTION BULLETIN No. 1

Published under the direction of the Committee on Fire Prevention Regulations and Insurance of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY, INC.

UNITY of ACTION SPELLS SUCCESS

To Producer, Exhibitor and Exchange Members:

You want lower insurance rates.

We believe insurance companies want to give you lower insurance rates.

AND here is the way to get lower insurance rates.

Insurance rates on film and buildings where film is used are regulated by two things: fire losses and the hazardous conditions now common in the industry. The losses will decrease, the confidence of insurance men will increase and rates will drop if you will take immediate steps to invest in the National Association's famous

TEN KINDS OF INSURANCE THAT WON'T COST A CENT OF PREMIUMS.

1—Keep plenty of water handy. (a) In an automatic sprinkler system suitable to your conditions; (b) In convenient buckets; (c) In faucets with an inch and a quarter hose and nozzle attached. (d) Have fire extinguishers, which everybody is shown how to use; (e) Keep sand pails handy. Sand will stop a small film fire quickly and will not damage the stock.

2—Keep film in containers when not actually in use. The time loss in replacing it is nothing. Naked film is the one condition that guarantees that a little fire will get beyond control in a few seconds.

3—Throw film scraps into self-closing metal cans, never into open waste baskets.

4—Keep the cutting rooms, etc., well swept. The tiny pieces of film that fly about make the dust as dangerous as so much gunpowder.

5—Have a professional electrician do all your wiring, in accordance with every city ordinance, no matter how "unreasonable" it seems. Have the light globes caged—a broken globe may make only one spark, but that can ignite $1,000 worth of film. Handle no film by any artificial light but electricity.

6—Box your radiators and steam pipes. The film that touches a hot pipe and crinkles up might just as easily have burst into flame.

7—Enforce the "no smoking" rule. Give the boys a smoking room if they need it, and make the boss and his guests who are looking over the place leave their cigars, cigarettes and pipes outside, as they would if they stepped into a theatre for a glimpse of the picture.

8—Banish the "strike anywhere" match. Furnish boxes of safety matches free, if necessary. But don't have anything that will light except when it is intended to.

9—Keep only enough cement, gasoline and collodion on hand for the day's work. They are highly inflammable, and should be stored where they can do no harm.

10—Appoint one man or woman as fire monitor, and let him know it is all his job is worth to fail to call down the boss, cutter, or the office boy for any carelessness.

THE last chapter left Kelly in a precarious situation with Pat doing her utmost to rescue him. But with serial hero and heroines life is just one rescue after another. If we did not know that they must be saved in order to continue the story, the strain of leaving them, each week, in such a frightful situation might prove too much for the strongest nerves. Episode five gives Pat a chance to continue her depredations, and the chapter closes with the whole party ablaze in a helpless aeroplane. How they got there the following synopsis tells.

Patricia and one of her Apaches work desperately to tear up the floor of the room above the water-tank, over which Kelly is suspended by gripping hands and feet into insecure holds upon the wall. Through the floor Pat calls encouragement to the Sphinx, who is gratified now to find the girl who has tormented him, turning to be his rescuer in his desperate strait. When there has been made a hole large enough to draw Kelly through the floor, a rope is passed down to him and he is rescued.

The action next takes place at a society leader's garden party, where jewels of great value are exposed as temptations to robbers. Kelly is engaged to protect these jewels and Patricia, with her aunt, are invited guests. When Pat learns that the Sphinx has been employed as a special guard for the jewels, she decides that here will be an excellent opportunity to demonstrate again that Kelly is not so adept in his line as his friends think he is. The girl lays her plans in advance.

She has found among the Apaches an aviator, on service in the war, who enters into her plans to steal the jewels. She instructs him to hover over the house and grounds during the garden party and at a signal from Pat to drop bombs. He is then to sail his machine to the hangar and there await developments. Just as Pat had anticipated, the explosion of the bombs creates great excitement at the society function, and when all the guests rush from the house to see what damage may result from the supposed attack, the girl steals the jewels.

When Kelly discovers that his mis-

"The Battle of 'Let's Go'"

L—KO KOMEDY in two reels, directed by Craig Hutchinson and featuring Dan Russell in the role of a border general who is forced to impersonate a female spy.

CAST.

General Debility	Dan Russell
General Concarne	Vin Moore
The Poison Ivy Blossom	Marjorie Ray

EVEN the L-Ko's are becoming "timely." Their latest is a "military drama" staged on the "border"—but the border of what they neglect to state. One side of the line possibly bears a slight resemblance to a comic opera presentation of Mexico, but the other is certainly totally unlike any one of the United States. But what does that matter, when Craig Hutchinson has given Dan Russell and Vin Moore a chance to be funny, Marjorie Ray an opportunity to look fascinatingly Carmenesque, and Dan to wear the garments of a female Falstaff?

Don't expect to be told what it's all about. Dan is the general of one side, and Vin of the other. Somebody warns Dan to look out for female spies, and he passes on the warning to his low-comedy sentries. They walk up and down the dividing line of their respective camps, trying to tickle each other with their bayonets. Then appears the Poison Ivy Blossom. Dan is so fond of flowers, he just can't resist her. Nobody could, for she's all dressed up and no place to go.

"Catch me and you may kiss me!" cries the coy little damsel to the susceptible Dan, and he forgets all about home and country on the spot and follows her over the border. The Blossom was a faithful jade and all she wanted was to decoy the head guy of the other side and lead him into the power of General Concarne, a ferocious personage, with an army whose mustaches were even more formidable than the facial decorations of Dan's own men.

Poor Dan had reason enough to curse the wiles of women, as he saw the elaborate preparations for an exhibition execution, with himself as the piece de resistance. But his fertile brain gave him an idea. Disguise! That's what all the heroes do in such predicaments.

Unfortunately the only disguise available was a female one. Dan looked just too sweet for words, as he lifted his skirt just a trifle, and draped his veil coquettishly over his blushes. Then he minced across the line, secure in the thought that his own mother would not know him.

But alas! His men had been too well trained. "It's the spy!" they yelled, and with one accord they were upon him. No use to protest. The dove of peace had flew the coop, and a battle royal ensued. The last we see of Dan, he is being fired from the muzzle of a huge gun, in the interior of which he has sought a false security.

CAMERAMAN IS FINE CHEF.

HARRY GANT, one of the cinematographers attached to the big staff of Edward Ullman, chief cameraman at Universal City, and who now is filming the photoplays directed by F. A. Kelsey, is a master of the kitchen and his culinary gifts would entitle him to a position as chef in any well-regulated hostlery.

Gant takes a chafing dish outfit with him whenever Director Kelsey's company goes on location and often gives the members of the company a taste of his quality as a cook. He furnished a fine luncheon to Kelsey's star, Harry Carey, and the members of the company, during the making of the Bison picture, "The Outlaw and the Lady."

"Harry, if you don't have a heart and stop making these tempting dishes," said Director Kelsey, "I don't know what I'll do—I've gained eighteen pounds since you came to my company and 240 pounds is more than I care to have accompany me during my peregrinations."

Franey as he is and as he makes up.

FRANEY'S IMPENETRABLE INCOGNITO

By MARJORIE HOWARD

IF you were asked to guess the profession of the nice-looking chap in the oval above, what would you say? Divinity student? Candidate for the ministry? All wrong! It's William Franey, the Joker comedian! You don't believe it? Neither did we, but we have the word of the whole staff of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for it. None the less, it is an awful strain to put upon any one's credulity

To see him on the screen, you would suppose that Franey had been recruited to films from some other phase of theatrical life. When you watch the nonchalant way in which he allows himself to be kicked out of barrooms, thrown downstairs, and tumbled head over heels from swift-moving wagons, or autos, you feel certain that his former profession was that of an acrobat. You gasp at the risks he takes, and say to yourself:

"Oh, well, he's trained to do it. It doesn't hurt those fellows to fall, you know. They are brought up to it, and learn just how to save themselves."

Your theory is all right, but the trouble is that you are all wrong in applying it to Franey. He was not trained to do anything of the kind. When, about two years or so ago, he met Allen Curtis, at that time director of the Jokers, he had had no stage experience of any kind. He was traveling with a Carnival Company, it is true, but in a business, not a professional capacity.

Curtis recognized in Franey good material for pictures, however, and urged him to try them. It took a lot of persuasion, but Franey was finally lured by the thought of a settled home, an outdoor life, and a fifty-two-week salary season, as so many others have been. He followed Curtis to the Joker Company at Universal City, and in less than six months after his arrival, he was one of the mainstays of the company. At present he is its featured player, with Gale Henry, and adding to his popularity as a funmaker with every film produced by Director Beaudine.

Lots of film actors complain that they are "pestered to death" by being recognized in public places whenever they put their noses outside of the studio. Of course, most of them run far greater risk of dying from chagrin if they are not recognized at least once in a while, but that does not sound so well. Franey, however, has no difficulty in maintaining a comfortable incognito. His own associates in the studio world would not know him without his make-up, if they were not accustomed to seeing him put it on and take it off again every day. Look at the other photographs in the group at the head of this page and see if you would ever recognize, from them, the nice-looking, youthful, butter-won't-melt-in-my-mouth sort of a young fellow who appears in the oval. In one of them he is seen with his "friend and partner," Gale Henry, in a forthcoming release, called "Out for the Dough." Doesn't Miss Henry look like a human sea-serpent?

Every one remarks upon the wonderful harmony in the Joker Company, whose members are all good pals.

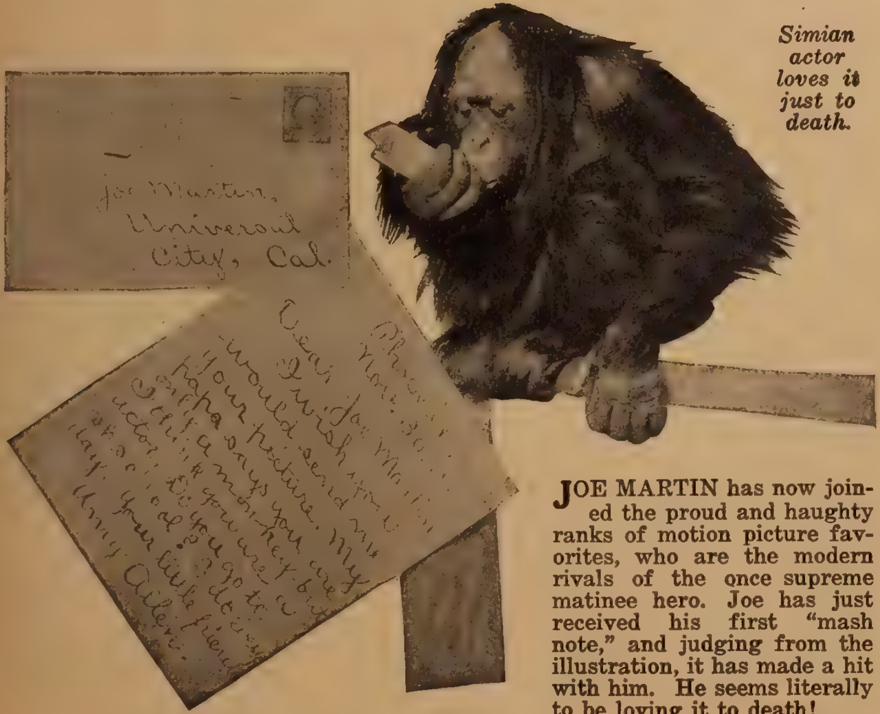
Holubar's Realism Goes Too Far

IN "The War Waif," a Universal Special in two reels, released on next week's program, Allan Holubar, the young actor-director, has taken as his theme a subject which will have the widest appeal. It does not in the least matter what one's sympathies may be in the present European conflict, the story of the tiny refugee who escapes death and finds a home at last will touch the heartstring of pro-Ally and pro-German alike. Zoe Rae is the baby who loses her home and her family in a tragic moment, and then finds a new one with an elderly aristocrat, the loss of whose arm prevents him from actively serving his country.

Holubar played the lead as well as directing the picture, and his make-up as a one-armed, elderly man is masterly. But the scene which will make the deepest impression is that of the wrecking of the peasant house by a shell "Somewhere in France." We see the interior of the cottage where little Zoe lives with her grandmother. Through its latticed windows we see the conflict as it looks to them—innocent non-combatants. Through the window comes suddenly a flying shell. There is a terrific explosion and the grandmother is seen lifeless on the floor.

Director Holubar is a believer in realism, and he wished this scene to be a triumph of actuality, but he succeeded in one particular far beyond his hopes. When the incident was safely filmed, he called to Mother Wright, who played the old woman, to get up, but she remained in the same position. Alarmed, he approached her and found, to his great consternation, that she was really unconscious. The shock of the mimic explosion had been in reality so violent that it had been too much for the elderly woman, and had thrown her literally to the ground. She sustained some painful bruises and a general shake-up which necessitated a trip to the Universal City hospital. She was put under the care of Doctor Mace, who found it advisable for her to remain for two weeks in the institution until she had entirely recovered from the shock. Director Holubar was deeply sorry for her injury, but he consoled her with reports of the wonderful realism of the incident, and she is such a conscientious "movie actress" that the news really made up to her for the suffering she had endured.

Joe Martin's First Mash Note



Joe Martin,

Dear Mr. Joe Martin
I wish you would send me your picture. My papa says you are a [illegible]

[illegible]
Your little friend
Amy Allen.

Simian actor loves it just to death.

JOE MARTIN has now joined the proud and haughty ranks of motion picture favorites, who are the modern rivals of the once supreme matinee hero. Joe has just received his first "mash note," and judging from the illustration, it has made a hit with him. He seems literally to be loving it to death!

The reproduction of the letter which he received from little Amy Allen who lives in Phoenix, Arizona, is so clear that it is unnecessary to repeat it here. His correspondent is sure that Joe is a human in disguise. Knowing that his pedigree is longer than that of any man he resents being mistaken for one of the upstarts.

Joe has appeared in countless photoplays at Universal City and had a very important role in the Blue picture, "Black Orchids," which was produced by Rex Ingram, a little time ago. Joe had to change the position of two goblets, substituting the poisoned one for the harmless, and he performed the action without a slip.

His latest screen appearance was with the Jokers in a comedy which will soon be released. Joe loves to work for the camera and has his special friends among the actors and actresses. He is said to be particularly fond of Miss Claire MacDowell. He is a most accomplished person, understands almost everything that is said to him, can do endless tricks, and perform all sorts of stunts. He eats like a human being, drinks out of a bottle, dresses and undresses himself if need be, rides a velocipede and is learning to drive a car.

"God's Crucible"

George Hernandez as Lorenzo Todd.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, with the Grand Canyon of Arizona for his scenery and George Hernandez as his star, with Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul in support. A crowning triumph for Bluebird Photoplays.

CAST.

Lorenzo Todd	George Hernandez
Warren Todd	Val Paul
Dudley Phillips	Frederick Montague
Virginia Phillips	Myrtle Gonzalez
Oracle Jack	Jack Curtis
Wilkins, the valet	Edward Brady
Nephew	Francis Lee
Stepfather	Harvey Griffith

THIS is a picture of which the officials of Bluebird Photoplays feel very proud for more reasons than one. It was written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, who has already done such fine things for the Bluebird organization, and, in the opinion of all the members of the company who have seen it, he has here created his masterpiece. Seldom does a film production contain so many excellences. There is a delightful story to begin with, there is one of the best actors on the screen in the leading role, there is a strong cast of favorite players, ideally adapted to their roles, last but not least, there is the magnificent Grand Canyon of Arizona as a background, one of the scenic wonders of the world.

Strange as it may seem, this is the first time that the wonderful Canyon has been used in motion pictures. Mr. Reynolds has long wished to produce a play in this glorious setting, and was delighted when the Bluebird Company authorized him to take his company to the wonder spot. They made a long sojourn, exposing many more feet of film than have been used in this picture, for Mr. Reynolds did not forget that "the play's the thing" with Bluebird.

The featured role in this picture is undoubtedly that of the old grouch, Lorenzo Todd, upon whose sensibilities the Grand Canyon works such a miracle. Myrtle Gonzales is nominally star of the Reynolds company, and the director, knowing this, offered to put some one else into her part, when he found that the character of Lorenzo had come, almost without his knowledge, to dominate the play. But Miss Gonzales would not hear of it. She said that she was only too delighted to have the opportunity to support an actor of Mr. Hernandez' great attainments, and that she would willingly play second fiddle for once. There is no doubt of the fact that Mr. Hernandez is ideally fitted to portray the role. Not that he is a grouch by disposition, far from it, but that it gives him a chance for all those delicate shades of meaning, gems of humor, and changes of expression, which make his work so extraordinarily interesting on the screen.

There is no end to the stories that might be written of the experiences of the company in the making of this masterpiece—how the star's only pair of trousers were lost down a deep gully when they had to do duty on a dummy in a dangerous scene; how they were recovered full of cactus prickles; how Mr. Hernandez, thinking that one of the Hopi actors in the picture was ignorant of English, offered to present him with his watch, and was much chagrined when the offer was accepted in perfectly clear American; how little Frankie Lee, with an important part in the play, insisted upon saying his prayers in earnest when asked to do so for the camera, and convulsed the company by praying "Our Father who art in Heaven, Hollywood be thy name"; how Val Paul fell into an ice-cold spring for an impromptu bath which he had had no intention of taking. There never was a company which had so many adventures in the making of a photoplay. But space forbids more than a hint of the happenings which make the picture memorable to the actors; for a synopsis of the story must follow. Here it is:

The world had not given Lorenzo Todd the right kind of a start in life. As each succeeding blow upon his sensibilities made its impression, the heart of Todd shrivelled up, shutting out all human sunshine and love, till at last there were only two mortals who had access to his affections. They were his old-time friend, Dudley Phillips, with whom he played pinochle, and his only son, Warren, for whose life Todd's wife had given her own.

Warren was in love with Virginia, the daughter of Dudley Phillips, and she was in love with him. Warren, like most of the wealthy, was having his "fling" and cultivated dimpled chorus girls; but in his heart he loved Virginia with all the strength of his soul. Then came the time when Warren was arrested for speeding for the third time, and only the influence of his father saved him from a year in prison.

One of the chorus ladies happened to be with him on this particular night, and thought it a good opportunity to get some publicity. She filed a breach of promise suit against Warren. That was the end of everything—the last blow which completely closed the soul of Lorenzo Todd. For Dudley Phillips, incensed at the behavior of one who would marry his only daughter, informed Lorenzo that Virginia should never marry Warren. This ended the friendship between the two men.

"Kinda gets your goat, don't it?" said Jack.

Warren denies the truth of the basis of the suit, but Dudley is implacable. Lorenzo absolutely forbids his son to marry Virginia, but Warren declares that he loves the girl and insists that he will marry her. In a frenzy of rage, Lorenzo orders Warren from his home. So the two who had made up his life are eliminated.

Some time elapses. Lorenzo has grown more embittered, more cynical, and withdraws into his shell, until it might be said that a dozen souls such as his could be placed in a peanut shell and rattle. Warren has gone to the desert and is making good as a desert ranger until he allows a couple of bandits to escape and then he is dismissed in disgrace. Temptation comes at the opportune moment and Warren joins a band of outlaws.

Becoming very angry over some business affairs, Lorenzo has a stroke of apoplexy and is ordered, with his valet, to the Grand Canyon. He is cared for by Oracle Jack, a big, good-natured, God-loving man. Lorenzo will see none of the beauties about him, although the frequent suggestions of Jack and his small nephew are beginning to have their effect.

A big rainstorm comes while Jack has gone down the mountains to confer with the sheriff regarding the capture of an outlaw who is supposed of being in that vicinity. A landslide occurs, and Lorenzo, the nephew and the valet are imprisoned, and have to wait for a rescue party. Dudley Phillips and his daughter learn of his predicament and decides to be the first to greet the prisoners.

Up at the cabin, the valet is striving hard to do the work, but makes a failure of it, and Lorenzo has to take a hand himself.

Christmas is the next day, and the small boy wants a tree and a visit from Santa Claus, so Lorenzo finds himself planning to make the child happy. Then he and the valet are surprised by the advent of a visitor. This is none other than Warren, the outlaw, who has been hiding in the mountains. Just as they are impersonating Santa and the reindeer for the wondering boy, the others appear and everything is explained.

Lorenzo is hungry for the first time in years.

It's a Good Thing that Universal City is in a Sheltered Spot

This is the Cannibal Village in "Love Aflame," the next Red Feather.

IT was made perfectly evident that the dye shortage is no longer acute in this country the other day when the cannibal village scenes for the Red Feather photoplay, "Love Aflame," were filmed by Director Raymond Wells, at Universal City. In the scenes which depicted a typical South Sea Island village, several hundred people were used whose bodies had been colored for the occasion by the use of gallons and gallons of brown dye.

Raymond Wells is a director who loves the picturesque. The first picture that he made for the Universal was a "Special" called "The Caravan," in which Claire McDowell and Lena Baskette had the leads. This was staged in ancient Egypt, and was one of the most remarkable films, from a pictorial standpoint, which has ever been made. In it Mr. Wells made a liberal use of brown paint take the place of costume in a manner which was little short of audacious, but so artistic that the most prudish were unoffended. In this Red Feather he is certain to repeat the success of the former picture, for the cannibal scenes are really remarkable. The set was one of the largest ever used at Universal City, and stretched far into the distance. There were grass huts galore and a whole harem of pretty savages wearing costumes which were adapted strictly for a warm climate. In the center Noble Johnson, as the cannibal king, held his court, impressively decked out in a silk hat, a few beads, and a leopard skin.

FRANKLYN FARNUM'S SMILE IS REAL

SCREEN smiles seem to be the fashion. All the one-time matinee heroes who have deserted what Carter De Haven calls the "Talkies" for the "Movies," are sitting up nights trying to cultivate a winning and expressive expansion of the lips. But, boys, it's a waste of time. It can't be done. You may cultivate your muscles—you may cultivate your hair until it curls like Mary Pickford's—you may even induce a soulful look to linger in your eye—but—unless your smile is really one of those magnetic affairs in every day life, you won't succeed in cultivating it for the screen. Screen smiles—the magnetic kind—are born, not made.

How much more to be desired than fine gold, then, is the inborn magnetic smile, and how fortunate the possessor of one! Such a bit of property is the main asset of Franklyn Farnum, the youngest brother of the celebrated Farnum family, who has become a screen favorite in the course of a few short months. All the brothers have that indefinable quality which we call "personality," for want of a better name; but Franklyn has the picture actor's most envied attribute—the magnetic smile—as well. And he has always had it. When he was in the "legitimate," there was not a more popular chap on the whole American stage. Every stage-hand, call-boy, door-keeper, on the entire route over which he traveled, felt the better for seeing him, and catching the reflection of his winning smile. When he was "In stock" in St. Louis, he could attract a crowd by just standing on the corner of of a busy street.

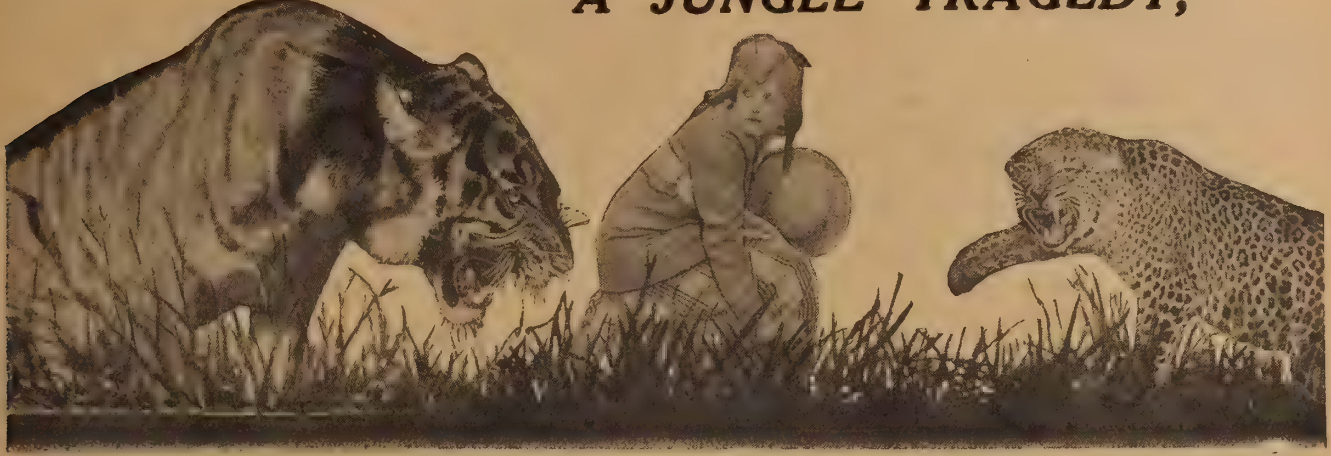
"A JUNGLE TRAGEDY,"



BIG U Drama in Two Reels, written and produced by Henry McRae, with Marie Walcamp in the lead.

THIS Big U Drama, called "A Jungle Tragedy," was written and produced by Henry McRae, with Marie Walcamp, Sherman Bainbridge, and William Clifford in the leading roles, and some of the wonderful animals of the Universal Zoo taking important parts in the story. A brief synopsis of the story runs as follows:

Clifford and Sherman arrive at the house of Sherman's friend. Sherman is supposed to marry Marie, his friend's daughter. Marie prefers Clifford's love to Sherman's. Sherman, after a day's hunting, in which a lion is killed, tells Marie that he killed the lion; but it was really shot by Clifford. On the day of her marriage, Marie runs away. Sherman goes in search of her, and is killed by a lion. Clifford, who also has been on the lookout, sees Marie lying on the ground and a lion approaching her. With unerring aim he shoots the lion, thus saving Marie's life. On carrying her home they find the dead body of Sherman, which they bury.

Upon returning home they tell their story to Marie's father and he gives his consent to their marriage.

sion has failed, he suspects Pat and follows her. She rushes to an automobile and is driven to the hangar, closely followed by Kelly, in another machine. Just as Pat is about to ascend with her Apache aviator, Kelly and his men attack Pat's lieutenants and in the fight the Sphinx is knocked senseless.

At that instant Pat and her aviator start for their trip in the clouds, but the machine acts badly and they are not able to ascend very far. Investigation proves that there is a man lying senseless on one of the wings of the biplane. As the machine starts to plunge downward, Pat is astounded to discover that the senseless man is none other than Phil Kelly.

The venturesome girl, the senseless detective and the Apache aviator are saved from being dashed to horrible death upon the ground when, by a rare stroke of good fortune, the machine, in its downward plunge, crashes into the upper branches of a giant tree, the force of its fall being thus broken. But new danger immediately assails them—the gasoline tank explodes and flames envelope the machine and its helpless passengers.

Louise Lovely in "The Fugitive"

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Written E. Magnus Ingleton and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, featuring pretty Louise Lovely and a strong cast, in a story of the escape of her screen-husband from the meshes of the law.

CAST.

Jim Donovan	Roy Stewart
Dan Morgan	Harry Carter
Nan Donovan	Louise Lovely
Frank Foster	T. D. Crittenden
The Weasel	Vesta Pegg

THIS two-reel Imp Drama, written by E. Magnus Ingleton and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, is one of those stories which may offend the sensibilities of persons who believe in the upholding of the law on all occasions, but which is sure to delight those far more human creatures who have an unalterable feeling that the man is more important than the law, for whose benefit it was made, after all. It is only the crabbed "dry-as-dusts," as Charles Dickens called them, who will wish for the apprehension of "Jim Donovan" in this fine picture. All the red-blooded people in the audience will rejoice when he eludes the minion of justice in such a clever fashion, and succeeds in making his escape. He is materially assisted by the same wonderful dog which played an important part with Harry Carey recently in "The Bad Man of Cheyenne." This time the dog burrows its way into the cabin where the detective had tied up "Jim Donovan." The animal then gnaws apart the rope which binds him in the chair, and when the detective returns, Jim turns the tables on him in the neatest manner.

Louise Lovely has a rather small part in the production, but she looks more than true to her name, and acts the earlier scenes with forcefulness. The story of the picture is as follows:

Jim Donovan was a fugitive from justice, for he had committed murder. In his own mind, he was justified, for it had been to defend the honor of his wife, Nan.

Dan Morgan had long been his friend before they had entered partnership, and although there were times when the two quarreled, yet they always managed to make up.

Unknown to Jim, Dan admired his pretty wife, and one day, when he knew Jim was at the office, he visited Nan and told her of his love. She was shocked and surprised. Chagrined at her rebuff, he planned cunningly. On his way from her home, he sent a fake wire to Jim, purporting to come from his uncle, Frank Foster, and asking him to come at once, as he was dangerous ill. Jim, obeying the request, met Uncle Frank, who had just come to visit him.

With Jim gone from the office, Dan had the office boy telephone to Nan, telling her that Jim wished her to come to the office. When she arrived, she found only Dan, who began forcing his attentions upon her. She struggled with him, but being so much stronger, he soon had the upper hand. Jim and Frank had gone home and the maid had told of the message. So Jim hurried back to the office, to find his wife battling with Dan. Then it was that murder was done.

Now he is hiding in a cabin, cheered by a note from Nan saying that she and Frank are working so that he can make his escape. A detective is put on the trail, and he locates Jim in his cabin through the dog which has been his companion. The detective straps Jim in a chair and then leaves to get a horse. The dog, having been shut out of the cabin, manages to dig his way into the house, and tugs at the rope which binds Jim until it snaps and Jim is free.

When the detective returns, Jim straps him into the chair and then taking a horse rides to the point where he meets Nan and Foster. As the picture closes we see them safe on an outward-bound boat.

CALLS ZOE RAE "MOVIE QUEEN."

A SASKATOON, Canada, admirer of Zoe Rae, six-year-old film star of Universal City, refers to her as "The Little Queen of the Movies." Probably few actresses in the world have more admirers than little Zoe, and there is a constant demand from all parts of the country that she appear personally with her film plays. This, however, is impossible, as her services are required daily at Universal City. She appears in the name part in Director Holubar's fine production, "The War Waif."

Her Canadian correspondent writes her that she feels as if she could go up to the screen and kiss her, as she is her favorite of all. Baby Zoe receives an abundance of mail daily which her mother is very careful to answer. Many of the letters contain some little remembrance from Zoe personally.

"A Wife's Folly"

Johan is happy with his wife and child.

BIG U Two-Reel Drama. Written by Jas. R. Garey and produced by Ben Wilson, who also plays the lead. The story of a fisherman who is driven out of his senses by the desertion of his wife and restored to health by his child.

CAST.

Johan	Ben Wilson
Katrina	Edna Hunter
Martha	Violet Axtell
Adolph	Thomas Lehmann
Frieda	Jeanette Rutland
Father Ericson	Charles Ogle

FOR this fine Big U Drama, written by James R. Garey and produced by Ben Wilson, the Universal actor-director took his entire company to Gloucester, in order to obtain the proper atmosphere of the fishing village. The film was made just before Wilson left for Universal City, where he has done much to increase his reputation, both as a player and as a producer of photoplays. The scenery which he chose for the background of many of the scenes is wild and beautiful, and the greatest ingenuity has been used to create a foreign atmosphere. One of the prettiest children in the picture, little Violet Axtell, accompaned the company to Gloucester and played her important role with wonderful understanding for a five-year-old. Edna Hunter supported Mr. Wilson and wore her Old World gowns becomingly.

The story gave Mr. Wilson an opportunity to do some of the most intense emotional work in which he has been seen. Yet he acted with his usual restrain, in a situation in which he might have been forgiven for succumbing to the temptation to tear a passion to tatters. A synopsis of the story follows:

Katrina is a young fisherman's wife, who allows the flattery of Adolph to turn her head. So, with her child she elopes with him, their goal being America. But Johan, her husband, seeing Katrina and Adolph embrace, through the aid of the telescope, hastens home and takes the child from the boat before their departure. Katrina leaves a note to Johan saying she and the child have gone; Adolph adds another line, supposedly from Katrina, saying the child is not her husband's. Blind with rage, Johan prepares to abandon the child, but she is found by a kind priest and taken to a convent just as Adolph falls into the ocean from his boat, and Katrina, adrift, is pulled to shore by some fishermen.

The daughter of the innkeeper, pretty Frieda, also admired by the too-ardent Adolph, attempts to comfort the bereft Johan who, temporarily is insane and will alone no one else to minister to him. Only the sight of the child, it is said, will restore his reason, so the priest, with Frieda, concoct a plan whereby Johan opens his eyes in his own cottage and sees his child.

Katrina, meanwhile, in the convent, pleads with the priest to intercede for her with her husband. They bring her to the cottage and Johan almost chokes her. But at last the note from Adolph is discovered by Katrina. She is horrified by his duplicity and explains to Johan. The picture fades with the suggestion that all some day will be again right between the couple, thanks to the little tow-headed youngster, oblivious of her parents' tragedy.

VIOLET GROWS FINICKY.

DAINTY Violet Mersereau, Bluebird star, surely has a mind of her own, and asserts it whenever she wishes. Playing the part of Susan in "Susan's Gentleman," a forthcoming Bluebird picture, she had to carry a homeless young pup into her home. One of the boys around the studio at Leonia was sent out to look for a dog and succeeded in finding a stray, gaunt mongrel. It was near closing time, so Director Stevens wanted to finish the scene in which the dog appeared and then let it go to resume its wanderings. At this point, however, Miss Mersereau spoke her mind. "The dog is terribly dirty," she said, "so I refuse to carry it until it is bathed and thoroughly cleaned." There was no more work done that day. The dog was cared for during the night and the next morning the scene was shot.

"A MACARONI SLEUTH."

Nestor Comedy.

Written by Bess Meredyth.
Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

CAST.

Eddie, the Detective	Eddie Lyons
Lee, the Wop	Lee Moran
Edythe	Edith Roberts
Pietro	Harry Nolan
Lee's Wife	Jane Bernoudy

Fresh from the country came the correspondence school detective with his book, "How to Become a Detective," which he consulted on every occasion. Just arrived at the station of the city, he perceived a mysterious wop, who made queer signs to a peanut vender. Hearing a newsboy call, "All about the Smithson murder—murderer still at large," Eddie promptly concluded that this was the man wanted.

Edythe, an Italian girl, was held prisoner in a tenement room. Looking up, Eddie saw that her hands were bound and that she was wild with fury. He followed Lee to his home and witnessed a fight between him and his wife. She finally hurled a knife, dripping with fresh blood, at her husband, which landed at Eddie's feet. She had only been cutting up a chicken, but Eddie did not know it.

Eddie picked up a note dropped by Edythe, which read, "Save me." Then he saw Lee dash in, grab Edythe and throw her back into the room. Soon after, he watched the pursuit of Edythe and Pietro by Lee and two of his men, over houses, down trapdoors, fire-escapes and chimneys. Finally the girl and Pietro were caught. Eddie heard Pietro say. "I will not sign unless you give me the girl."

The detective read in his book that one whistle was for five cops and six whistles for one. Five policemen dropped in beside him, and broke into the room. The cops grabbed Lee, but he told them to read the agreement about which he and Pietro were arguing. It said, "I agree to shorten the length of macaroni one inch if I can have your daughter in marriage. Signed, Pietro Guiseppe."

"THE BLOOD-STAINED HAND."

Laemmle Drama.

Arthur Metcalf is an artist. Olga Carew, an adventuress, is in love with him. Enmity exists between her and the monkey owned by Arthur. Arthur's chum, a photographer, realizes the baneful effect the adventuress' association has on his friend. He attempts to make his friend break with the woman. In the heat of passion she strikes the monkey.

The photographer induces his friend to accompany him to the country. The artist meets an innocent country girl, Vera.

The adventuress finds the whereabouts of the artist and persuades him to go back to the city with her. This he does, leaving his friend behind to care for the country girl.

The photographer, though loving the girl himself, induces her to accompany him to the city with the hope that her influence will counteract that of the adventuress.

At her arrival at the studio, circumstances contrive to leave the two women alone. There is a terrible scream. The men rush in. There on the floor lies Olga, and over her with a dripping stiletto in her hand stands Vera. She is accused and arrested. Circumstantial evidence points to the guilt of Vera, yet her friend the photographer does not believe her guilty.

He photographs the eyes of the dead woman and finds the shadow of the real culprit—the monkey.

Fred Brandon	Fred Church
Eileen	Eileen Sedgwick
Mr. Hardman	Charles Perley
Mrs. Hardman	Claire Du Brey

Fred Brandon and Eileen Northcote are the two heirs of a million-dollar fortune, on the condition that they are united in marriage within twenty-four hours. Both are highly indignant over the will.

Mr. and Mrs. Hardman, being friends of both, persuade them to submit to the marriage. This they do, Eileen standing on one side of a curtain and Brandon on the other.

The next day Eileen and Brandon are house guests of the Hardman's. When Eileen has finished dressing for dinner she locks her bedroom door, and turning quickly collides with Brandon, whose room is adjoining hers. The two have seen each other on different occasions and there has been mutual admiration. Eileen threatens to tell her husband if Brandon doesn't immediately leave this room, so near to hers. Hardman and his wife, listening at the keyhole, shout to Brandon not to be afraid, for Eileen is his own wife, upon which Eileen faints in her husband's arms.

Bill	William Franey
Lillian	Dolly Ohnet
Gale	Gale Henry
Heinie	Milburn Moranti

Bill loves his wife, Lillian, but rubber is her cooking's only rival. Furious, because he has been making fun of it, Lillian drives Bill from the house. He happens to sit on a bench in the park next to Gale, who is earnestly in search of a husband. She sees an advertisement of the Splicem Matrimonial Bureau and eagerly hastens to that office.

Bill receives a letter informing him of his wealthy uncle's approaching visit and of his intention to give Bill a fat check if his wife is the right sort. Bill, thinking of Lillian's culinary talent, decides to engage a cook, and trying to avoid a coleric janitor, he unintentionally enters the Splicem Matrimonial Bureau, instead of the Helpem Employment Agency. Bill arranges to take Gale as cook, she thinking he takes her as wife.

Uncle arrives and Bill is forced to introduce Gale as his wife. Soon Heinie, Gale's pugilistic brother, the minister and two friends hurriedly enter. Bill is compelled to submit to a marriage ceremony.

Lillian, meanwhile, returns home. She enters the house just as the ceremony is in progress, and faints. Recovering she rushes in and tells them that Bill is her husband. Gale then faints, regaining consciousness just in time to save Bill from being beaten up by Heinie, and to accept Uncle's proposal of marriage.

"BOOMER BILL'S AWAKENING."

Powers Comic Cartoon (Split Reel)

Boomer, asleep in an oasis, brought about by too much conviviality, dreams a dream which takes him to the far North, where there are reindeers, an elusive pole, bears and icicles dozens of feet long. Experiences a-plenty fall to his lot until he is gently but firmly tapped on the shoulder by an unsympathetic bluecoat.

CAST.

Toymaker	Allan Holubar
Henry	George Pearce
Wife	Leah Baird
Child	Virginia Corbin

The toymaker had come to America in which land he expected to make a fortune and then send for his wife and child. After toiling for many months he at last has the necessary sum. Meanwhile, he consoles himself with a beautiful doll which he has fashioned in the likeness of his child.

He receives word that the ship upon which his loved ones had taken passage has been lost at sea. So the doll becomes a greater part of his life than hitherto. At night in his dreams it seems to come to life and speaks to him.

Some time later he receives word from his sister asking him to return to the old home across the seas. He has saved up a little money but not enough for his passage. Seeing the advertisement of a mine promoter, he seeks him out and to him commits his savings. While at the promoter's office he sees Henry's wife and child.

Henry absconds with the money, leaving his child very ill. The child begs continually for the doll which the toymaker has refused to sell. The doctor thinks that if she can have this wish gratified, it may lead to her recovery. The mother goes to the toymaker's shop. The toymaker turns her away.

That night the doll becomes the living child in his dreams, but accuses him of being selfish. The toymaker takes the doll to the child. He arrives at the same time as the father, who has had a change of heart, and returned to repay the money.

Pat	Pat Rooney
American General	Walter Clinton
Mexican General	Harry Griffith

Pat sees in a newspaper that $100,000 is offered for the capture of Villa, dead or alive, so he immediately starts for the border to offer his services to the army.

Arriving at El Paso, he is taken for a recruit.

Being hauled up before the general, Pat finally gets a chance to explain the mistake, and asks that he be made a scout. Fully arming himself and party, he sets out for the interior of Mexico.

At night Pat dreams of having Villa surrounded and in his power. Villa dreams of Pat as a sort of superhuman being, who, by merely laughing, can strike men dead.

They almost run into each other, before either sees the other. Each beats it for shelter. The only cover available is behind two rocks about a hundred feet apart. Each hides behind a rock, and immediately begins pumping lead at the other. Pat soon runs out of ammunition, so hoists a flag and the two advance. Villa next produces a pack of cards and asks Pat if he "Sabe Poker." In the ensuing scenes, Pat wins everything that Villa possesses.

Pat springs his proposition on him, that he take him to headquarters as dead, secure the $100,000 reward, divide fifty-fifty, and then release him, providing he will leave the border for good.

The arrival at headquarters creates quite a little stir, and the soldiers are so anxious to see the victim that they almost spoil the little game, but Pat finally succeeds.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO.—Sault Ste Marie, Ont., has a splendid new theatre called the Princess. This new house will seat over 900 people and cost $60,000 to erect. Mr. Gibson, a well-known film man, is at the head of the new enterprise. Mr. Gerald Ruck, Special Representative of the Universal Co., in Ontario, states that Bluebirds, Red Feather Features and very likely "The Purple Mask" serial will be opened in this new theatre.

Mr. T. O. Byerle, of the Montreal Exchange of Universal Co., writes that the proposed raising of the Censor Fees from $2 to $5 a reel and from $1 to $5 for reconsideration was taken up again by Mr. Ouimet, Mr. La Ronte and himself in the presence of Mr. Mitchell, Provincial Treasurer, and after considerable discussion these Exchangemen were successful in having the bill reduced to read $3 a reel for Censor Fees and $5 for reconsideration. A promise was also given that the Censor Board would be carefully examined and several much needed reforms instituted.

Quite a commotion was caused among Toronto Exchangemen the other day when it was learned that the Toronto Board of Police Commissioners were considering charging five cents per sheet for the censoring of every poster to be used in front of a theatre or on a bill board. The Exchange Managers Association immediately held two emergency meetings to discuss the situation and, as the time happens to be just before the monthly meeting, it is expected that something will be done.

The Universal Film Co. announces that they are purchasing a print of Robinson Crusoe, special release with Robert Leonard for Canada and will release it almost immediately.

An unusual feat has just been performed by the Bluebird five-reel picture "SHOES," which was returned for second booking into the Rialto Theatre and the Red Mill. It is also showing in the Beaver Theatre, one of the largest suburban houses in this city, all within thirty days of its initial release in this town.

Montreal.—The Board of Directors of the St. Denis Theatre, including the President, Mr. MacKay, and Mr. E. L. Perry, the manager of same, gave an informal dinner at the Reform Club to the pioneer members of the newly organized Exhibitors League.

At the meeting following the dinner various matters were discussed and the most important motion of the evening was raised by Mr. Geo. Rotsky, manager of the New Grand Theatre, whereby all members of the organization were to refuse to pay any advance deposit on feature films. This motion was seconded by Mr. Connover, manager of the Imperial Theatre and unanimously passed by the entire organization. Mr. G. J. Barry, president of the League and one of the leading exhibitors, bespeaks of a brilliant future for this organization.

"THE BLACK NINE."

Victor Comedy.

Written and Produced by Billy Mason.

CAST.

Bill	Billy Mason
Penpoints	O. C. Jackson
Harem Girl	Ruby Cox

Bill is a lunatic in an asylum. His friend, Penpoints, happens along and Bill pleads so sorrowfully that his friend decides to use his strength. He spreads the iron bars and Bill escapes. The guards chase them until Bill and Penpoints find a raft on the beach.

They remain on the raft for one week, when they drift on an island, inhabited by cannibals. The cannibals decide to have a feast. As they are about to put their visitors in the boiling water, they discover a ring around the moon, which is a sign that no one should be killed that day. Bill tells them that he is the moon god. They all see his baseball and believe him. They make Bill the new king and he has the time of his life with the cannibal girls.

Bill suggests a game of ball, which he tries to teach the cannibals, but it ends in a fight.

Penpoints tells the cannibals that Bill is a baseball player and not a god, and they decide to kill him. But Bill's wonderful pitching saves his life.

MINNEAPOLIS LETTER.

By JULIUS BERNHEIM.

Mr. Spray Green, of the New Garden Theatre, asserts that he broke all records last week with "The Honor of Mary Blake." He pronounced it to be one of the most beautiful productions ever turned out by the Bluebird Photoplay Company and sincerely hopes that there will be many more like the before-mentioned one. It will certainly mean an increase in the box office receipts of the various theatres that have the good fortune of presenting Bluebird Photoplays.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company arranged for a nice dinner, to celebrate the annual banquet of the Laemmle Film Service employees. The writer of this article took great pleasure in presenting a little talk on "LOYALTY," and Mr. Cubberly, manager of the Minneapolis branch, expressed his sincerest appreciation of all the good work and the assistance from his employees during the year just gone by.

"BLACK EVIDENCE."

Imp Detective Drama.

Written and Produced by John McDermott.

CAST.

Winthrope Halsey	Kingsley Benedict
Blevin	Malcolm Blevins
Mary	Lois Wilson

Morgan and Blevin fight when Morgan refuses to open the safe, and in the fight Morgan is killed. Placing the gun in Morgan's hand, Blevin removes the typewriter ribbon from the machine, fastens the key to the end of it, and throws it over the transom, leaving the other end fastened under a paper weight. He then goes out, locks the door, and slipping the key on the ribbon sends it back in the room, then pulls the ribbon out.

The chief of police puts Halsey on the case, as he does not believe it is suicide. Taking a new typewriter ribbon, Halsey goes to a Chinese joint where crooks and murderers usually hang out. Here he finds Blevin, who has just informed the political boss, that he killed Morgan.

Halsey flirts with the waitress, and orders a bowl of soup. Placing in it a typewriter ribbon, he sends it to Blevin. The crook is startled, and looks in his own pocket where he has the other typewriter ribbon concealed. In a fight, the crooks are captured.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS FOR "GOD'S CRUCIBLE."

AMONG the characters in "GOD'S CRUCIBLE" are a little fat millionaire and his tall, lanky valet. You can use these characters to help you advertise this Bluebird feature.

Hire a short, fat man and a tall, lean and lanky individual possessing a solemn face. Dress the two up as tourists. Get a burro, a small one, and have the fat man ride him. The valet is to walk ahead and lead the burro. The valet should carry a pole sign containing the words, "We are on our way to see 'GOD'S CRUCIBLE' at the ———— Theatre. Follow us!"

An attractive idea for your lobby consists of a crucible, placed over an artificial fire. The crucible can be constructed of papier mache or any similar material. The "fire" should consist of colored lights, red and yellow, about which wood is piled. Red and yellow ribbons should be fastened to the top layer. An electric fan, concealed by the heaped wood, will cause the ribbons to resemble tongues of flame.

Steam can be made to issue from the crucible by means of a little solid alcohol burner over which a can of water is heated. The burner and the water should be placed at the bottom of the crucible, out of sight. The words "GOD'S CRUCIBLE" should be painted across the front of the crucible itself.

It is exceedingly likely that your railroad agent would be glad to help you advertise this production. The action is laid on the Grand Canyon of Arizona, one of the wonder spots of the world and a mecca for tourists; or get in touch with the travel bureau of the road.

Mr. Exhibitor:—

If you have the slightest doubt regarding the business-pulling powers of letters, have this letter multigraphed and mailed to the people on your mailing list. The results will amaze and delight you.

If you have no mailing list, your Bluebird exchange manager will be glad to have his advertising and publicity department to help you compile one. NO LIVE EXHIBITOR IS WITHOUT A MAILING LIST!

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, Inc.

Dear Friend:—

Lorenzo Todd hated everybody and everything. Rainy, slushy, muddy weather delighted him because he knew it made all the rest of the world miserable and unhappy.

One day Lorenzo Todd decided to take a trip out to the Grand Canyon of Arizona. Not that he cared for the beauty and majesty of nature, but his doctor compelled him to go. There's a spot on one of the cliffs along the Grand Canyon where, according to the natives, no man can stand for more than five minutes without becoming filled with the firm conviction that there IS a God.

Then occurred a series of incidents in which a desperado, a sheriff, the latter's six-year-old son, Todd's valet, a jackass, an accident and a cloudburst all played their parts. By the time events resumed their normal course Todd was converted. Not only that, but he became a human being!

The story is told in the most delightful of all Bluebird Photoplays, "GOD'S CRUCIBLE." You may possibly have seen a better feature at some time or another—but we doubt it.

"GOD'S CRUCIBLE" will be shown at this theatre on (day and date here). The rest of the show is in keeping with the quality of this Bluebird, which means the best performance you have seen in many a day.

Come! ! !

Sincerely yours,
(Theatre name here),
Manager.

"THE DARING CHANCE"

BISON Two-Reel Drama, written by Harvey Gates and produced by William V. Mong, who also plays the lead, with Mina Cunard opposite. The story of a circuit barber of the West, who escaped death by a close shave.

CAST.

Lem Cooley	William V. Mong
Joe Christy	Harry Griffith
The Sheriff	Harry Holden
Deputy	Billy Human
Zillia	Mina Cunard

"THE DARING CHANCE" is an exciting Bison two-reel drama, written by Harvey Gates and produced by William V. Mong. Mong plays the part of a circuit barber, in the old days of the West, who loves the daughter of Christy, the town bully, but is no match for her coquetry. However, he thinks of an original way to win her. He plays poker with her redoubtable father, wins all the man's money away from him, and then induces him to wager his daughter. Lem, the barber, wins again, and rides off triumphantly with the girl, much against her will. But his wooing is interrupted by most of the men of the place, who ride after him to arrest him for the hold-up of the stage. However, everything comes out right in the end. Mong has a part that exactly suits him in "Lem Cooley," and Mina Cunard, who will do anything that a director asks of her in the way of a stunt for the films, does some daring riding in the picture, and wears overalls far more becomingly than most girls manage to do. A synopsis of the story runs as follows:

Lem Cooley, the circuit barber, is nonchalantly riding down a mountain trail, when he suddenly sees a lone bandit holding up the stage-coach, a few feet below him. Deciding that the affair is none of his, he moves quietly off in the opposite direction. Soon, however, his attention is attracted by a masked man in the thicket, who is hastily counting a pile of money wrapped in a handkerchief. Observing the bandit throw away the handkerchief, Lem retraces his steps, picks it up, deciding to keep it.

Riding into camp, Lem is soon the busiest man about. Men are taking their turns at the razor, when Christy, the town bully, blusters in and demands that Lem shave him at once. Sticking the shaving brush into his face, Lem is about to settle the argument when Christy draws his gun. Before either make a move, impulsive Zillia, Christy's daughter, jumps to his side and mockingly calls out, "Don't hurt the little barber, dad!"

That evening Lem again pays his respects to the camp beauty, but Christy's marked attentions in the shape of a basin of water on his head, rather dampen the ardor of the wooer's spirits, and he departs, vowing vengeance on Zillia and her dad.

Later on in the night, a card game is in progress and Lem is winning everything in sight, while Christy, as usual, is a heavy loser. A dispute arises between the two men, and Lem bets his pile against Christy's girl. Winning the wager, but dropping his handkerchief in his excitement, the barber makes for Christy's shack.

Meanwhile, Zillia has been exploring about the woods, and comes upon an express-box hidden in the bushes. She recognizes her father's handiwork, but loyally resolves to keep silent.

Finding Zillia at home, Lem masterfully orders her to accompany him to the preacher's, and carries her off by force. Before reaching their destination, Lem decides to return home with Zillia, as he doesn't care to force her love. Soon, however, they are overtaken by a posse sent out by the sheriff, who has recognized Lem's handkerchief as the one stolen by the bandit.

Realizing Lem is not guilty, Zillia hurriedly returns to her shack. She is shadowed by the sheriff. She angrily accuses her father of stealing the express-box. Then she cautiously makes her way to the prison and helps Lem to escape. He is caught again, however, and about to be hanged, when the sheriff appears, leading Joe Christy, having discovered in him, the return to the express company.

Zillia is heart-broken at her father's shame, and Lem, now a free man, says he has won the money and will return it to the Express Company.

An Unfair Condition

By F. H. Richardson

THE writer hereof is a firm believer in adequate remuneration for labor performed, no matter whether that labor be the digging of a sewer or the performance of the duties of the President of the United States. It has always seemed that the holding of remuneration of labor down to the lowest possible level is bad business, from any and every point of view, and a policy which must perforce react detrimentally upon the industries of any country.

The moving picture industry has, however, in one of its branches, gone to an utterly absurd length in the other extreme, and this condition has been brought about by the use of tactics to which I think no one who has studied the situation could give unqualified approval. I refer to the salaries of "stars."

There are today scores of artists playing leading roles and receiving therefor sums absolutely out of all proportion to any remuneration they could, by any stretch of the wildest imagination, hope to receive were their efforts confined to the legitimate stage. In fact, until some of the thousand-dollar-a-week talent broke into moving pictures they considered one-tenth of that sum as the standard price.

The matter of salaries paid by producers would not be of interest to the moving picture world if these salaries were really paid by the producer, but when we come to analyze the situation it is found that this is not the fact. True, the producer makes the contract and pays the actual money, but in effect he merely advances that sum, later collecting it from the film exchange, which in turn collects it from the exhibitor, who is the real goat.

I have remarked that an element of unfairness was contained in the matter and firmly believe my statement to be correct. Let us examine into that phase, taking an extreme case of the untrained schoolgirl, who "butts" into moving pictures, and due, of course, to some measure of talent, plus certain personal qualities, "makes a hit." As soon as she displays the fact that she has real ability, coupled with the energy and sticktoitiveness necessary to success, she is placed in leading roles and the producer proceeds to advertise her. Now this advertising is not done for nothing. It costs money; also it is likely to cost a lot more money in kick-back, which almost invariably results. Mazie has now become a "movie queen." She has made good, is now given leading roles, and calls herself a star; also the producer overlooks no opportunity to advertise her as such. Mazie now, in the parlance of the racing stable, "begins to feel her oats," and promptly demands added remuneration, backed by the threat that unless she gets it she will go over, bag and baggage, to an opposition company.

Now, if her demands were reasonable, taking into due consideration the fact that she owes to the producing company the advertising which has made it possible for her to become a popular star, there would be no complaint. Mazie does not do anything of that sort, however. Far be it from her to indulge in such unseemly modesty. It is a case of "grab the money" with, please remember, the exhibitor as the goat. A few months ago Mazie was literally tickled out of her shoes when she was put on the salary roll at fifty dollars per week. Now she demands five hundred, with a short-time contract, and when that contract is up she, having meanwhile nosed around among other producing companies, comes in with a demand for double that sum, again backed up with the threat that if the producer don't "come across' she can get it elsewhere.

The second contract is signed at the higher figure. She is still advertised to the limit, and pretty soon some "enterprising" feature producer hunts Mazie up and says: "You working for one thousand dollars a week? Why, good heavens! I would not insult you by offering such an absurd sum. Come over to us and we will pay you three thousand!"—and so it goes.

The figures may be somewhat exaggerated, but the fact unquestionably remains that the moving picture industry, as a whole, and the exhibitor in particular, is laboring under an unwarranted burden of absurd salaries paid to leading men and women. Mind you, I say this as one who, as I said in the beginning, firmly believes in adequate remuneration for labor performed. I don't, however, regard it as reasonable to pay moving picture stars the huge salaries which are now all too common. It is this burden which is pushing up the film rentals to absurd and impossible figures.

The exhibitor has it in his own hands to remedy this condition by refusing to pay exorbitant film rental fees which he knows are very largely based on unreasonable salaries paid to actors. Why kill the goose that lays the golden eggs, for that is what it will mean in the long run to all concerned?

Western, Railroad and Other Outdoor Pictures, Detective Scenes

By M. Winkler

WESTERN, railroad and outdoor scenes in general are crowded with vivid action and dramatic incident. In their musical treatment absolute synchronization (see "Music and Picture," p. 846) and an intelligent use of contrasting music is the great cue to success. In choosing his music for such scenes the musician should first decide which kind of action predominates in the picture to be illustrated, slow or rapid action. From this standpoint he should make his choice. Once selected he should not change his music, but his tempos. In a railroad hold-up; the bandits lurking in ambush, waiting for the train to flash by, call for a mysterioso (in treatment and tempo, if not in name). The galop or quick allegro of Western hold-up scenes can often be made to express a totally opposite mood by changes in tempo and inflection. Good heavy 2/4 time moderato movements are excellent for cowboy barroom scenes and others of rougher character, and a liberal use of tympani rolls can also be recommended. In barroom dance scenes improvisation on a standard not "popular" rag are advised. In shooting affrays involving a number of men, and either slow or rapid shooting by a crowd, two small rattan sticks beating continuously against a leather chair-bottom give a perfect reproduction of revolver or gun fire. In detective scenes, where mystery, secrecy, and the atmosphere of intrigue dominates, the pizzicato and "croom" are invaluable, and in their climaxes and, for that matter, climaxes of any kind, the tympani can be relied on for a maxium of effect.

PUTTING IT OVER

A PAGE OF PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

WE are now far enough into the New Year to know whether our good resolutions are going to stick or not. The Editor is not referring to your private resolutions regarding life and conduct. Far from it. But there are certain business resolutions all Exhibitors have made, about which we, uninvited, are about to make a few remarks.

First—you all decided to profit this year by last year's mistakes. You are going to run your house on more profitable lines. If flivver features have cost you a lot of money, you are going back to the program.

Yes, and you are going to begin booking some Specials to help put your show over, even if you are so situated that you cannot change all your plans in a minute, and must continue to run features for a time.

We ask you to turn to pages 30 and 31, look at the releases listed there. Wonderful one, two and three-reel subjects of the most varied and entertaining nature. Look these over as a showman and as a business man. Study your people. Listen to what they say as they come out of your theatre. Then book from these pages a Comedy, or a Juvenile, or an Educational, or a Comic Cartoon, or the Universal Animated Weekly, or the Universal Screen Magazine—or one of those crackerjack dramatic subjects and watch your business pick up.
Just try this for a week or two, and then—

WATCH THIS SPACE FOR SUGGESTIONS AS TO HOW TO PUT YOUR SHOW OVER.

WHAT a pity that the Red Feather for January 29th is released during the cold season! That is, a pity from the point of view of the "Putting it Over" editor, because there is the most attractive savage harem of brown-skinned beauties in it, that you ever saw in a picture. But you can't ask any one to pose in a near imitation of the "altogether" in this weather. However, the flaming volcano which, in the story, is the signal for the strongest man in the Cannibal Islands to challenge the king to single combat for his throne, will make a good substitute and be considerably warmer. Get some very big posters showing this volcano, or have a local artist paint you two pictures of it, in full blast. Then hire a horse and wagon, or an automobile, and put the two, mounted on stiff card or thin board, tentwise over the conveyance, and drive through the streets. The sight of so much heat on a cold day will be sure to start the crowd in the direction of your theatre.

IN the Nestor for January 29th, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran turn, temporarily, into angels. Each thinks the other a model boy, and prepares to receive him as such. If you can get a nice-looking young chap to don a pair of calico, or cardboard wings—very large ones—and have a halo of Christmas tree tinsel, which is elevated above his derby hat by a wire stuck in the band, people would surely take time, in looking at him, to read the announcement of the picture which he carries on a placard.

THE L-KO Komedy for January 31st is called "Faking Fakirs," and is set amid the scenes of a typical county fair. Phil Dunham is hired to put his head through the hole in a canvas curtain, for the rubes to throw balls at. You can't do better than repeat this in reality for a lobby stunt. Have a man in a regular comedy make-up, with red nose, and white rings around his eyes, huge red mouth, etc., stick his head at intervals through the hole in a curtain, which carries the announcement you wish to make lettered in large letters on it.

THE Universal Special for February 1st really does not need any boosting, it is so wonderful in itself. But you want to let people know that you are showing it for this reason. It is one of the very finest things that has been done in connection with this war, and the beauty of it is, that it will be enjoyed by everybody—no matter what their sympathies may be in the conflict. A child should be used to advertise this picture. Have a pretty, attractive little girl, dressed in Old World fashion, with a little ragged frock, which nearly touches the ground, a shawl over her head, and wooden shoes, have her lead through the streets by a man with an announcement which says something like this: "This is one of the thousands of innocent victims of the European war. Who will give her a home? What is to become of her? See 'The War Waif' at the ——— Theatre."

THE Imp for Sunday, February 4th, is called "Diamonds of Destiny," and features Louise Lovely in the role of the fair accomplice of a band of crooks. Incidentally several diamonds, real ones, of great price, were hired from a jeweller to be photographed in the picture. Fix up a glass case in your lobby, lined with black velvet and standing on a pedestal, in a conspicuous place. Have several large, unset stones inside and have a detective, or a man in police uniform on guard over them. Announcements, plainly lettered, on the front of the pedestal.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

Herbert Rawlinson in "The Scarlet Crystal." With Dorothy Davenport and Betty Schade. Fifty-fourth Red Feather Production. Released February 5. That Herbert Rawlinson certainly leads a gay life. He is a fine chap, they say, good to his folks and everything. But those darned directors out there take advantage of his nice manners and his big wardrobe, and what they don't make that poor boy do isn't worth a line of type here. In other words, you'd think he was the he-vampire. For instance, in "The Scarlet Crystal" he is young, handsome, wealthy, bored and a friend introduces him to Betty, who is the sweetest thing that ever came from the farm. They are married and start on a travel honeymoon. Betty sees a scarlet crystal and in its depths a future that she dreads. She buys it and your audience will watch the story she sees unfold in the gradual drifting away of Herbert and his return to the old crowd. But also she sees in the crystal ball that which bids her keep faithful, loyal and true. All of which provides a climax that is most unusual and makes you think that Herbert isn't that kind of a chap at all. Your audiences will ask for more Red Feathers after they have seen this one. Book it and cheer up.

"Won by Grit." With Neal Hart and Lois Wilson. Three-reel Gold Seal Tenderloin Drama. Released February 6. Say, what do you think of a girl testing the nerve of a guy like Neal (who played Major Winston in "Liberty", you remember). But then, you see, she was only after his money and having a little fun with him. They visit the Tenderloin and Mina sees to it that he gets into a scrap with big Dago Frank. Frank's daughter, attracted by Neal, turns out the light, and gives him a chance to get away. He proves himself all right, but it does Mina no good, for if any one spends Neal's money I'm betting on Lois, the sweetest thing on the screen even when she's playing Dago Frank's daughter. A wonderful picture.

"The Melody of Death." With Douglas Gerrard, Ruth Clifford and Maud George. Two-reel Rex Emotional Drama. Directed by Douglas Gerrard. Released Feb. 8. B-r-r-r rh! Don't that title make your be-lood run co-o-o-o-ld? Well, never mind, you'll all enjoy it, in spite of the tragic significance of the title. Douglas knew a lovely tune, way back in Italia. He wooed Nina with it. Nina ran away with a "handsomer man." All the way to America. Douglas followed her. He played-a da org'. All day he would hunt for Nina. All day he would play the old tune. One day she heard music. She threw pennies to the organ a'man. Doug, he spotted the face at the window and—that night? Oh, well, she deserved it, but there is another girl in the play, and you want to see her and learn that a tune can be played on the hand-organ and have two entirely different meanings. Honest to goodness.

Harry Carey in "The Outlaw and the Lady." With Louise Lovely. Two-reel 101 Bison Weally Western Drama. Directed by Fred. Kelsey. Released February 10. When I think of the Ex-Hibitors who are booking phoney five-reelers, and then when I see Harry Carey, the champion of all the Wild West boys, and beautiful Louise Lovely—a star in her own right—appearing in a marvelous picture like this—and boiled down to two reels at that—well, goodness, godness, agnes, actress, what can I do to convince them they are in wrong? What can I say to convince them that they had better hurry and book the Universal Program, and catch up with Old Man Prosperity's bookings for 1917. Why not book the full Universal Program and get acquainted with a bank account? I ask you?

Bulldozing

(No. 161. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufatcuring Company.)

It is mighty distasteful to be placed in the position of defending the Universal company against attacks by men of the type of Lee Ochs, of the Exhibitors Trade Review, but if I remained silent under the scurrilous tirade he has published about this company it is quite possible that such silence would be misunderstood in some quarters.

Mr. Ochs has started a campaign to read the Universal company out of business, or at least to prevent this company from being represented in the councils of the other picture producers.

He asserts that the Universal company has insulted the exhibitors of this country, has sullied their fair names and has done all sorts of just perfectly awful things. He endeavors to paint the Universal as about the worst enemy the exhibitors ever had.

Where the Universal stands in the hearts and minds of the exhibitors is best known to the exhibitors themselves. We stand on our record of many years' duration. This record is proof enough whether the Universal has been the booster or the killer of the exhibitor. I have nothing further to argue on that point.

But the point I wish to make clear to all exhibitors is the fact that Mr. Ochs started his campaign just exactly ONE DAY after the Universal company politely declined to buy advertising space in his Exhibitors Trade Review.

We declined strictly for the business reason that we do not need the columns of that publication in order to reach the exhibitors of this country, since we are already reaching them through several other trade papers and have done so for years.

Mr. Ochs is supposed to have such a strong influence with exhibitors that he can get a great many of them to cancel Universal Films. We don't know whether this is true or not. But if it is true that he has such influence and that he uses it to further his own interests as part owner of a trade paper, we really don't care how quickly we lose the business of any exhibitor who can be influenced in such a manner. There is an ugly word for such a method of soliciting advertising. The Universal company does not propose to be clubbed into buying the good will of any publication.

As for our films, we submit them on their merits as to quality and price. We ask no exhibitor to use them on sentimental grounds, but solely on a business basis—the same basis on which we propose to buy advertising space.

The Universal has been threatened a great many times, but we have always found that threats did not hurt us as long as we continued to make the best pictures we knew how, and played our cards on the top of the table with exhibitors.

Bulldozing the Universal is a merry little game, but the accent is largely on the bull.

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

"The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe"

1600 Broadway, - - - New York

STATEMENT

BY R. H. COCHRANE, VICE-PRESIDENT UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO.

ON Wednesday, January 17th, Mr. Lee Ochs called at my office and solicited advertising from the Universal Film Mfg. Co. for the Exhibitors' Trade Review, in which Mr. Ochs has a proprietary interest.

After listening to all that Mr. Ochs had to say, I called his attention to the fact that he had not given me any reason why the Universal Company should advertise in his publication. I likewise called his attention to the fact that unless he wanted the Universal Company to pay his publication some money for either charity or blackmail, there was nothing for our company to gain by advertising in his columns. He denied that he wanted either charity or blackmail.

He then asked me if I did not believe in reciprocity to the extent of giving advertising to the Exhibitors' Trade Review (Mr. Ochs' paper), because exhibitors pay money to the Universal Company for film rental. I replied that every exhibitor who paid money to us got full value for it; and that whenever he did not get full value, he transferred his business to some of our competitors; that I would not buy advertising space on any but business grounds; and that if we could not hold the exhibitors' business on the merit of our film we surely would not try to hold it by advertising in Mr. Ochs' publication.

THIS WAS ON WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 17th.

On Thursday, January 18th, Mr. Ochs wrote a scurrilous letter to various trade papers, making a bitter attack on the Universal Company as a whole and on the officers in particular.

From various sources the Universal Company has heard that if it did not support the Exhibitors' Trade Review, scores or even hundreds of exhibitors, would cancel their orders with Universal exchanges. I have forgotten how many thousands of dollars per week was to be taken from us. This has been threatened ever since the Exhibitors' Trade Review (Mr. Ochs' paper) first entered the field of trade papers.

The Universal Company does not believe that the Exhibitors' Trade Review is owned by exhibitors. Neither does it believe that the exhibitors of this country would approve of the methods used by Mr. Ochs to compel the Universal and other companies to buy advertising space in his paper.

Mr. Ochs, however, endeavors in every way to make it appear that the exhibitors of the country either own his paper or are backing it. For example, the letter in which he attacks the Universal was written on stationery bearing the imprint of the Exhibitors' League of America, but was mailed in an envelope bearing the imprint of the Exhibitors' Trade Review.

In his letter he rakes up an editorial which was published in the Universal's own weekly publication a year or more ago. It was an article on smutty pictures and was a part of a series of articles, the intention of which was to bring forth from exhibitors a storm of protest against such pictures. It accomplished its end, but ever since then it has been used by pro-censors as an argument for censorship. To do this they resorted to the old trick of quoting only extracts from the series, instead of the whole. Before the articles were published in our house organ we showed them in proof form to Mr. Stephen Bush, then employed on the Moving Picture World, and now working for the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and explained the campaign to him. Mr. Bush instantly saw what the plan was and pronounced it a good thing. I feel confident that Mr. Bush will bear me out in this statement, regardless of the fact that he is interested in the Exhibitors' Trade Review at the present time.

Kindly remember, Mr. Ochs' remarkable letter was written the day after the Universal refused to advertise in his paper.

The Universal's editorial, to which he takes such violent exception, was published something over a year ago. At that time, so far as I can recall, Mr. Ochs did not fly into a public fury over it and ask to have the Universal put out of business. Since then he has been elected president of the national league and has been enjoying that office for several months. But not until the day after the Universal finally refused to give him some advertising did he decide that we had insulted the exhibitors of America. On the day that he solicited advertising the Universal was all right in every respect, but overnight we had become a menace to the whole industry!

With these facts to judge by, the Universal is more than willing to let the exhibitors and the trade in general judge the case and pass their verdict against Mr. Ochs and his methods or against the Universal, as they see fit.

"JUNE MADNESS"

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama of the East and West. Story by Willis and Woods. Produced by Hobart Henley. An unconventional tale told in an unconventional way.

CAST.

Jay Sax	Roy Stewart
Martin Bellman	Wadsworth Harris
Lem Barlow	Frank Brownlee
June, his daughter	Gypsy Hart
Tom Coast	Lloyd Whitlock

IN the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love," sang the poet. The trouble with the hero of this story, written by Willis and Woods, and produced by Hobart Henley, is that, while the thoughts of every one around him seemed to be turning in this direction, his own remained fixed upon prosaic affairs. When he found his stenographer contemplating an engagement ring, and the office boy kissing a girl's picture, he could not stand it, and decided to go West, where possibly the inhabitants might have remained sane. This promising beginning has been carried out by Director Hobart Henley in a novel and interesting fashion, and runs through three reels to a conclusion which will be satisfactory to every one. The manner of its working out is as follows:

Jay Sax, junior member of the firm of Sax and Bellman, is a woman hater. Arriving at his office on the first of June he is driven nearly mad by varrious signs of love displayed by his partner and employees. On going over the mail he finds a letter from a man in the west asking if someone connected with their firm could go west and investigate his gold mine. Sax and his partner laugh at this as they are in the habit of getting letters of this sort. Later in the morning Sax's chum calls and insists that Sax act as best man at his wedding. In vain Sax hunts for an excuse, but after his friend goes, he gets the idea that there might be something in that Western gold mine. He tells his partner that he will be gone a month. Bellman has been reading in the paper about a woman bandit in the vicinity where Sax intends to go, and he warns the latter to be careful.

Sax arrives, and being thirsty, he goes into the saloon. Tom, engaged to Barlow's daughter, is standing at the bar and notices the size of the roll with which Sax pays for his drink. Sax secures a horse and starts for the Barlow ranch, while Tom also leaves town. In a lonely part of the trail a woman holds Sax up and takes all his valuables away, among them being a ring.

Tom tells June that they must be married the next day. Then he slips the ring that he took from Sax, on her finger. In the mid-afternoon, Sax reaches the Barlow place. After he has told June and her father about the hold-up, the latter suggests that they visit the mine. That evening June and Sax go out on the veranda and suddenly Sax takes June's hand. He notices his ring and demands to know where she got it. June realizes that if she tells the truth she will betray Tom, but before she has time to reply Sax accuses her of being the female bandit. Sax abruptly asks Barlow if he will lend him the money to get back to town. Barlow orders a horse for Sax. June, in the meantime, has gone into the house, written a note, left the back way with a gun concealed in her skirt and given the note addressed to Tom, to one of the punchers.

Sax bids Barlow good-by. As he passes the place where the hold-up occurred, he again is held up by a female bandit. This time she makes him dismount, and covering him with a gun tells him that he must stay there all night.

In town, Tom receives the note. He is playing cards and is forced to deal another hand, before he can escape. One of the men present discovers that he is cheating and also finds the note and reads it aloud. They realize that Tom is the female bandit and he is arrested.

June releases Sax, but he has not gone far before he finds that he cannot go on without her, so he turns back and takes her in his arms.

ALONG CAME RUTH.

NO one in front of the curtain realized what a strenuous time Ruth Stonehouse, who danced Mendelssohn's "Spring Song" before 7,000 persons at the Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles, had had during the several hours before her appearance on the stage.

Miss Stonehouse, who is playing the leading role in "Love Aflame," a feature production directed by Raymond Wells, had been chased up a mountain near Universal City by several hundred cannibals at six o'clock; had been scared out of her bungalow in Hollywood by a hydrophobic canine at seven o'clock, and then, to cap the climax, had been pursued by a motorcycle policeman while racing to the Auditorium at eight o'clock. The latter released her after securing a promise from Miss Stonehouse to appear in court for speeding on the following afternoon.

AS BAD AS THE WOMEN.

CINCINNATI has sponsored a sartorial innovation. A fashion show for men was held there this week, and the Animated Weekly cameraman was on hand to photograph the "perfect 36s" who exhibited the new clothes. Spring styles for 1917 were shown on living models, who promenaded coyly before the spectators, wearing wrist watches. The new "trench coat" was a decided hit, while brand-new features were introduced in evening dress.

MARCHING TO BATTLE.

VERY unusual pictures of the activities of the Bulgarian troops make an interesting part of Animated Weekly No. 56. These little-known soldiers are shown taking their places in the railroad train which is to transport them to the front. The road lies over a mountainous trail, and all troops and supplies have to be transported on a single-track line. The men are shown nearing Erdlitz, on their way to an engagement with the foe. Later they are seen sighting a mountain battery gun, which they have unloaded from the truck and set up in a good position.

ENDING TWO-YEAR FAIR.

IT is not often that an exhibition remains open for two years. On January 1, 1917, the "Exposition Beautiful" at San Diego was officially closed, and the event is recorded by Animated Weekly No. 56. We see the arrival of the troops for the preliminary exercises, and the gathering of a large crowd, in spite of the downpour of rain. Madame Schumann-Heink was present on the occasion, and sang "Auld Lang Syne" in her most touching manner. She was then presented with a beautiful medal in commemoration of the day. At midnight a message of peace to the world was shown as the last word of the fair, which has been one of the most successful in the history of fairs. Thousands of people who visited the beautiful grounds will be interested in the closing ceremonies as shown by the Animated Weekly.

BURYING ADMIRAL DEWEY.

THE highest honors in the nation's gift were bestowed upon Admiral Dewey at the funeral of the famous naval commander. America can never pay sufficient tribute to one of the greatest heroes of modern times, but whatever could be done to show the nation's respect and affectionate recognition of his great services was performed at the funeral ceremony, which was deeply impressive. Animated Weekly No. 56 shows the cortege as it passed in slow time through the streets. The President paid his respects tc the dead warrior and throngs of spectators stood in silent homage as the funeral train went slowly by. No one was too busy to devote a moment's respectful silence to the memory of the hero. The casket was lowered into the grave to the sound of "Taps," and with every mark of respect which the service knows how to bestow.

MADE IN AMERICA.

UNCLE SAM has gone into the business of manufacturing submarines on a large scale. The biggest undersea boat ever built in this country slipped into New London the other day, to load torpedoes and supplies for her maiden trip to Spain. She was ordered by the Spanish Government, and was constructed at Quincy, Mass., by the Electric Boat Company. After an uneventful trip through the Cape Cod Canal she came into the New London harbor flying the American flag and manned by the crew which will take her across the Atlantic to her Spanish home. Her name is "Isaac Peral," and she is commanded by Capt. Fernandez Carranze, who has made his headquarters for several months in New London while waiting for the completion of the vessels. She is about 200 feet long, and similar in type to the German U-53, which put into New London last summer. She is of 800 tons burden and can make 15 knots per hour on the surface, and 10½ when submerged. She is equipped with four torpedo tubes in the bow and carries a three-inch rapid-firing gun in the stern, which is so mounted that it can be turned against aircraft. Two 600-horsepower Diesel engines made at the Groton plant of the Electric Boat Company, supply the power when she is running on the surface. The Peral has a surface speed of over 50 per cent. in excess of the German submarine. She is manned by three officers and twenty men. She has been under construction thirteen months. She was launched at Quincy and christened by the wife of the Spanish ambassador. This, however, is not the first boat of American construction to cross the Atlantic. In July, 1915, ten boats of smaller tonnage safely made the trip. The Peral is named for the Spanish naval officer who in 1887 completed the first practical Spanish submarine.

"LOVE AFLAME"

RED FEATHER Photoplay, written and produced by Raymond Wells and adapted for the screen by Fred Myton. Featuring Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Mulhall.

A GREAT many interesting things happened during the filming of this Red Feather Photoplay, in which Ruth Stonehouse and Jack Mulhall are featured, and which was written and produced by Raymond Wells, the script being the work of Fred Myton. In the first place, Miss Stonehouse had to wear boy's clothes the greater part of the time, and she found that the usual consideration shown her was considerably diminished while the people about the studio thought that she was a member of the opposite sex. Then any number of animals, including lions, leopards, and last but not least, Charlie, the Universal elephant, were employed in the production, to the disgust of Jack Mulhall, who protested vigorously, but ineffectually, that his mother did not raise him to be an animal trainer. Also Director Wells ordered the production to imitate in every particular a village in the cannibal islands. Of course the sets were outdoor ones, and the weather had the temerity to turn cold just as they were ready. A whole harem of savage beauties, dressed in very little more than a coat of brown paint, shivered and shook through the filming of the scenes and positively envied the fate of the cannibal king who was thrown head first into the crater of a flaming volcano. The story is very original and runs as follows:

Betty meets her uncle.

King's Favorite	Fronzie Gunn
Cannibal King	Noble Johnson

The biggest of the king's warriors, having decided he wants the king's favorite, proceeds after the cave-man fashion, when a sacred volcanic mountain suddenly bursts forth in lurid flames, which, according to the cannibal customs, forces the king to accept a challenge of his supremacy.

Meanwhile, the favorite, finding the winner will be her new master, throws herself on the beach in despair. Three white traders, who have been negotiating with the natives, seize the woman, and press her into their service as they hasten their departure from the island.

Betty Mason, the pride of her father's house, whose only regret is that she was not a boy, is quite excited upon learning that her Aunt Martha and Cousin Reginald are to pay them a visit. But when she meets her sissified male relation, her opinions undergo a speedy transformation. Reginald, however, is soon deeply in love with his fair cousin and persuades his fond parent to break the news to Betty's father. The old man is delighted at the idea of his daughter settling down, but Betty raves and storms, finally declaring she will run away.

The following day consternation reigns supreme, for Betty has disappeared. The forlorn Reginald discovers a note from his charming cousin, stating she has gone West, and if he can catch her she will marry him. She is wearing her brother's clothes.

In a popular city club, three young men are having an enthusiastic dispute over the question of women's rights. Jack Calvert, the worldly wise cynic of the party, declares he could start without a cent and be in Constantinople by the sixth of November, taking the attitude that no woman could perform such a feat. The other boys echo his remarks, when an old man calls their bluff, by proposing a bet of five thousand dollars on the proposition. All are rather chagrined, but fearing the jeers of their fellow clubmen, accept the wager and get busy to ride the rods.

Betty Mason, meanwhile, has been traveling the box-car route. Hearing groans issuing from her vicinity, the girl investigates, discovering none other than our Jack Calvert, whom she startles by the question, "Are you a tramp?" In brother's gray suit, Betty also looks the part, so both are soon on very friendly terms, when a brakeman appears and orders them to move on. Acting upon the suggestion they are wondering what to do next, when a bona fide tramp accosts them, inviting the supposed tramps to join his gang. After participating in hobo hospitality, Jack announces he must be in Constantinople by the sixth, and Betty decides she will accompany him, so the two start on their long journey.

Speeding across the country, Reginald, glancing listlessly out of the car window, suddenly gets a flashing glimpse of Betty in the gray suit. Making a wild dash for the car door he is effectually blocked by the obtuse conductor, who naturally imagines the man has gone mad.

Meanwhile, Betty and Jack, having reached the wharf, learn that the steamer for Constantinople is about to sail. They smuggle aboard and stow themselves in one of the lifeboats. Later, while Betty is prowling about the deck for food, she runs into Reginald. So they make a dive for the fishing launch, lying at anchor some distance shoreward.

When hauled aboard by the king's favorite and cutthroat traders, Betty's disguise is soon detected by one of the pirates. Finding a fight next in order, Betty is in danger of forgetting her mannish role, but Jack innocently comes to the rescue, throws the ruffians overboard and orders the favorite to steer for Constantinople.

Before they can glory in their newfound liberty, a sudden squall hits the launch, it quickly goes to pieces and the shipwrecked trio are landed on the Cannibal Island. A crowd of natives gather about the shore. The King appears, recognizes his former dusky beauty, and orders all three taken to his palace.

The day following, a big feast is arranged, but when Jack and Betty realize they are considered the piece de resistance of the menu, both seriously object. The King's favorite comes to their rescue by suggesting Jack challenge the king. The sacred mountain again belches

Louise Lovely's Luxuriant Locks

By MARJORIE HOWARD

ANOTHER picture of the girl on cover, Louise Lovely who, though a Universal actress, has been loaned so frequently to the Bluebird that a program picture is a real treat. She will be seen this week in "Diamonds of Destiny," an Imp Drama, and next week in "The Outlaw and the Lady," a two-reel Bison. Harry Carey is the outlaw.

IF you have curls, prepare to show them now," is the order which seems to have been passed around by directors and studio managers to the feminine contingent of the applicants for motion picture honors. Before pictures grew big enough to engage the attention of the statisticians, nobody knew that there were so many curly-headed girls in existence. But the supply seems to be absolutely unlimited, though the demand grows from reel to reel. Sometimes the wavy-locked beauties are imported from other climes for the sake of their tresses. Miss Louise Lovely is a case in point. She came all the way from Australia, where she had made a reputation, first on the stage as an eighteen-year-old "Camille," and then in pictures in the native haunts of the kangaroo. Perhaps she read stories of the fabulous sums to be earned in this hemisphere by those whose locks wandered sufficiently from the straight and narrow. Perhaps recruiting had diminished the number of her admirers to the vanishing point. At any rate, for one reason or the other, Miss Lovely left her native land, equipped with a great many curls of large calibre, forty wardrobe trunks, and the name of Carbasse.

The last was a strategical mistake, as she found out after she had made a big hit in her first Universal picture, "Father and the Boys." What was the use of making every one talk about you, if nobody could pronounce your name? "That little Miss Something-or-other, Carbossy, Carbase, Carbassy—whatever her name is," is not the sort of conversation which leads to publicity. Anyway, how can people discuss your work or your beauty if they can't remember what you are called? Something had to be done, because everybody wanted to discuss the new screen beauty and nobody could.

Mr. Laemmle, the Universal's president, came to the rescue. "As she is so lovely, why not call her so?" he said. No sooner said than done; lovely she was and Lovely she became and has remained ever since, only more so. The air of California suits her tresses, and they have become more luxuriant than ever. She has tried their effect with the gowns of the society maid, and the rough-and-ready garments of the heroine of Western plays; and they have stood the test in every case. No matter what the weather, no matter what the temperature, they retain their watch-spring-like attributes.

Curls to the right of them,
Curls to the left of them
Curls on each side of them
Straighten and straggle.
Stormed on by wind and rain,
Bravely they curl again—

until their proud possessor has earned the reputation of being able to look beautiful under all circumstances, which for the modern motion picture heroine is as fortunate as it is unusual.

"The Forbidden Game"

Centre—Forsythe is wounded.

Right—Grace and Larry.

IMP Two-Reel Drama of the Underworld and Society. Written by Ben Cohn and produced by Harry Millarde, with Edward Hearn in the lead.

CAST.

Frank Forsythe	Edward Hearn
Grace	Fronzie Gunn
Clax	Tom Walsh
Larry	Richard Ryan

"THE FORBIDDEN GAME" was directed by Harry Millarde from a story by Ben Cohn. A peculiar thing about the production was the fact that it was put on in such a hurry that Cohn had no time to prepare a script. Millarde, however, read the synopsis of the story and saw so great a possibility in it, that he undertook to produce it without a regular continuity. No one would ever suspect the lack, from the finished picture, which is as logical and complete as any ever staged. Edward Hearn has the role of the son of a prominent jeweler, who has become the leader of a band of crooks, just for the excitement, and he does fine work in it. A feature of the picture is the expert manner in which the suspense has been worked up. The plot runs as follows:

Forsythe, supposed by society to be only a wealthy jeweler's son, is in reality a thief, having a band of crooks working with him. Forsythe only plans the operations of the gang and then recuts the stones and sells them.

His sister, Grace, and he are very devoted, but he does not wish her to visit the tenement districts, fearing she might learn something about him as this is where his rendezvous is located. She, however, visits the slums without his knowledge and here meets Larry, a reporter; when Forsythe learns of this acquaintanceship, he forbids her seeing Larry again.

Clax, the gang leader, kills a banker and Forsythe gives him a beating which so angers the former that he, with part of the gang, leaves Forsythe plotting to "get" him. He kidnaps Grace while she is on a slumming party with Larry, and the latter gives the alarm to Forsythe, who tries to find his sister.

Slim, one of the gang who has remained with Forsythe, discovers Clax and his gang; Larry with the police, and Forsythe with his gang, attempt to rescue the girl. A desperate fight takes place in which Clax and Forsythe are mortally wounded, but before Clax dies he discloses the dual life led by Forsythe.

Forsythe, dying, exacts a promise from Larry that he will let this knowledge remain a secret from Grace, leading her to believe that he was simply called in to help rescue her from the band of ruffians. Grace is inconsolable for a time, but later she finds happiness with Larry.

AGNES VERNON THROWN FROM AUTO.

FOR several days Agnes Vernon, known as "Brownie," who plays one of the leading roles in Director William Worthington's company, in the forthcoming Bluebird "The Man Who Took a Chance," was confined to her home following injuries she received when thrown from an automobile.

The members of the Worthington company were en route to a location near Chatsworth, a few miles from Universal City, when the machine in which Miss Vernon was riding suddenly plunged into a ditch. She was in the front seat and was thrown completely out of the car by the impact. Eddie Laemmle, Bill Gillis and Fred Robinson also were "spilled," but escaped with merely a few bruises.

“THE WAR WAIF”

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

HERE is a new kind of war picture, one which arouses sympathy in the heart of every spectator, no matter on which side he has taken his stand. It was written by Grace Helen Bailey, adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and produced by Allan Holubar, and the Weekly has been heralding it for several weeks, for it is really the finest thing which this maker of fine things has done, so far.

Holubar is a comer, there is no doubt of that fact. He plays the lead in this, and he chose Zoe Rae, the wonder-baby, for his tiny partner. She does emotional work in the name-part which is nothing short of astonishing for a child of her years. Holubar's direction seems to inspire her, and she loses herself in the portrayal of the role of the little waif, in a way which makes it impossible to believe that she is acting. It seems as if the camera-man must have been present at some such tragedy in Belgium, and caught the scenes which were later incorporated into a picture. This impression is deepened by the realism of the village sets. We see the sadness and destruction of war, not from the heroic standpoint of the soldier, but from the pitiful viewpoint of the innocent non-combatant. That is why this picture makes better peace propaganda than all the lectures in a Chautauqua course. A brief summary of the film tells this story.

Colonel Daw, a veteran and hero of the Boer War, regrets his uselessness in his country's present need. Crippled and living rather a lonely life in the country, while his young wife seeks the pleasures of the city, he feels neglected and cynical toward the world.

Through the request of Nurse Grey of the Red Cross Service, the colonel finally turns his home into a hospital for the wounded soldiers. Among them are two Frenchmen, Francas and a boy, who appear to be great friends. Francas, one day, tells Colonel Daw of his past life; how his wife died when their babe was tiny and how the aged grandmother had cared for the child since. Then he recited the story told by the boy there, who had tried to escape with the baby when the grandmother was killed, but while going in search of food, had lost the little one. Breaking down, Francas begs Colonel Daw to find his child and protect her. The colonel soothes the anguished soldier and consents to do all he can to discover the little girl.

UNUSUAL picture in two reels. A new kind of war drama. Story by Grace Helen Bailey. Adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and produced by Allan Holubar, with himself and Zoe Rae in the leads.

CAST.

Colonel Daw	Allan Holubar
Mrs. Daw	Irene Hunt
Zoe	Zoe Rae
The Boy	Eugene Walsh
Nurse	Nellie Allen
Grandmother	Nanine Wright
Butler	George Pearce

As he sits by the fire, gazing at the baby face of the picture given him, Colonel Daw falls asleep and dreams of the coming of Zoe, the lost infant. Suddenly awaking, he sees his wife, burdened with packages and leading a small girl by the hand. He immediately recognizes the little waif as the child of Francas. She had been brought over from France by the nurses and was found by his wife at the station amid a lot of luggage.

It is Christmas Eve. The soldiers are hilarious and Francas has recuperated wonderfully since seeing his baby. The Christmas tree is gayly decorated and Zoe flits about like a bird, distributing the many presents to the soldiers and nurses, while Colonel Daw sits with his arm about his wife in the firelight. Wistfully she is telling him that the child has awakened her love for him and that she is going to stay in the country home with him to try to make up for her past neglect. And once again, a little child has worked miracles.

ELEPHANT SCARES STAR.

IN several of the scenes in Director Raymond Wells' Universal production of “Love Aflame,” Charlie, the big elephant of the film city, plays an important role. On the day the scenes were being photographed Charlie was in a peevish humor, and he seemed to take particular delight in knocking over sets, tearing up trees and throwing clouds of dust in the air.

For some unaccountable reason, he seemed to take a sudden dislike to Ruth Stonehouse, who is starred in the production, and when the dainty little actress appeared on the scene, laid in the cannibal village, Charlie, with a snort, made a rush in the direction of the actress. However, Miss Stonehouse, who was playing the part of a boy, took immediate advantage of her wearing apparel and ran.

Since then her many friends at Universal City have been offering a wager that Miss Stonehouse can outrun any other girl at Universal City.

Dorothy's Dogs and Her Roses

FEATURED player in "Scarlet Crystal" is a home body in spite of family theatrical inheritance and the hair of a vampire.

Dorothy Davenport with her pets.

ISN'T it tragic when your two greatest pleasures in life suffer from incurable incompatibility of temperament?" asks Dorothy Davenport, the Titian-haired Universal actress, who appears in "The Scarlet Crystal," the Red Feather for February 5.

"My hobbies, outside of my profession of course, are my dogs and my garden, and yet I can never enjoy them together, for the one has to be kept forcibly from the other."

Miss Davenport's garden is a serious affair. There is something besides the ordinary amateur bed of geraniums, or row of sweet-peas. The most important part of it indeed is strictly utilitarian, and contains beds of lettuce, radishes and parsley, besides rows of peas and beans, tomatoes, a small patch of coy spring onions, a large patch of asparagus, and even more solid and homely things like turnips and beets. Almost any day, the little actress can be seen, her frock covered with a big gingham apron, and her hands protected by loose gloves, working over her vegetables, and encouraging them to shoot. She despises "fixed up," painted tools, which she declares are only fit for amateurs. Hers are very businesslike, of the best steel with practical wooden handles. She does not believe in wearing pretty cretonne things, either. She says that gardening is real work, and that one ought to dress as a real workman while engaged in it.

"I'm going to give a vegetarian dinner at the bungalow before long," said Dorothy, "and all the food will be of my own growing."

Imagine the joy of cutting your own lettuces and digging your own new potatoes, while we in the benighted East are shoveling paths to the front gate, or slipping around on frozen sidewalks! California is certainly the paradise of gardeners.

It is only when she thinks of her dogs that Miss Davenport finds any objection to having a garden. The dogs, to be sure, love it as much as she does, but the trouble is that they are so demonstrative. They can't enjoy the garden quietly, they have to just about destroy it in their affection. Young lettuces are not robust enough to play with such energetic puppies as hers. After much damage had been done, Miss Davenport had to issue a decree that the dogs were to be allowed in the garden only when some one held them on the leash.

The popular actress is a student of Luther Burbank's work with plants, and has taken a leaf out of his book—a rose leaf. She is trying to develop something quite new in roses, which shall make a floral sensation at the California flower shows, and be called by the celebrated name of Davenport. For there is no better known cognomen connected with the American stage, and Miss Davenport is the only picture representative of the famous family. She thinks a new and beautiful variety of rose would be a splendid way to perpetuate her name, and so she is constantly experimenting, and hopes soon to have a real discovery to report. What with her pets, her vegetables, her roses, and last but not least, her husband, Miss Davenport can hardly find time in the day for pictures! Nevertheless, she undertook to "vamp" for the first time in her life the other day, through five reels of "The Scarlet Crystal," and certainly got away with it wonderfully. And on the screen, too, where her natural red hair, which is just the color for vampires, is turned to a black which might be perfectly innocent.

As is well known, Miss Davenport in private life is Mrs. Wallace Reid, for she was married to the screen actor at the time when both were playing for Universal. The ceremony was performed during the filming of a picture in which the two were playing the hero and heroine, and they continued to appear opposite each other for some time afterward. Since then, Miss Davenport played many parts, but very few of them have been "vampires." Something quite new is in store for her many admirers, in her role in "The Scarlet Crystal."

The Girl with Two Mothers

NATURE gave the girl a remarkable one and opportunity gave the actress one still more remarkable.

Mary MacLaren and her really truly mother.

MARY MACLAREN was brought up by her mother to be a nice, polite little girl. She learned the rhyme by heart which tells us to "let dogs delight to bark and bite, for 'tis their nature to"; and that children should try to keep their tempers, and never, never, never allow themselves to strike one another, no matter what the provocation. Mary absorbed all this and determined to put it into practise; and yet such is the contrariness of fate, almost the first thing of any importance that she was asked to do for the camera, was to strike a young man, and full in the face at that!

Mary had already made up her mind to make sacrifices for art, so she put her whole soul, and all the strength of her very considerable young biceps into that slap, and the actor very nearly bit the dust. He made an uproar which brought the director hurrying in his direction. The director was none other than Mrs. Smalley, and she was looking perfectly delighted.

"Hurt you?" she demanded; "of course she hurt you! She's going to do it again, and just as hard as the last time. She has the very temperament that I've been looking for!"

And that was the end of maid's parts for Mary. Mrs Smalley decided to make a star of her, and when Mrs. Smalley decides to do a thing, it is just as good as accomplished. She was adapting the story "Shoes" at the time, for the screen, and she determined to put the girl, who had never done anything for the camera but carry on a card, and slap an actor's face, into the leading role. And the play was one which theatrical people call a "one part play."

"Shoes" was followed by two other successes, "Saving the Family Name" and "Wanted—A Home," both Bluebirds, and both with emotional, pathetic roles for Mary. In "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," her next feature, Mrs. Smalley has given Mary a role of light comedy character. We should have said, before seeing the picture, that this experiment would not be successful; but after her first appearance we changed our mind. The fact is, that under Lois Weber's direction, Mary MacLaren can do anything.

Mrs. Smalley is the mother of the actress, but Mary is more fortunate than most girls—she has a real mother as well, and a very dear one, to whom she is devoted. The illustration shows them together, and they are not acting their affection for each other. Mary's mother was the proudest woman in the United States when her daughter, who had hoped for a chance as an extra girl, became, overnight, a Bluebird star. She had given her consent, reluctantly, when Mary had the opportunity of dancing for a season at the Winter Garden in New York; she again gave permission when the girl asked to be allowed to try her luck at Universal City in the ranks of "extras." Now she has had her reward, and the two enjoy it together.

In "The Mysterious Mrs. M." Mary wears the frocks of sweet seventeen.

"I have a chance, at last," she says, "to wear things that really suit me. In 'Shoes' I had such an awful skirt, and those terrible old boots! In "Wanted—A Home," my principal costume was a nurse's uniform; and in "Saving the Family Name" I had to wear things that were suitable for a musical comedy actress. But in this play I can have really pretty, youthful things, and thank goodness there are hundreds of feet of film in which I don't have to cry a single tear!"

BEAUDINE CHALLENGES CHECKER PLAYERS.

THE principal diversion at Universal City for directors and actors on cloudy or rainy days, when it is impossible to work on exteriors, is playing checkers. William W. Beaudine undertook to play the game a week or two ago and was badly beaten, so he adopted the habit of cutting out the checker column of the daily papers to make a study of the different moves. As a result, he claims now to be highly proficient and is willing to meet all comers, his particular challenge being directed against William Franey, principal comedian of the Universal Joker Company, the star checker player "on the lot." Their this week's release is called "His Coming-Out Party."

"THE DEVIL'S PAY-DAY"

SCREEN version by Fred Myton of George Hivley's story, "The Toll of Vengeance." Produced by William Worthington with Franklyn Farnum and Leah Baird in the leads.

CAST.

Gregory Van Houten	Franklyn Farnum
Jean Haskins	Leah Baird
Hazel Davidson	Gertrude Aster
James Hanley	Charles Perley
Mrs. Haskins	Countess Du Cello
Farmer Haskins	Seymour Hastings

THIS Bluebird Photoplay was adapted from the novel called "The Toll of Vengeance," by Fred Myton and produced by William Worthington, as a starring vehicle for Franklyn Farnum, supported by Leah Baird. Mr. Farnum has already made a secure place for himself by his work in "Love Never Dies" and "A Stranger from Somewhere." In these plays his roles were of the lighter order, but in "The Devil's Pay-Day" he has serious work to do, and proves his versatility by the way in which he handles the heavier scenes.

The call of the Gay White Way.

The production has been staged by Director Worthington with every advantage of setting, both interior and exterior. For the outdoor scenes some of California's beauty spots were visited by the company. One particularly charming scene of gaiety was photographed at Coronado Beach during the height of the season. The bright sunshine and the summery attire of the jolly crowds make a splendid contrast for those of us who are in the grip of winter.

Miss Baird has been chosen to play the leading feminine role because of her suitability to the part. She has beauty, talent and long experience, and she brings them all to the role, which gives her an opportunity to portray most varied emotions. Mr. Farnum is admirable as the pleasure-loving, selfish young man, who wrecks his own life and those of the two women with whom it is most closely associated. There is a splendid lesson in the picture, but it has not been allowed to interfere with its first purpose—good entertainment. The story runs as follows:

When Gregory Van Houten went to the country to recuperate from the fatigue of club life and society functions, he intended to remain only a few weeks and then return to plunge into the swirl of city gaieties. But fate wills and we must obey—when Van Houten returned again to town he brought with him a country girl wife and imposed upon himself new duties and obligations.

Jean Haskins was the beautiful daughter of Farmer Haskins, who owned the place where Van Houten boarded. She was a simple child of nature, trustful and devoted to the new ideals of happiness that Van Houten brought into her young life. Farmer Haskins warned the young folks that they were storing up trouble for themselves in marrying; he told them that their lives had been so different that they would eventually find, when the freshness of their love had died away, that they could not continue happily.

Young love had its way and the Van Houtens returned to town blissfully happy. But at the first social function the Van Houtens attended, Gregory realized that his wife had not been prepared for the butterfly life. And the husband soon began, as well, to realize that his club habits were hard to break.

One of Gregory's club friends saw in the young bride a chance for a conquest. He knew she was being neglected and banked on sympathy, properly placed, to do the right amount of damage. James Hanley's attentions to Jean soon centered Van Houten's suspicions upon them, Gregory, meanwhile, turning to a woman in his own set for companionship. The inevitable happened. Upon an incident that looked worse than it really was, Gregory based cause for a divorce and won his case. Then he married the other woman, a society butterfly who offered shallow sentiment in exchange for Jean's good and wholesome love he had so ruthlessly cast aside.

Jean had waited all night.

The shock changed Jean's nature completely. From a good woman she turned into a viper, bent upon revenging herself upon the man who had so flagrantly violated his obligations and made a mockery of her love. Hanley gained his point, but in possessing himself Jean gained more of companionship than love as recompense. Jean lived to revenge herself upon her faithless husband. Years passed before Van Houten and Jean again met.

When Stanley was called away upon an extended business trip, Jean refused to accompany him, setting up as an excuse that a few months' separation would lead them to a better understanding of their position. Van Houten took advantage of a free field and Jean coyly led him on to the entanglements of a desperate infatuation. Gregory neglected the wife he had married when he divorced Jean and turned all his attention to Jean. Suddenly Hanley appeared upon the scene, and Jean arranged the way to a greater revenge than she had ever planned.

The men engaged in a personal encounter and when Hanley seemed to be getting the better of the fight, Jean fired a revolver at their struggling forms and killed Hanley. The sudden outcome benumbed Van Houten's senses. Jean placed the revolver in his hand just as the police entered, and they found Gregory bending over the prostrate form of his rival. In the trial that ensued Jean swore that Van Houten fired the shot, and her vengeance was alomst completed by the verdict of the jury that Gregory was guilty of deliberate murder.

But when the court guard goes to bring the prisoner to hear his doom, they find him dead upon the cot of his cell. The devil has paid off his last score, and Jean is left to contemplate the sad ending of her youthful romance, to realize, in years of agonizing sorrow, that her father was right.

INVOKING COPYRIGHT LAWS

STANCHFIELD & LEVY PROSECUTING UNIVERSAL LOST FILMS CASE WITH VIGOR, SECURE CONVICTIONS WHICH INVOLVE OTHERS.

THE legal proceedings instituted by the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., for the recovery of their lost film, have been the means of assisting other companies, who have also suffered in this manner, to obtain redress. The campaign is being vigorously prosecuted; several individuals against whom evidence has been obtained are constantly under surveillance, and arrests might be made at any time.

Aaron Dreyer, the shipping clerk who confessed to the theft from the Twenty-third Street Branch of the Universal Film Exchange of New York, Inc., of several thousand dollars worth of positive prints, has pleaded guilty in the second degree, thus avoiding the necessity of a trial. It is expected that sentence will be imposed upon him this month. His confession has implicated others, against whom evidence is being gathered in order to continue ridding the field of unscrupulous receivers.

Hugo Maienthau, the individual charged by the Universal with receiving from Dreyer most of the positive prints stolen by the latter, waived examination before the committing magistrate. His case was presented to the Grand Jury, which body forthwith indicted him. The trial of his case is rapidly approaching. He has been able to give considerable information concerning film dealers in his neighborhood, which information will prove of great value in the Universal's campaign to rid the field of thieves and receivers.

A complete copy of the serial "Graft," confiscated under the copyright laws from Edward Martorell, is in the possession of the United States marshal. Great difficulties are experienced by the Universal in seeking to protect themselves, as owners of the film, from the "duping" of a positive print of a motion picture film. The copyright laws in this respect seem peculiar. It is the current belief among film dealers that the copyright laws will protect the owner of the film from "duping." This belief is declared to be entirely erroneous, as has been demonstrated in the Martorell case as well as in several others. Any person in possession of a copyrighted positive print, who has not acquired the same from the owner thereof by a bona fide sale, and who is not licensed to possess or use the same, infringes the owner's copyright. The Universal Film Company has adopted a system of not selling, but only licensing the right to use their positive prints. Such license is given only to the exchanges or special representatives. Consequently, any person other than their exchanges or special representatives and the exhibitors with whom they deal, in possession of or using any such copyrighted print, does so in contravention of the Universal's copyright. The remedy, among others, lies in confiscation. Whenever, therefore, such prints are unauthorizedly in the possession of other parties, the Universal intends to exert this remedy and obtain immediate possession thereof, under the copyright laws of this country.

SIXTY DOLLARS REWARD

UNIVERSAL FILM & SUPPLY CO. OF OKLAHOMA WILL PAY FOR THE RETURN, INTACT, OF SIX REELS STOLEN FROM EXHIBITOR.

THE Universal Film & Supply Company of Oklahoma City was robbed on Sunday, December 31, and again on the following Sunday, January 7, under circumstances so mysterious that they are offering a reward of ten dollars a reel for the six reels stolen, and have sent out a notice to all of their exhibitors to be on the lookout for this film. The exhibitor from whom it was stolen has offered to pay for the re-issues, but the exchange doesn't for a moment entertain any suspicion of him, and is very anxious to locate the film without replacing it by new.

On December 31 a can of films was delivered by the express company to the Idion Theatre at Shawnee, Okla., addressed to A. B. Momand, manager. Before the theatre was opened on Sunday these films were stolen from the lobby, and the following Sunday a similar theft was committed in exactly the same manner. The first can contained Universal Animated Weekly No. 50, and a two-reel Bison entitled, "The Taint of Fear," military drama. These were stolen on December 31. The other can contained the Universal Animated Weekly No. 51, and a two-reel Rex society drama entitled "Mr. Vampire." These were stolen from the lobby of the same theatre on January 7.

The thefts were conducted so mysteriously that no clue has as yet developed, although the exchange has engaged detectives, and has the chief of police at Shawnee, and his entire force, working on the trail of the stolen films. The only useful bit of evidence so far discovered is the two empty cans which were used in the shipment of the films from the previous exhibitors to Mr. Momand. The most mysterious part of this piece of evidence is the place where it was discovered—in the back yard of Mr. Momand's theatre. The police were inclined to take this as implicating Mr. Momand, but Mr. Hensley, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, entertains absolutely no question as to the reliability of Mr. Momand.

"I would as soon trust him with a thousand dollars as I would with five cents," said Mr. Hensley. "He is as honest as the day is long, and as reliable as clock-work. It is either some employee of his house, which Mr. Momand thinks is absolutely impossible, or else some one who is in the habit of hanging around the theatre. The thefts indicate that the person who took them knew the habits and the procedure of all of the people connected with the theatre, knew when films were delivered, and when they were opened by the employees of the theatre."

So far the police and the detectives have been absolutely baffled, and it was in order to get the films themselves back, as well as to clear Mr. Momand from the slightest responsibility in the matter, that the Universal Film & Supply Company has offered a reward for the recovery of the stolen films. They offer ten dollars per reel for the return of the entire amount of film, or any part of it intact.

BABY GUIDES BLIND LAWMAKER

AN unusual task for a five-year-old is the guidance of his father throughout a 2,400-mile trip. This feat was accomplished by little Douglas Schall, who was the sole companion of his blind father on their trip from Minnesota to the National capital. Congressman Thomas D. Schall says that his son was a most efficient guide, and that he never felt the need of an older person. Douglas is shown in No. 56 of the Animated Weekly buying the railroad tickets and putting them into his father's wallet.

Bryson Buys "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" for Northwest Territory

TERRITORY on the wonderful State Rights feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," filmed by the Universal in connection with the Williamson brothers, under the direction of Stuart Paton, is disappearing from view like snow under a summer sun. Within a week or two the Moving Picture Weekly expects to be in a position to announce that all of the territory in the United States has been sold at wonderfully attractive prices. For the time being, and as an example merely of other sales, it may be interesting to cite the case of the Northwest territory, which was sold to James V. Bryson, late manager of the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, for $50,000. This territory includes Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and the fifty thousand, which, by the way, was put up spot cash, is the highest price ever paid for any State Rights feature for this territory. Mr. Bryson is to be heartily congratulated upon his purchase, which will mean, with all of the publicity and preparation which he has undertaken to put this film over in the proper manner, an investment of something like a $100,000 dollars. He is also to be congratulated upon the manner in which he obtained the rights from Mr. Laemmle, and the gentlemanly and fair and square attitude he assumed to his nearest competitor directly he had secured title. Without mentioning any names, it is only fair to Mr. Bryson to cite the circumstances under which this purchase was affected.

James V. Bryson

Mr. Bryson came to Chicago to meet Mr. Laemmle on a matter entirely unrelated to "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and it was not until he reached Chicago that his thoughts were directed toward this feature. Every one in the Windy City in film circles was talking about the record that the picture had made at the Studebaker Theatre in Chicago, and the enormous business piled up in its nine weeks' run there. Jimmie, as his friend call him, always has an ear to the ground for anything which looks like money, and talk like this certainly looked like money to Jimmie. He hustled up the operator of the exchange in Chicago, and induced him to show him the picture the first thing in the morning, before the rest of Chicago was fairly awake. Then he went to Mr. Laemmle at his hotel, and never left his side until the deal had been put over, and a certified check from Mr. Bryson deposited in Mr. Laemmle's hand. Fast work was required because Bryson knew that two other bidders were in the field, and that one of them was in the Chicago exchange at that moment also with a certified check in his hand, and he knew he had to bid over him and get Mr. Laemmle's decision quickly. And this is exactly what he did. Directly he had done so, however, he went to his competitor and told him that, in view of the circumstances, and of his desire to retain the friendly relations which he had always enjoyed, he would be pleased to turn over any part of the rights to the picture which this gentleman would accept, not because he needed the money for it, but merely because he realized that this was an investment opportunity of a life-time, and the competition had been so keen that he felt the other man was entitled to a portion of the contract.

That is the kind of a man James V. Bryson is.

There is not a shadow of a doubt that "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" will be the biggest proposition ever put over in the Northwest territory, and he is assured at the start-off of the good wishes not only of the entire Universal organization, but even of his competitors in his own territory.

Mr. Bryson has been in New York for nearly a week getting together all of the material which he required, and the size of his orders has opened the eyes of the Supply Department at 1600 Broadway. He is equipping his campaign with a lavish hand, and nothing which can be desired to put this film over right, is lacking. He will open offices not only in Minneapolis, but in Milwaukee and Fargo as well, and it is the present intention to work at least ten copies of the picture through the territory.

Mr. Bryson is a hustler. After a long association with Mr. Laemmle in the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, he was elected president of the Northwest Motion Picture Equipment Company, with offices in the Pantages Theatre Building, Minneapolis. He will retain his connection with this company, and also will use these offices as the headquarters of his amusement enterprises.

Mr. Bryson was much impressed, during his New York visit, by the tremendous success of the undersea picture at the Broadway Theatre.

AUTHOR FORBES LINDSAY VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

FORBES LINDSAY, the well-known author and traveler, was among the distinguished visitors who were entertained at Universal City this week. One of the first persons he met at the motion picture plant was George Bronson-Howard, one of America's best-known young authors, who at present is directing some of his own stories for screen presentation.

Lindsay, who commenced to write fiction when he was a schoolboy at Rugby, first became known through his juvenile books, among the most popular juvenile called "Ralph Somerman Adventurer," "Daniel Boone, Backwoodsman," and later another popular juvenile being "Ralph Somerday at Panama." His short stories in the magazines attracted wide attention. For several years Lindsay was in the government service and while serving Uncle Sam wrote numerous articles on the reclamation service, the forest reserve and material concerning Panama and the Indian Reservations.

Among others of Lindsay's well-known works are "Panama, the Isthmus and the Canal," "Panama, the Canal and the People," "India, Past and Present," and "The Philippines."

Lindsay was greatly impressed by the magnitude of the Universal's Pacific Coast studios, and while at the plant met many of the leading directors and players. He plans to write a series of articles on the motion picture industrv for several of the leading American magazines.

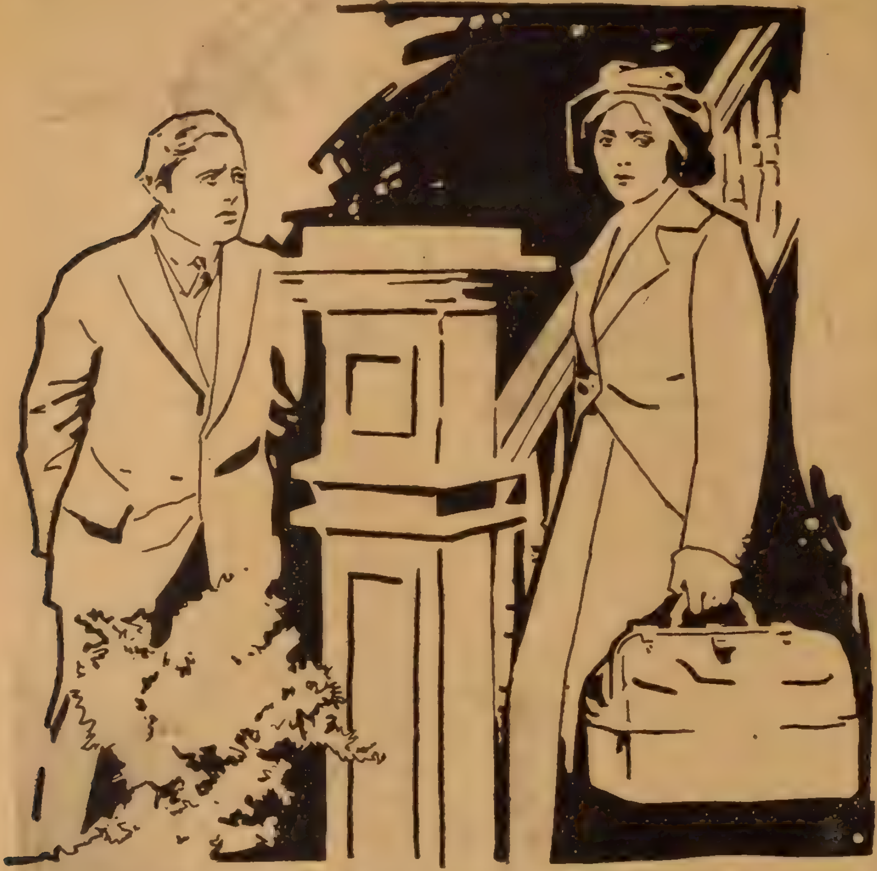
"Life's Pendulum"

IMP drama of society and the underworld in two reels, written and produced by Robert Leonard with himself and Hazel Buckham in the leads.

CAST

Bob	Robert Leonard
Hazel	Hazel Buckham
Dart	Harry Carter
Betty	Betty Schade



Bob sees Hazel in the light of her explanation and forgives her.

THIS Imp Two-Reel Drama, written and produced by Robert Leonard, is the story of a girl who wanted to "go straight," and is hindered in her intention by the machinations of the man with whom she has been associate in her criminal life, and who has no sympathy with her aspirations. A real man comes into her life, and her reformation is completed.

Hazel, a girl who has been living a vile life, becomes tired of it, and seeks an honorable position as maid. The leader of the gang to which Hazel had belonged, was Dart, known as the Earl of Sair when moving about in better society. This fellow had managed to gain the confidence of the wealthy family for whom Hazel worked. He also won the hand of Betty, their daughter. Betty's brother is Bob, a good-hearted fellow. Hazel secretly raises her eyes to him and falls in love with him. Bob, on the other hand, is favorably impressed with the new maid, unaware of her former mode of life.

Hazel is not familiar with this latest of Dart's intrigues, and she is terrified when she meets her recent companion in crime posing as a nobleman and deceiving a good but vain girl. Dart tries to win Hazel back as his confederate. Failing, he threatens that he will send her brother to jail if she reveals his identity.

Knowing the pain and shame that her family would have to endure, and the probability of losing the man she loves, and her brother, if she informs the authorities, she adopts a clever scheme. Seeing that Betty is entering the room, she allows Dart to kiss her. The sister breaks off the engagement and explains things to Robert, who heretofore has trusted Hazel implicitly.

Dart returns to his old haunts and shortly afterward is killed in a fight with the police. Robert reads in the papers of Dart's double life and he shows the paper to Hazel. She can no longer restrain her emotion. She explains why she allowed Dart to caress her. Robert forgives her, and happiness follows for all.

FRISCO FOILS CENSORS.

SAN FRANCISCO has had its wrestle with the censors and the people have once more conquered over blue laws and medieval censorship. The petition to the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, signed by a vast number of the voters of the city and county of San Francisco, has just been received by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and in order that it should do the most good, has been turned over to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to do with as they see fit. The petition contains over ten thousand names and is a very bulky and formidable-looking affair. It accomplished the purpose for which it was intended, and the photoplay public of San Francisco is no longer in danger of having its photoplays pre-digested beforehand.

Following is the full petition:

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco:

We, the undersigned, electors of the City and County of San Francisco, respectfully request your Honorable Body not to enact any legislation or regulations which discriminate against the motion picture industry as against other forms of amusement.

We further petition your Honorable Body to repeal any and all existing ordinances provided for the censorship of motion pictures.

We submit that censorship is un-American, unjust, oppressive and is a curtailment of our guaranteed liberty.

We are more competent to judge for ourselves and children what is proper amusement or entertainment for them than any commission which you would designate to perform this function for us.

Two Universal Parties

Fourth Annual Supper and Dance, and Carl Laemmle's Fiftieth Birthday

LAST week was so full of parties and dances for the Universal people that those so unfortunate as to have no connection with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company accused the elect of a continuous celebration.

On Saturday night, January 13, the officers and directors of the Universal tendered to their employees and their friends the Fourth Annual Supper and Dance. It marked the opening of Reisenweber's enlarged restaurant at Columbus Circle, New York. Although the quarters were none too large to accommodate the 950 celebrants, arrangements had been so perfected by the Supper Committee that every one had an excellent time, and the Fourth Annual will be remembered as one of the best. Albert Tuchman, secretary to the General Manager, and chairman of the Supper Committee, deserves credit for his untiring and effective work in making these arrangements. The attractive souvenir dance orders, and the various announcements and tickets, were designed by Nat G. Rothstein.

Immediately after the close of the party, however, Mr. Laemmle stipulated that next year a larger hall was to be engaged, and the date and place were settled on the spot. The next day a contract was signed for it, assuring plenty of floor room for the Fifth Annual affair.

The other happy Universal occasion was the celebration of Carl Laemmle's fiftieth birthday, which took place on Tuesday night, January 16, at the Cinderella, Eighty-sixth Street and Lexington Avenue. Elaborate preparations had been made for a wonderful time, and it was the intention to surprise Mr. Laemmle. This intention was so cleverly contrived by his friends that he supposed he was going to the Cinderella to meet a noted English author, and the surprise he received when he walked in the door was one which he will never forget to his dying day. Nearly a hundred of his Universal friends, and a score of friends of his childhood from Laupheim, Oshkosh, New York and Chicago, were gathered there to do him honor on his fiftieth birthday, and they did not stop this pleasurable exercise until the milkman reminded them of home. In other words, it was no place for a newly-married man.

Of course, there was a cake, and it had fifty candles burning happily on it. Mr. Laemmle carved the first piece with a huge knife, and gave it to Ernest Einstein, whose health he had previously pledged in a glowing tribute to this friend of his youth. Among the others from Laupheim who were present were I. N. Landauer, Louis Friedberger, I. M. Noerdlinger, Albert Noerdlinger of Philadelphia, Sam Einstein of Attleboro, Mass., and Leo Hirschfeld.

Hy Mayer, the celebrated cartoonist of the Universal Animated Weekly, acted as toastmaster, and introduced some of the best vaudeville talent to be seen on any of the New York stages. As was fitting, a moving picture was taken of the affair, and a testimonial engraved in gold letters, and bearing the picture and the signature of every man present was presented to the president, and now adorns the most conspicuous place in his office at 1600 Broadway. Here's hoping we are all present at the celebration of the full century anniversary of Carl Laemmle.

"FAKING FAKERS"

L-KO
Komedy

Two Reels. Directed by J. A. Howe, and featuring Phil Dunham with Lucille Hutton in the unusual surroundings of an amusement park.

HERE is an L-Ko Komedy staged in one of the big amusement parks. Southern Californians will recognize it. Director J. A. Howe cast Lucille Hutton as a nymph in a bathing suit, Phil Dunham as the target of a ball-throwing concession, and Myrtle Sterling as Mabel Carryflesh, a lady who believed that there could not be too much of a good thing. Then he took them all out to the park, and had somebody leave some one a legacy of $50,000, all neatly packed in a black leather bag. That was all the plot they needed, and things immediately began to happen, continuing uninterruptedly for two thousand feet. This is what it was all about.

Springboard Sally is the envy of the fish, and she and Mabel Carryflesh pull all the sightseers to their side-show. Phil and Charlie, in love with Sally, are in despair when they hit upon a plan to try to get her into their booth. They make love to her until Phil opens and reads a telegram addressed to the peerless one. In it Messrs. Takeing Ways, attorneys-at-law, inform the diver that she is the heiress to $50,000, left by her aunt.

To steer Charlie from her, Phil hits on the plan to rewrite the telegram, making Miss Carryflesh the heiress, and when Charlie sees this, sure enough, straightway to Rev. Dr. Jones do he and the weighty one march. Then, when he discovers that Sally is the heiress, he hates Phil until that gentleman learns the divine one already has a husband, in a strong man. Sally, informed of her legacy, takes a satchel all filled with greenbacks, over to his tent, the disconsolate Phil following and receiving the surprise of his career on learning that she is already wed. Consternation follows when he grabs the loot and is off. The entire outfit of side-shows give chase and some funny scenes follow, notably when the chasers take to the chute-the-chutes, after the chase. Phil finally succumbs when the valise with the coin is taken from him by the proud Sally, and she pins a rose upon his manly chest as he reclines in peace in the amusement park, where most of the chase is staged.

L-KO NOTES.

MISS ALICE HOWELL, the L-Ko's feature comedienne, has just returned from her two-weeks' vacation which she spent midst the hills and dells of Bear Valley.

Under J. A. Howe's direction, Phil Dunham has completed a picture in which that droll character stands out pre-eminent, and which marks him as the best wall-paper hanging comedian in the world.

Owing to the inclement weather, Mr. J. G. Blystone, director general of the L-KO, has for the time being put his circus picture on the shelf and is starring Alice Howell in a picture which calls for interior setting.

Fatty Voss, under the direction of J. G. Blystone, has completed a picture that sets this fat comedian off to great advantage. The story, which was written by Mr. Blystone, contains some novel situations. Events of the day have been burlesqued in the picture, but it took a Blystone touch to make the burlesque unoffensive.

Craig Hutchinson is having Dan Russell put the finishing touches to his six-day bicycle picture. In order to get the proper effect of a circular track, it was necessary for Frank Ormston, the technical director, to get the plans from the architect that builds the six-day track at Madison Square Garden, New York City. Besides Mr. Russell's ability as a comedian he has shown himself to be a man of courage, declining to let anybody double for him when it came to that portion of the picture which made it necessary for him to smash through a break-away wall, while riding on his bicycle.

Joe Moore, the brother of Owen, has been cast in Alice Howell's new picture. He will assume the role of juvenile, also husband.

Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton are being starred in a new picture under the direction of J. A. Howe.

Dynamite is being used quite extensively on the L-KO lot. Last Thursday night, in order to get the effect of a bomb being thrown from a Zeppelin, and also the result, it was necessary for J. G. Blystone to blow up an entire street set. Even the approximate cost of this set cannot be accounted for, as on three different occasions within the past month the winds have blown it to the ground. Some excitable resident of Hollywood, upon hearing the explosion, turned in a fire alarm.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO.—A new idea has been sprung on the Motion Picture industry in Canada.

For some time there has been an active movement in this country for a National Association covering all Canada, combining together the Exchangemen, Exhibitors and Operators in one body.

To further this idea, the Publicity Service Department of the Canadian Universal Film Company of Toronto is conducting a campaign in their trade paper, "The Bulletin," for a Canadian Film Directory. Coupons are printed in the magazine which show the name and address of the member of the industry, his occupation, birthplace, experience, etc., and when all this data is in and collected, it will be published in the shape of a list, which will be available for reference to all manufacturers and employers of skilled labor, as far as the Moving Picture industry is concerned.

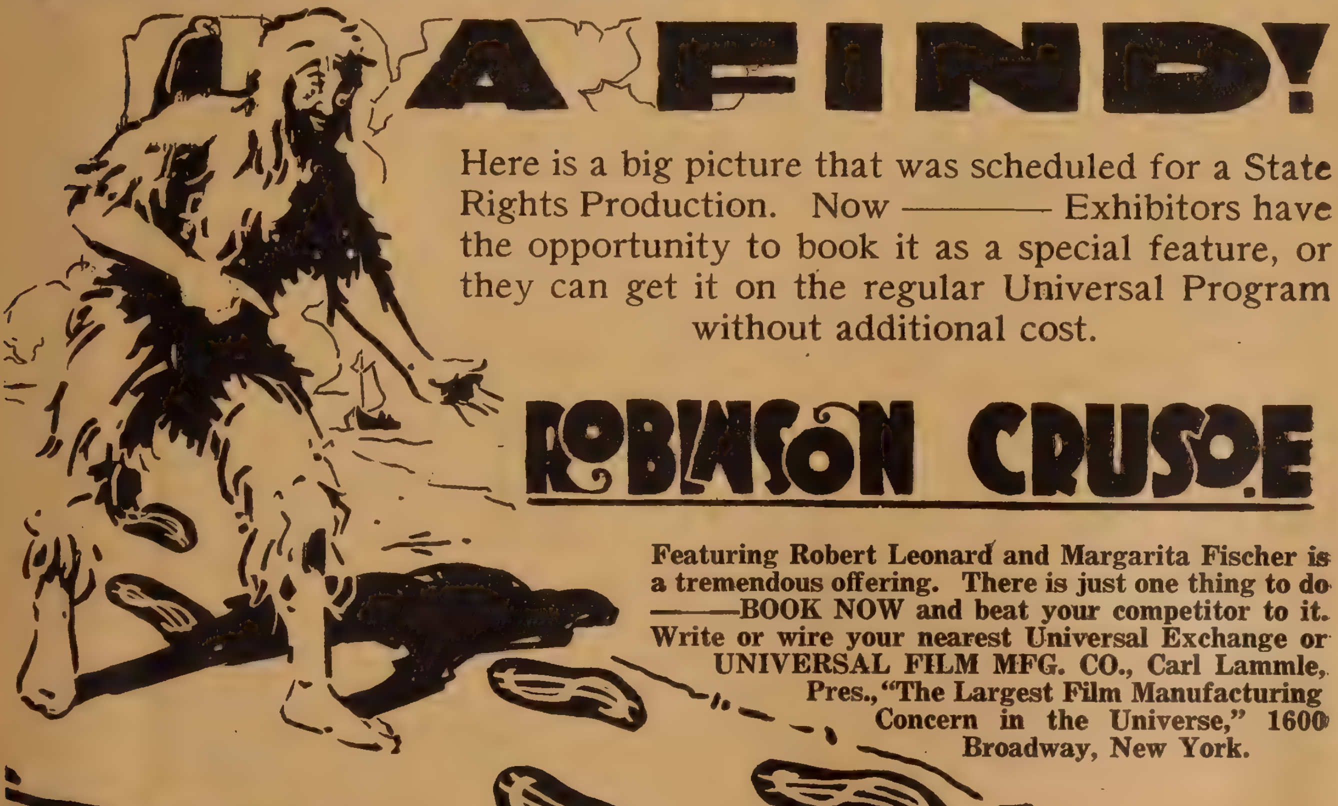
Moreover, it will present a splendid list upon which to do the work as far as the National Organization is concerned.

When interviewed on the subject, W. A. Bach of the above department stated that the results already attained were well up to his expectations and that he had already been in communication with the various Operators Unions and Exchanges, and all had promised their support. This will be the first complete list of the Canadian industry ever made.

The latest Joker comedy release, "When Damon Fell for Pythias," was viewed by Mr. R. Roberts of the Regent Theatre in the projection room of the Canadian Universal Film Company and booked it for a week's run at that theatre. The Regent Theatre Toronto, compares very favorably with the Rialto of New York, where this same comedy had a previous week's run.

Mr. McKenney, manager of the Bluebird Photoplays Department of Toronto, reports that the special release "Robinson Crusoe," with Bob Leonard, is receiving a very enthusiastic reception and he has closed some very good bookings up to the present time, even before the screening.

Mr. Jules Levine, manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company in Vancouver, succeeded in putting over some very extensive publicity for Bluebird films in both Vancouver and Victoria. Half pages of space were used by the houses running these photoplays with very excellent results, it is reported.



A FIND!

Here is a big picture that was scheduled for a State Rights Production. Now ——— Exhibitors have the opportunity to book it as a special feature, or they can get it on the regular Universal Program without additional cost.

ROBINSON CRUSOE

Featuring Robert Leonard and Margarita Fischer is a tremendous offering. There is just one thing to do ———BOOK NOW and beat your competitor to it. Week after week the Universal Animated Weekly draws the crowds; bolsters the otherwise weak show; gets them coming in on that dull day that every Exhibitor is up against; it is the big world newspaper of the screen.

Through a novel sales plan it can be booked separately. It is released on the regular Universal Program, and Exhibitors who take the entire Universal Service get the WEEKLY without additional cost. To those Exhibitors who do not use the complete Universal Service there is a slight advance.

BUT IT IS WORTH THAT . . . . . . FOR IT WILL PACK YOUR HOUSE AT EVERY PERFORMANCE. Get in touch with any one of the 73 Universal Exchanges, or write direct to the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY, 1600 Broadway, New York.

"The Purple Mask," Episode 6

EPISODE SIX of the super-serial is entitled "The Silent Feud" and takes the chief players to a Balkan principality.

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Detective Paul Kelly	Francis Ford
Mrs. Van Nuys	Jean Hathaway
Pete Bartlett	Pete Gerald

The aeroplane in the last episode had providentally fallen into a giant tree, so its occupants were able to make their way to the ground, before they were seriously burned in the flaming machine. Farmers in the vicinity, attracted by the glare, come to the rescue of Phil Kelly and Pat, bearing them to shelter, and the pilot of the aeroplane returns on foot to the hangar. In a few hours Pat and Kelly are able to make their way to their individual homes in Paris.

There is now an interval of quiet, while Kelly is constantly worried about Pat's next move in the campaign of humiliation she is waging against the famous detective. Very unexpectedly they meet again in the small principality of Dufrane where King Fergus has aroused the displeasure of his subjects through his selfish determination to thwart the wishes of his late queen.

Upon her death the queen had bequeathed a valuable necklace to be sold and the proceeds distributed among the peasant and poor of Dufrane. The king has decided to sell the jewels and keep the money. He has brought Phil Kelly to the palace to fathom plots against the throne. Prince Angus covets the jewels and is plotting to secure them while Duke Hesta is a friend of the people and would have the queen's will obeyed.

To help in the cause of the People's League, organized by Duke Hesta in behalf of the peasants, Pat has been brought from Paris to secure the jewels and see that they are disposed of in the manner the queen had willed. Duke Hesta has the combination to the king's safe, where the jewels are known to repose. He gives this combination to Pat, and by adroit maneuvers the girl obtains entrance to the king's library.

Watching her opportunity she unlocks the safe, secures the jewels and takes them to a diamond merchant who has declared himself always ready to pay cash for the gems immediately they are brought in to him. With the money in her possession, Pat goes to the meeting place of the People's League and turns the proceeds into the treasury. Having accomplished her mission she goes to the palace to secure her passports.

The episode ends with Pat in the palace library, where she is confronted by the king.

"The Boonton Affair"

BISON Two-Reel Mountain Drama, written and directed by King Baggot.

Mary Hatfield	Irene Hunt
Jack Walton	King Baggot
Bill Hatfield	Frank Smith
Jim Calahan	Jack Newton

Mary Hatfield, a moonshiner's daughter, resents the advances of Jim, another moonshiner who determines to have revenge. Jack Walton, a revenue officer, arrives.

The moonshiners with Mary's father see her talking to a stranger and rush back to the cabin. Taking Jack for a revenue officer, they throw moonshine into his face, beat, gag and bind him, locking Mary up in an adjoining room.

Doby, a friend, sees Jack's horse, becomes suspicious and returns to town for help. Mary continues to pound on the door. Finally she hears the men declare that they are going to take Jack out and string him up. Then Doby, at the point of a gun, holds the men up, freeing Mary, who frees Jack.

Jack determines to ride across the hills for a doctor for her father, who is hurt. When he returns the father gives him his daughter.

"THE HERO OF BUNKO HILL."

Victor Comedy.

Written and produced by Capt. L. T. Peacocke.

CAST.

Bertie Bellew	Billy Musgrove
Casaga	Liane Carrera
George	Al McKinnon
Joe	Eugene Walsh

Bertie Bellew, a leading man, is apprised by his manager that the company is almost bankrupt and that some means must be devised to raise some funds. George and Joe, two of the actors in the troupe, are sent out ostensibly to solicit funds for old soldiers, but their real intention is to abscond with the money.

Bertie has been carrying on a mild flirtation with Casaga, a pretty girl who lives with a wealthy aunt; George and Joe call at her home and the aunt tearfully tells them of her only son who had been a soldier. In the photo they see a strong resemblance to Bertie and persuade him to impersonate the lost son.

He visits a dentist and has his teeth removed; he has his body tattooed only to be revealed as a fraud.

"NELLIE, THE FIREMAN'S DAUGHTER."

Victor Comedy (Split Reel).

Eddie, the brave fire laddie, loves Nellie, the captain's little daughter. Lee, a cowardly villain, has designs on the girl. With the help of two bearded cutthroats, the villain abducts the maiden and takes her to the den of crime. Eddie wades his way through blood and fire, and fights his way into the villain's lair. He is overpowered by the cutthroats while the villain looks on and snarls, "Tie the cutup while I go and marry the girl."

The cutthroats carry the girl downstairs; Eddie bursts his bonds, and from the window throws a rope to the sidewalk and lassoes the villain's revolver. He then shoots six blocks down the street, and each of his five bullets ring the fire gong.

In the meantime, the Justice of the Peace, at the point of a revolver, is marrying the villain and the innocent girl. The hero escapes from the den and joins the fire department, which is speeding toward the Justice's office. The girl is rescued in the nick of time, however, as the wicked villain outwits the hero. He jumps into a cab and blows himself up.

"WHY, UNCLE!"

Nestor Comedy.

Story by Bess Meredyth.
Scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr.
Produced by Louis Chaudet.

CAST.

Harry	Eddie Lyons
His Uncle	Fred Gamble
Milton	Lee Moran
Lizette	Priscilla Dean

Harry and his uncle have wonderful heads "the morning after." The uncle receives a telegram stating that his nephew Milton, whom his mother describes as an angel, is coming to visit them. The uncle tells Harry, who imagines Milton to be a little angel.

Now in fact, Milton at that hour of the morning has just finished a very interesting game of poker, and come out winner. On his way to his compartment he meets Lizette of the Follies, flirts with her, and she hands him her card telling him to call. Milton, who imagines his uncle and cousin are of the angelic type, dolls up to meet them on their own ground.

Complications arise when each keeps up his acting "role," a climax being reached when "uncle" is discovered at supper with three blonde beauties. Explanations make everything all right.

"THE GOLD LUST."

Big U Drama.

Two miners come across a hut where a man is dying. He has been shot by his partner, a half-breed. The man tells the partners where they can find gold. They go there, and to their astonishment it is true. Jim, one of the partners, wishes to get all of the gold for himself. So he attempts to poison the other man by filling his bottle with poisoned water. During a fight with the half-breed the bottle is broken. Jim, after he has left the bottle with his partner, strolls away from the camp. Realizing what he has done, he starts back to try and save his partner. Upon his arrival, he sees that the bottle has been broken, and his partner has not even taken a sip. Jim says nothing, but works fifty-fifty ever after.

"SOME BABY."

Victor Novelty (Split Reel).

Gertrude, a very young hopeful, practically demonstrates her love for flowers by chewing up half a dozen roses—or attempting to. Then she proceeds, after the same dare, to smoke a pipe, smears herself with jam and, to do the job up brown, indulges in a mud-bath, followed by a conventional one.

Dan Willis is the dominating mind of a bunch of crooks who specialize in diamonds. Corey Houston, a well-known diamond importer purchases several wonderful gems, according to newspaper announcements.

A fight in a saloon has resulted in an innocent young chap being accused of murder. Drunk, he sprawls over a table while the real murderer skillfully places his revolver in his hand. "One squealer less," say gang members on seeing that "Shifty," the murdered man, is dead on the floor, unmindful of the fact that evidence for the crime has been shoved upon the boy Paul's shoulders. Peggy, in the saloon, tries to arouse him, to make his escape, but they are discovered by the police and taken into custody.

Jane Lowe, a crook through circumstances, learns of her brother's arrest on a murder charge, just as she determines to "go straight."

Willis pushes his advantage and she says she will turn one more deal, on his promise to free Paul. The deal consists of stealing the diamonds from Houston. For the purpose, Jane takes a suite in Corey's apartment. He is attacked by crooks in the park (of course, they are Willis' men), and Jane, arriving in her machine at the psychological moment, takes him home. A friendship ensues, meanwhile the date of Paul's trial for murder being set.

Entirely in Houston's good graces, Jane asks if she can bring her uncle to see the gems he has shown her, the ones Willis wants. As he is called from the room, Willis, orders her to put them in the wine glass. He holds her brother's plight over her, and she obeys. Houston returns to the room and begins the search just as officers surround the house, and Jane turns over her wine glass, thus depositing the gems on the table cover. Willis is the murderer it is discovered, and Houston, Paul and Jane find happiness together.

"THE DIAMOND THIEVES."

Imp Detective Drama.

With Robert Leonard and Margarita Fischer.

There is a mysterious flooding of the American market with gems of astonishing brilliancy and a value which alarms the Kimberly interests which control the output. Unable through their own efforts to locate the new stones, they secure the services of Westerly, a famous American detective.

The detective has very little trouble in finding a clue, and he soon manages to run to earth a girl, Shedah. His hardest task follows, as she is always guarded by her two Hindoo servants. Only through his double, disguised to represent himself, is he able to shadow Shedah to the sacred laboratory, where the alchemist manufactures the diamonds.

He is found and a fight takes place. The detective is battered out of the place, as Shedah destroys the laboratory with all its secrets. They elude the detective and his assistants for some time.

Westerly, goaded by his temporary failure, determinedly traces the Hindoo party to another seaport and at length rounds them up at a fashionable ball. Again they escape, and again they are followed to their private yacht. Here the Hindoos are overpowered and as the alchemist is about to be taken in the custody of the law, he slips from his pocket a small bottle of poison and drinks it. A minute later he drops to the floor dead, taking with him the secret of the manufacturing of the fake diamonds.

"IN NORTH CHINA, AS SEEN BY DR. DORSEY."

Powers Educational (Split Reel).

With Dr. Dorsey, another enticing trip to China is taken, showing the caravan from Mongolia, the Chinese at work, their street vocations, an outdoor barber and a boy shoemaker. Other interesting views showing the shoeing of a mule, the making of willow chairs, the making of joss-sticks, rope-making, peddling coal, baking sweet potatoes and a real candy cart make the film of unusual interest.

"THE WAR WAIF"

"IT'S CHEAPER TO BE MARRIED."

Victor Comedy.

Scenario by W. Warren Schoene.
Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Bill	Ralph McComas
Fritz	Milton Sims
Lizz	Eileen Sedgwick

Fritz eats the best of the lunch. Bill, his partner, a bachelor, goes to "Hash House Kate's" for a square meal. Lizz waits upon him and is smitten with Bill's appearance.

Bill reads an article in the newspaper warning the bachelors of New York that a heavy bachelor tax has been levied. Determined not to pay any such tax, Bill begins to regard Lizz with great interest. They later are married.

Fritz receives a letter informing him and Bill that their uncle has just died, had willed the entire fortune to either nephew, Bill or Fritz, who had the most money at the time of the reading of the will. Fritz hides the letter and determines not to tell Bill about it.

But, when he learns he is married, he figures their accounts and has the most money. Fritz lights the money with his pipe, just as the tax collector arrives, levies an awful fine because he is a bachelor and Bill is at last the wedded winner.

"HIS COMING-OUT PARTY."

Joker Comedy.

Written by Karl Coolidge.
Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

CAST.

Gale	Gale Henry
Bill	William Franey
Milt	Milburn Moranti
Lillian	Lillian Peacock

Gale strenuously objects to having her husband, Bill, play cards, and when Milt calls and wants Bill to take a little walk with him, she tells him there is nothing doing.

Bill, with a royal flush tucked in his vest pocket, pretends that he is very sleepy, and that after he has his bath he is going to bed. But he manages to conceal his clothes under his bathrobe, puts them on and departs.

Lillian, Milt's wife, tells Gale that Milt spends all his time gambling, and Gale suggests that they cure him. They do, after various experiences in which the tables are turned.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE No. 6.

The Universal Screen Magazine, issue No. 6, begins with the making of Old Glory, and shows every step in the process as it is conducted at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Here the flags which are used in our navy are made. The stripes are cut, sewn together by machine, the union added to the corner, the stars cut out by another machine, and stitched in place. Lastly, the flag is pressed and the rope and canvas heading added. Then the completed banner is hoisted.

Next comes the Magazine's travelogue, which is a trip through the residence section of the city of New York, showing the homes of some of America's most famous sons, such as Charles Schwab, the steel baron; Henry Frick, the steel magnate, and many others.

Beauty hints come next, posed by Catherine Calvert. She illustrates in graphic fashion the care of the hair. Egg inspection by the New York City Department of Health makes a timely subject, of great interest to housewives. The process of candling eggs is shown, and many other interesting views of the preservation of the high priced culinary necessities.

Animated sculpture, one of the greatest art novelties of the screen, the work of Willie Hopkins, closes this issue. We see the Evolution of Eve in Clay, from the celebrated lady of the Garden of Eden, to the present siren of the beach.

Powers Comic Cartoon (Split Reel)—

Mr. Fuller Pep has every intention of obeying wifie when she goes to the country on a much-needed vacation, but he decides that a flivver will bring him the very best of company. And it does—also mild and varied flirtations and lots of experience. He at last succeeds in purchasing a nutchaser, a sadder and a wiser hubby.

BABY WON'T CRY.

ONE of the most sought-after babies in pictures is Mary Elizabeth Murphy, the tiny daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Murphy of Hollywood. Murphy is assistant director for the Universal Joker Company, and is one of the oldest employees of the institution.

Little Mary Elizabeth not only plays in comedy, but in serious dramas. It is usually difficult to persuade the baby to cry, which is necessary at times, as she has a sunny, happy disposition and much prefers the laughter of the comedy to the tears of the drama.

"LOVE AFLAME."

forth volumes of fire, while the bloodthirsty natives loudly yell for the fight. As Jack quickly runs up the mountain to meet the king, with Betty following a close second, a small launch draws to shore and Reginald sallies forth, totally ignorant of his whereabouts.

A moment later, after a short but terrific battle, Jack hurls the King over the rim of the crater. As Betty hurries to his side she catches sight of Reginald, and hastily suggests they descend by the opposite route.

Securing Reginald's boat, they reach Constantinople by the sixth. The other boys are found, each with a lady close at hand. Explanations follow; a banquet is in progress, when Mr. Mason introduces his daughter Betty. Jack the cynic, gets the surprise of his life, and is more than delighted to change his views concerning all womankind in general and his little pal in particular, who promises to tramp by his side forever.

McDERMOTT DESIGNS SETS.

ONE of the reasons why John McDermott, one of the youngest directors affiliated with the Universal Company, makes such good time with his productions is that he designs all of the sets he requires for each photoplay.

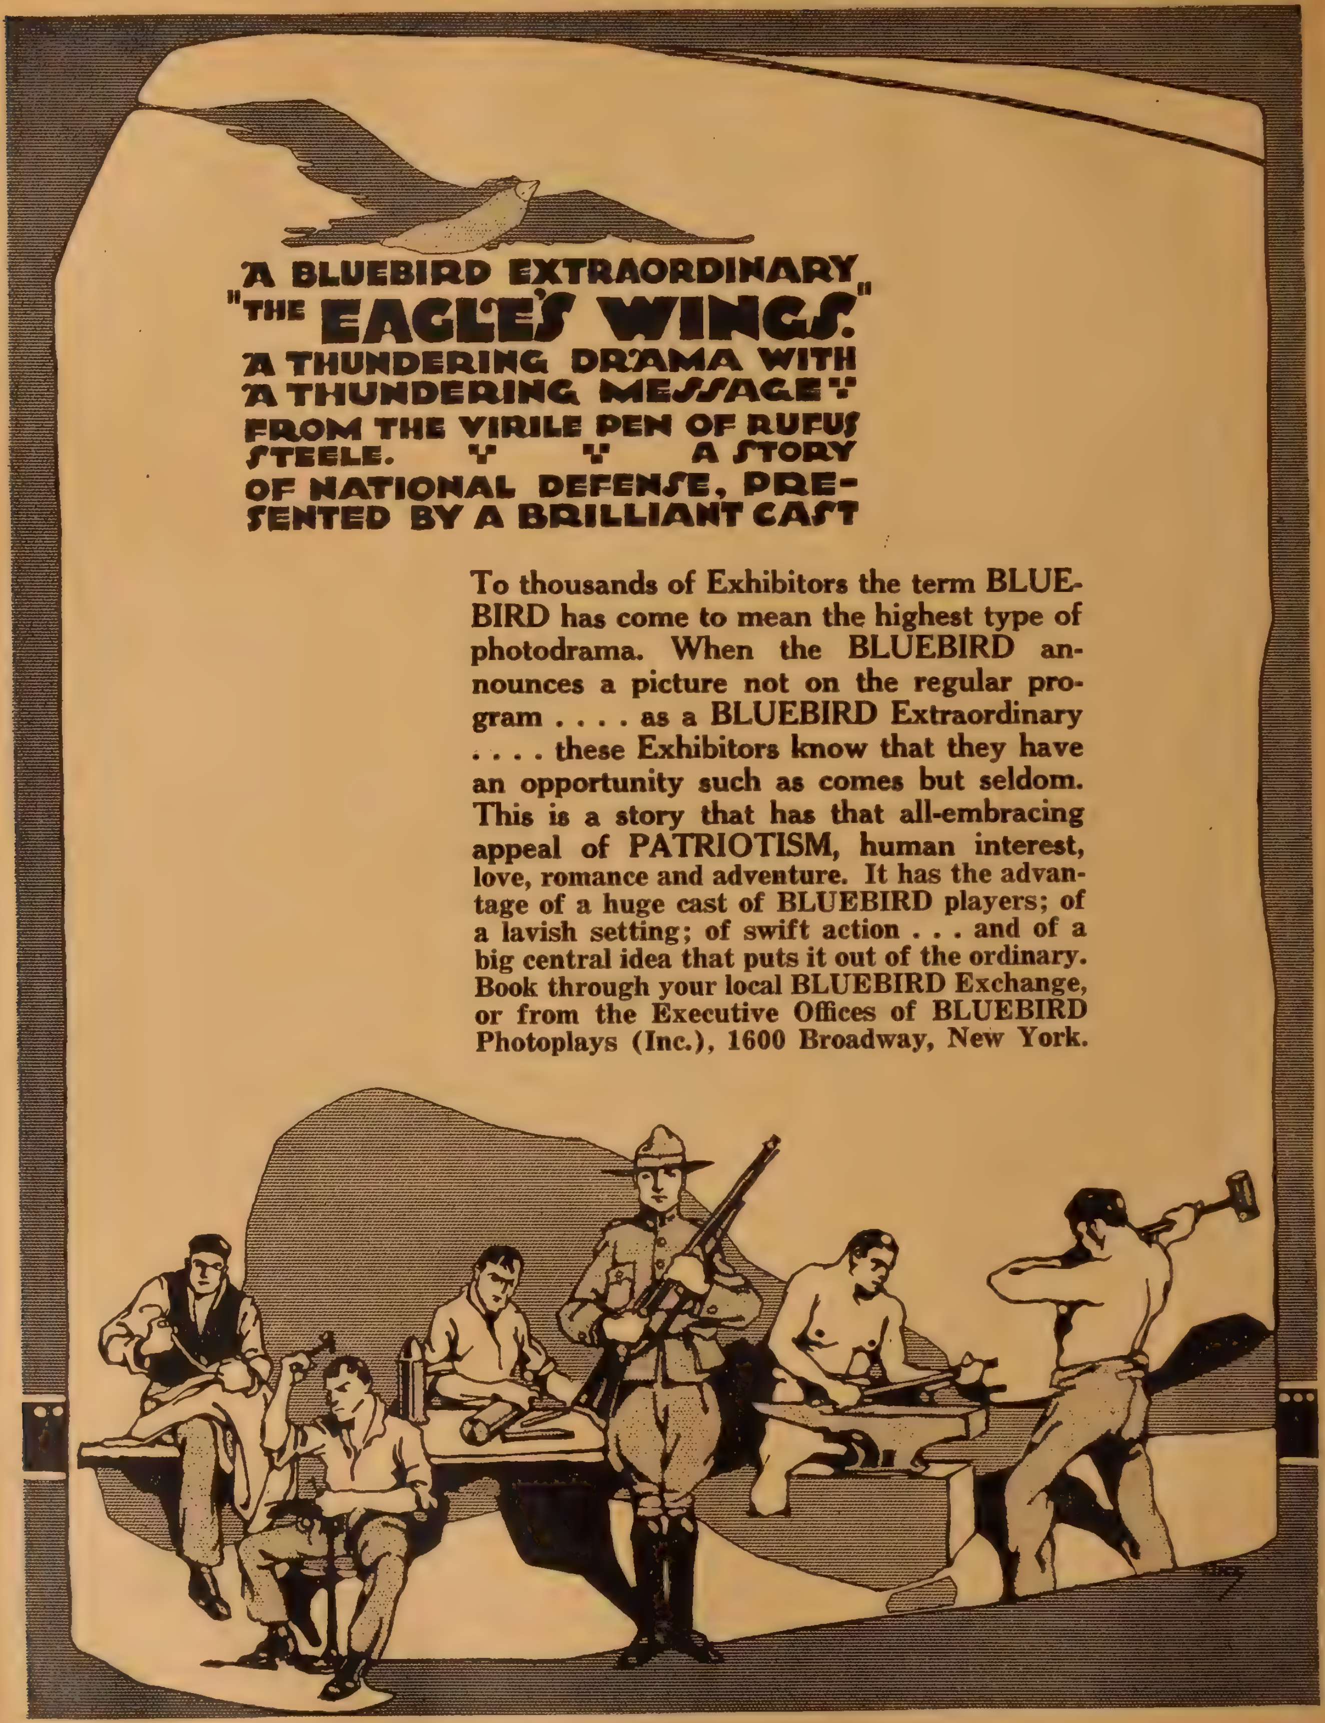
These designs are sent to the production department long before actual production begins, and prove of great assistance to the department, according to the production manager. McDermott at one time planned to become an artist, and whenever he is not directing, constantly is busily occupied in sketching designs for future sets or making portraits of the members of his company.

GIRL'S CLOTHES PREFERRED.

"YOU know I don't get the same kind of treatment in boy's clothes that I do in a pretty dress," declared Ruth Stonehouse, one of the well-known Universal stars, who was talking to a friend a few days ago.

Miss Stonehouse is playing the part of a boy in Director Raymond Wells' production, "Love Aflame." She said men don't seem to recognize her and push her to one side when they are passing in a hurry and she does not receive the little attentions she is used to at the film capital.

"When I wear a pretty dress every one seems to want to wait upon me, but these boy's clothes seem to change the whole situation. I've concluded while these are very comfortable, I'd much prefer to be a lady in skirts."



A BLUEBIRD EXTRAORDINARY
"THE EAGLE'S WINGS"
A THUNDERING DRAMA WITH A THUNDERING MESSAGE
FROM THE VIRILE PEN OF RUFUS STEELE. A STORY OF NATIONAL DEFENSE, PRESENTED BY A BRILLIANT CAST

To thousands of Exhibitors the term BLUEBIRD has come to mean the highest type of photodrama. When the BLUEBIRD announces a picture not on the regular program . . . . as a BLUEBIRD Extraordinary . . . . these Exhibitors know that they have an opportunity such as comes but seldom. This is a story that has that all-embracing appeal of PATRIOTISM, human interest, love, romance and adventure. It has the advantage of a huge cast of BLUEBIRD players; of a lavish setting; of swift action . . . and of a big central idea that puts it out of the ordinary. Book through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or from the Executive Offices of BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

Bluebird Ideas For "THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY"

THE title of the newest Bluebird, "THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY," is itself sufficient to provide the exhibitor with a world of ideas for novel and attractive advertising.

Here is a suggestion that will attract attention for you. Hire a man to dress in a Mephistopheles costume. Have several thousand fake dollar bills printed with the advertisement announcing the showing of the production at your theatre. Give these throwaways to the "devil" and send him out in an automobile to distribute them on the most crowded street corner of your community.

Fasten a pole sign containing the following copy to the machine in such a manner that it will be seen a block away:

This Is

"THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY"

COME AND GET YOUR SALARY!

If each fake dollar bill is inclosed in a regular pay envelope, it will help you get the stunt over more effectively. It would also be a good idea for you to dress the chauffeur of the car in a devil's costume.

A variation of this idea consists in having the man in devil's attire parade up and down in front of your theatre. His post should extend from corner to corner. You might have him distribute the fake money advertisements, or you might simply instruct him to slowly walk up and down and stop for a moment each time he reaches the entrance of your theatre. While standing in front of the house he should point his hand toward the box office. A silent suggestion that would arouse curiosity is a sign containing the words "Follow Me!" fastened to this imp's back.

Do not overlook the fact that Franklyn Farnum and Leah Baird, two of the most popular players in filmdom, appear opposite each other in the production. Farnum has attracted considerable attention as the result of his work in "The Stranger from Somewhere" and "Love Never Dies," while Miss Baird has for several years been a photoplay favorite. These names, in addition to the word "BLUEBIRD" in your ads, will bring business.

HOUSE TELEGRAM

Dear Friend:—

Just a line to remind you that tomorrow sees the initial presentation in this community of one of the most absorbing modern dramas ever screened by Bluebird.

"THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY"

The theme upon which this production is based is as big and as vital as all life itself. Its counterpart is enacted every day. You and I have seen its workings.

You cannot afford to miss seeing "THE DEVIL'S PAY DAY." I expect you to be on hand.

Sincerely,

(Name of theatre),
Manager.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS"

With RUPERT JULIAN—ELLA HALL—KINGSLEY BENEDICT—LITTLE ZOE RAE and a brilliant cast.

A screen version of the novel "WE ARE FRENCH", from the All-Story Weekly Magazine, by Robert H. Davis and Perley Poore Sheehan.

Tearful—Joyful
Thrilling—Sublime

This beautiful drama is positive proof of the fact that BLUEBIRD means an evening of delightful entertainment. It means that no pains are spared to make story, cast and production everything that the public expects them to be. It means that we do not make BLUEBIRDS for the Star's benefit, but rather the benefit of the public on the theory that "the play's the thing."

The term BLUEBIRD means more than the brand of an advertiser. It definitely exemplifies quality because no second-rate picture can possibly be a BLUEBIRD. It has got to be highest-grade, cleanest in tone, most comprehensive in plot and utterly fit for the whole family, Father, Mother, son and daughter.

BLUEBIRD in the concrete means "the best in motion picture plays." And when you have learned the fact you will begin to demand that your favorite theatre show BLUEBIRDS. Be sure to see "The Bugler of Algiers" and—

A thundering drama with a thundering message

PUTTING IT OVER

A PAGE OF PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

EXHIBITORS everywhere. This page is written especially for you. It is written for the purpose of helping you to be more successful; to make your house more popular and to help you make more money.

The suggestions are such as will attract people to your house. They are not hard to do, nor expensive. To begin making use of these stunts is all you need to do to find how well they pay, and how little real trouble they are. We know some Exhibitors who think any kind of stunt advertising is only for the big, popular houses. This is wrong. It is the small house on the side street, or the neighborhood theatre that really gets the most benefit from stunts.

Read the suggestions given below and make up your mind to try one of them. We are sure that if you ever begin using these stunts you will be so well pleased with the results that you will keep it up every week.

WATCH THIS SPACE FOR SUGGESTIONS AS TO HOW TO PUT YOUR SHOW OVER.

THE L-KO Komedy for February seventh is called "That Dawgone Dog." There are more canine than human actors in it, and a dog, used as an advertisement, is a sure bet. Great crowds collected in the streets of New York, the other day, to watch a dog drive an automobile, and all the metropolitan papers carried the story of his doing it. So when you get a chance, use dogs to advertise your specialties. Fill an automobile with them, and run through the main streets of the town, with announcements on the car saying that these are the L-Ko Komedians who appear in the picture at your theatre on such and such a date.

ON Thursday, February eighth, there is a wonderful Powers educational, far out of the ordinary run of such things. It is called "Giants of the American Forest," and is a photographic study of the redwood trees of California, the oldest living things in the world. It is far more than the usual film of little beauty and less interest which is so often issued under the name "Educational." This picture should be brought to the attention of every school in your town, because one of the best ways in the world of encouraging patriotism in small citizens, is to make them acquainted with the wonders of their country. A circular letter to the principals of the schools would be well worth sending.

THE Red Feather for February fifth is called "The Scarlet Crystal," and stars Herbert Rawlinson with Dorothy Davenport and Betty Schade in his support. His young wife, Betty, reads in a crystal which they bought on their wedding trip to Egypt, all that is happening to her husband when he is away from her. He becomes dissatisfied with the simple charms of the young and innocent girl, and returns to the Gay White Way, to lead the dissipated life in which he indulged before his marriage. His wife preserves her faith in him because of her ability to see beneath the surface of things, and this reclaims him in the end. You could arrange an original lighting scheme in your lobby to draw attention to this unusual story. Have a very large globe of transparent red paper made to fit over a brilliant light suspended from the centre of the ceiling. Letter it appropriately, "This is the scarlet crystal in which a woman read the truth." If you have large arc lights in front of your theatre you might have the globes colored for the occasion, and letter them with announcements of the Red Feather.

HARRY CAREY and Louise Lovely are starred in a fine Bison picture called "The Outlaw and the Lady" on February eighth. Harry carries the girl off to his "hide-out" to revenge himself on her father, and then when he is captured, she turns the tables by saving him in an original way. She says that he is her prisoner and claims the right to drive him in her racing car. She loses the deputy on the way and lets the outlaw escape. Have a girl in the attractive, mannish riding costume which Miss Lovely wears in the picture, drive a small racing car through the streets, with a man in typical Western garb seated beside her, and placards on the car.

YOU are not forgetting the serial "The Purple Mask," are you? Of course by this time people are flocking back each week to see the continuation of the adventure of Pat and the detective, but you might as well get a lot of new ones in each time as well as the regulars. Some of the stunts which have been already suggested are worth repeating, and there may be some that you have overlooked. Glance over your Weeklies.

"God's Crucible"

A BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY

A picture too big to be described. A screen achievement so unusual as to merit the term EXTRAORDINARY. It tells the story of the regeneration of a man with a shriveled soul. It tells this story through the medium of a most brilliant cast of BLUEBIRD players. The picture is staged and was photographed in the Grand Canyon of Arizona. And the picture is as big and true and real and marvelous as God's Great Outdoors. A box-office attraction—that's what you want to know about it. BOOK IT NOW for PROFIT. Through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or the Executive Offices BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

Mr. State Rights Buyer:-

We haven't anything more to tell you in the advertisement except that "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA" has smashed every record at the BROADWAY THEATRE in New York City for cash receipts in a given time. Over $22,000.00 in two weeks. Broke all records of the STUDEBAKER THEATRE, Chicago, in cash receipts. Took in over $1,300.00 in the city of Portland, Ore., in one day, with five big features in competition, proving that "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA" has no competition. We believe that THE MONEY TAKEN IN constitutes the ONLY argument recognized by showmen. All other arguments are BUNK. Extremely valuable territory still available. Wire the STATE RIGHTS DEP'T for information and ask for the FREE Ad Campaign Books that tell everything to both State Right men and Exhibitors.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"Me an' Me Pal." With Edna Flugrath, Gerald Ames and Hubert Willis. Written by Richard Ganthony. Produced by Harold Shaw. Fifty-fifth Red Feather Production. Released February 12. You remember "My Old Dutch?" Of course you do, and thousands of Exhibitors who showed that wonderful picture played it for return dates. This is to serve notice that here is another such an opportunity. A play of such sweetness, wholesomeness and charm that it goes straight to the heart. It has to do with Gerald, an unsuccessful artist, who, cast off by a wealthy uncle, beats his way back to success by doing whatever he could find to do. How he wins the girl of his heart, proves himself a friend and a man, is told in one of the strongest Red Feathers we have had for some time.

"The Indian's Lament." With Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill. Three-reel Gold Seal Indian Drama. Directed by Henry McRae. Released February 13. A dare-devil and a dare-devil-ess—that's what you see in this marvelous three-reeler. When Henry McRae starts digging up stunts for the people in his company he can think faster than Marie Walcamp can ride horseback, and you all know that is going some. There are a few pleasant little doings, like tying a man on a runaway horse's back; throwing another guy to the wolves; a fight between the game wardens and a band of Indians. But talk about punches; it's so full of them you get on the edge of your seat, and gasp and stay there till the last fade-out. The kind of picture that puts the move in the movies. Book it.

"The Girl Reporter's Scoop." With Irene Hunt and Roy Stewart. Two-reel Imp Detective and Newspaper Drama. Released February 14. Here is one of the cleanest-cut dramas ever filmed, swiftly told, stirring action, breath-taking suspense. Irene, a newspaper reporter, discovers that the supposed robber who has startled the city with his daring, looks like a chap she had a mild flirtation with while on her vacation. The plot discloses how she leads him to believe she is a crook, and supposedly joins him in his thieving operations. That he learns you can't always trust a woman, especially when she is a pretty clever amateur detective, makes a wonderful entertainment. It is strictly Universal Program class, and that is the limit of good stuff.

"The Fourth Witness." With Lee Hill and Louise Lovely. Two-reel Laemmle Emotional Drama. Released February 16. One strong two-reeler, gentlemen. A remarkable cast, headed by Lee Hill, energetic and popular; and Louise Lovely, than whom there are no lovelier. In fact, Louise is about the most than-whomer in the business. In the play she has a brute of a husband, and a friend, a doctor. Suspecting that these two nice people care for each other, the brute who is an invalid, plans to commit suicide and throw suspicion on the doctor. But the fourth witness frustrates this jolly little plan in a rousing climax that will sweep your audiences off their feet.

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford

The two greatest serial stars on Earth

Book It Now For Profits

CONSIDER well, Mr. Exhibitor, before you book any serial without Stars. There are feature productions that win without Stars, but without Stars a serial can't stand up. You know that, and so do thousands of Exhibitors who have been "thru the mill."

Every Universal Serial presents Stars. In Grace Cunard and Francis Ford you get the two best known, most popular serial Stars on earth. There is no argument to that at all.

You know it and so do all other Exhibitors.

In "THE PURPLE MASK" you get a story full of the kind of action that makes business, that brings back the crowded houses episode after episode. You give your patrons real thrills, real action, in France, Paris, Russia, New York and other places. You give them a story that rivets attention; in short, you give your people a genuine UNIVERSAL SERIAL. You know what that means better than we can tell you if you ran a UNIVERSAL SERIAL. The Universal has never put out a flivver.

You don't gamble with a Universal Serial. "The Purple Mask" is drawing business for thousands of Exhibitors right this very minute. WHY NOT YOU? Wire your nearest Universal Exchange and with Evidence here

To That Effect

THE officials of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. believe that FACTS are the only arguments that Exhibitors care to have. A fact is a fact, an open and shut proposition. Either it IS or it ISN'T. There can be no modification, no abbreviation and no compromise to a FACT. With this in mind, after noting out statements that "LIBERTY," the Universal Serial Glorious, is still packing 'em in, read the telegram from Mr. B. Rovin, Mgr. Amusu Theatre, Springfield, Ill.:

Jan. 13—4:40 P. M., Springfield, Ill.—To the Universal Film Mfg. Co., New York City: "LIBERTY" went over great—more than twelve hundred for matinee—expect more tonight—wonderful business, as my house is the EIGHTH to run "LIBERTY" in Springfield. I congratulate the Universal Film Company for this wonderful serial and thank you for the valuable assistance rendered by your Mr. Goldbaum. (Signed) B. Rovin, Mgr. Amusu Theatre.

Here is a FACT for you to think about, to study over and to ruminate on, Mr. Exhibitor. After (7) seven showings in Springfield, Ill., a city of 55,000, along comes another house, making it the eighth showing and still packs 'em in. If this doesn't answer the question of the power of Universal Serials in general, and particularly "LIBERTY," then we have nothing more to say. Your nearest Exchange will arrange bookings on "LIBERTY" for you. Get busy today.

"20,000 LEAGUES

One of the biggest fetaures of this stupendous picture is that it is without competition—literally there is nothing like it on earth. That means that it is good—not for today and tomorrow only, but for years to come. Jules Verne's masterpiece has been a standard work of fiction for over 50 years. It is still a "best seller." This tremendous picturization and realization of Jules Verne's marvelous prophecies is destined to live as long as the book itself. These are provable facts that put this picture as a State Right proposition in a class by itself. Think.

State Right buyers now in the market may congratulate themselves that choice territory is still open. This is a big business proposition. Remember that this remarkable production is

Still Playing Capacity at the BROADWAY Theatre, Broadway, New York City

It has broken all box-office records wherever shown. Not alone in New York City; but, for instance, in Portland, Oregon, where it played to $1,300.00 in a single day. At the Broadway Theatre, New York, where it is still playing, it has astounded the wisest showmen in the business.

$22,000 in 2 weeks in New York. All House Records Broken at the STUDEBAKER, Chicago. Over $1,300 taken in in one single day in Portland, Oregon, with big competition

Imagine a picture playing at popular prices doing this amount of business, on Broadway, the coldest and most critical theatrical district in the whole world. Think what this means to you to be able to bring this unusual picture before audiences who see one novelty a year where Broadway sees several hundreds.

Don't Go Up

(No. 162. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

The whole trend of the picture business right now is BACK TO THE REGULAR PROGRAM!

You can't stop it any more than you can cause an avalanche to hesitate. So there's nothing to gain by even trying to stop it.

If you're still trying to force your patrons to digest too many features, you're simply going plumb up against the current---that's a dernfule policy in any line of business. The best thing to do is to keep your eye on the stream all the time, find out exactly where the current is going and then go with it, NOT AGAINST IT!

I don't suppose any man in the picture business gets as many letters direct from exhibitors as I do. For years I have been asking them to write, and for years they have been doing it. In this way I have always kept my finger on the national pulse and, as a result, have never given you a wrong diagnosis of what was doing.

If you have any doubt about whether the people are getting sick of too many features, answer these questions to yourself:

Where are the regular movie fans who used to drop into your theatre in the mornings when you were using a regular program of short and varied subjects?

Where are the fans who used to slip in for a few minutes at the noon hour? They could drop in and out without cutting into the middle of a long feature, but they can't do it now. Where are the fans who used to come in regularly two, three or even four nights every week, taking their good sweet time about it and not having to worry whether they got there early or late?

Against It!

Where are they?

They're home. Or they're taking a walk at noon. Or they're dropping into some friendly boozatorium to help schooners across the bar. BUT THEY'RE NOT PASSING THEIR NICKELS AND DIMES THROUGH THE WINDOW TO YOU ANY MORE, and that's what ought to make you do some real thinking.

Their failure to support you as they used to do is proof in dollars and cents that you are not going with the current of public desire any more. You're going against it, and if you don't swing into line and give the people the regular and varied program that they really want you'll be UP AGAINST IT.

This is no threat of mine. It is a threat from the millions of movie fans who know what they want and who are going to get it some place else if they can't get it from you!

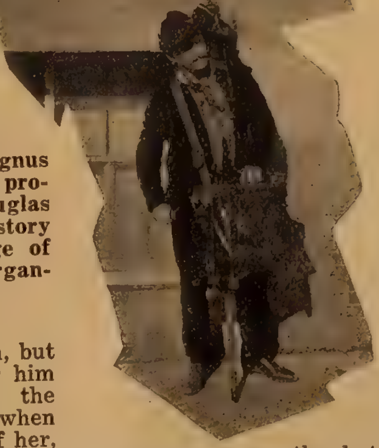
"The MELODY of DEATH"



IN "The Melody of Death" Douglas Gerrard has another of the Italian roles in which he excels. He played an exacting part in this picture, which was written for him by E. Magnus Ingleton, as well as producing the film. Ruth Clifford and Maud George played the two strongly contrasted feminine roles. One of the unnamed actors in the cast who nevertheless is very important to the story, was the monkey which Gerrard borrowed for the occasion from a Los Angeles organ-grinder. The director himself played the son of Italy who hunts all over the world for his faithless wife, playing the "Habanera" from Carmen, under thousands of windows in the hope of causing her involuntary response. An organ of an old fashioned type and its Simian attendant were required by the text, and Gerrard made a trip to Los Angeles to find them. That was easy, but persuading the monkey to work with him instead of its lawful master, to perch on his shoulder, and acknowledge gifts from the charitable, and then turn them over to him, was a matter of great difficulty. The director had to devote the better part of two days to making friends with the little creature. But at last he won its affections so completely that it cried like a child when the picture was finished and it had to be separated from him. The story of this intense play is as follows:

REX two-reel drama, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, and produced by Douglas Gerrard. The story of the revenge of an Italian organ-grinder.

Lorna and Denis have been engaged for some time and she is very happy. One day she receives a missive from Denis, breaking the engagement. She is heartbroken, but writes, telling him that if ever the time comes when he has need of her, that she will welcome him back.

Denis is infatuated with the singer, Nina, but she is the vampire type of woman and sees in him only a means toward a more luxurious life. He escorts her from the theatre one night and she invites him to have breakfast with her in the morning.

Ferrando, an organ grinder, goes from door to door making a livelihood. He plays continually a certain melody and seems ever on the lookout for some one. One night he plays in front of Nina's apartments. The tune brings back to her the memory of the days when she was happily married in faraway Italy, content with her husband, Ferrando, and baby.

The maestro of the opera had heard her sing, offered her instruction, and finally had made love to her until she had run away with him to America to earn the plaudits of the multitude. Taking a few coins, she throws them to the organ grinder below. He thus catches a glimpse of her whom he has been seeking.

That night he steals into her room, and his coming awakens her. With all the vehemence of his Latin nature he portrays for her the death of their child and his vow of vengeance. He threatens her life, and she manages to wrest the knife from him and throw it into the street. But the hatred of the long months was not to be so easily thwarted and Nina pays the ultimate penalty.

The next morning, when Denis finds that Nina is dead, his thoughts revert to Lorna. As he is making his peace with her, fate decrees that Ferrando shall play his oft-repeated melody in front of their garden.

CUNNINGHAM IS CREATING LAUGHS.

THE two leading comedy companies at Universal City are making pictures this week from the pen of Jack Cunningham, one of the most prolific writers on the staff of Scenario Editor Lewis. "For Art's Sake" is the title of one of the pictures, which is extremely funny and is being produced by Director Louis Chaudet and the Nestors, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The other is called "The Specimen Hunters," which is being directed by W. W. Beaudine of the Joker company, with Gale Henry and William Franey.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NEWS

Geo. E. Bailey, St. Louis, Mo.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 57 contains views of the opening of the $6,500,000 Free Bridge spanning the Mississippi River at St. Louis, the largest bridge of any type in America. George E. Bailey, the representative of the Animated Weekly at St. Louis, secured wonderful views of the ceremony, and of the immense crowds which witnessed it. As he says in his own words:

"This is the biggest thing any mayor has ever put over for St. Louis, and the town has just gone wild over it. Of the six movie cameramen on the job, I am proud to say that I was the only one permitted to bring an automobile within 100 feet of the scene of action, thereby enabling me to get a picture with the full ceremonies in plain view and the mass of people in the background. The other fellows were forced to work from the roadway."

Bailey has been in motion pictures since they started, in one capacity or another. Like all cameramen, he absolutely ignores personal risk, if there is a picture to be taken. He has secured wonderful "fire stuff," by exposing himself to smoke and to the risk of being hit by the deadly streams of water from the great hoses. The Editor of the Animated Weekly never feels the slightest anxiety about the St. Louis territory. He knows that if it is humanly possible to get a picture, Bailey will send it in. His boast is that no one has ever photographed a current event which he has failed to get.

Bailey has original ideas, too, and the carrying out of one of them caused him to spend many weary months in the hospital. His idea was to get a picture of the famous southpaw, Rube Marquard, pitching a curve, and to take him directly in front of the camera. He trusted to luck that the Rube would be able to make the curve break before the ball smashed the lens. Well, it broke all right, but unfortunately just to one side of the lens, so that it struck Bailey exactly on the eyeball and knocked him out cold. For weeks they thought that he had forfeited the sight of his eye, but he declares that he can see as well as ever.

OFF FOR OVERSEA DUTY.

THE leavetaking of the 207th Battalion for overseas duty, which was entrained on the first stage of their journey to the front the other day at Ottawa, Canada, was photographed by the cameraman for Animated Weekly No. 57. Last year the Dominion Government authorized the 207th, and recruiting took place, a high physical, moral and mental standard being set by the officers. Thus "MacLean's Athletes," as they have come to be called, received an enthusiastic send-off, when after a year of training, they were ready to "do their bit." They were reviewed by the new Governor General of Canada, the Duke of Devonshire, before they took their place in the special train which took them to the ship. Streets were jammed, and business was practically at a standstill until they were off.

A COWBOY'S FUNERAL.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 57 contains unique views of the funeral of "Kid" Willoughby, champion broncho buster, an old-timer of the West. Final tribute was paid to him by more than one hundred well-known cowboys and cowgirls, at Los Angeles. They accompanied the strange cavalcade through the streets to the railroad station, for Willoughby had expressed the wish to be buried on the plains near Cheyenne, his boyhood's home. His horse, with empty saddle, was led after the casket, which was carried by cowboys. His boots and saddle were sent with him, and were buried with him. The cowboys chanted the doleful "Cowboy's Lament." Many well-known men and women of Western pictures, including Harry Carey, Harry Gant, Bill Gillis, Neal Hart, Bill Gettinger, Pedro Leon, Douglas Fairbanks, "Al" Jennings, the reformed outlaw, Jane Bernoudy, and Minnie Williams, accompanied the casket to the station. At Cheyenne it was received by another group and escorted to the lonely grave out on the prairie.

“Me an’ Me Pal” Takes Place of “Scarlet Crystal”

The picture.

A PERFECTLY delightful photoplay which has never been forgotten was “My Old Dutch,” released more than a year ago, before the Red Feather brand come into existence. “Me an’ Me Pal” has been pronounced by every one who has seen it, so far, to be another “My Old Dutch”—only more so. It is another human interest story of the picturesque London costers, who have their own creed, customs and manners as if they were a little nation all by themselves. This picture, which was written by Richard Ganthony and produced by Harold Shaw, will be a success wherever it is shown, because of the depth and truth of its sentiment, as well as on account of its picturesque setting. On another page will be found a description of the reproduction of the famous Covent Garden Market, in London, in which many of the scenes of the photoplay are staged.

RED FEATHER Photoplay, written by Richard Ganthony and produced by Harold Shaw, with Edna Flugrath, Gerald Ames and Hubert Willis in the leads, not forgetting “Lancelot,” specially imported and played by himself. This second “My Old Dutch was jumped into the place made vacant by the withdrawal of the “Scarlet Crystal.”

Labby inspects his portrait.

A very important member of the cast is the donkey, the painting of whose portrait restores the hero and heroine to happiness. His name is Lancelot, and he has spent his days, until his picture debut, in exactly the occupation which he follows for the camera. He declared to an interviewer that he missed the genuine Scotch thistles which form the dessert part of his diet at home, but that he highly approved of the American carrots. The charming story runs in this way:

Harry Masterman is a young artist with a very good opinion of himself, but he does not seem to make much headway with his art. On the very day that he receives notice that his picture has been rejected by the Academy, he has a visit from his rich uncle, James Hilliard. Mr. Hilliard tells his nephew that he cannot continue making him an allowance, and that, since he is obviously a failure as an artist, he had better get to work. Angrily Harry refuses the offer of a job, and as angrily Mr. Hilliard cuts him off without a shilling, and leaves him.

But Harry cannot find buyers for his pictures, and things get so bad with him that at last he decides to clear out and look for some employment. He leaves a note for his landlady, telling her that the things he is leaving behind will be enough to pay his rent; and he also leaves a note for Kitty Kingsland, the young actress who lives with her mother in the flat below his, and with whom he has been on friendly terms.

Harry's case gets worse and worse, and he is thankful to get any odd job in Covent Garden Market. There he meets the old coster, Labby, who recognizes in him the young toff of an artist who used to be his customer and who cleared off owing him five and ninepence. Harry tells his story and offers to work off the debt he is unable to pay. Labby gives him a job, and is so pleased with the way he carries it out that he takes Harry home with him and after consultation with his "missus," it is decided that Harry shall remain and work as Labby's regular assistant and accompany him on his rounds. In this work Harry is so successful that he not only regains all the custom which Labby, through old age, had lost to his rival, Hawkins, but he also captures most of Hawkins' customers, much to the chagrin of that gentleman.

Mr. Hilliard has on one of his visits to Harry's flat met Mrs. Kingsland and recognized in her his old sweetheart. Since then he has visited her a good deal, and through his influence Kitty gets a part in a West End production. The morning after the first show, the "Press" proclaims Kitty's performance a great success, and, to celebrate the occasion, she goes off to Covent Garden to buy lots of flowers.

Harry and Labby are at work in the market and Harry is helping a man to load a van. Just as they are hoisting a heavy crate, the revengeful Hawkins passes. He decides to cause an "accident." He gives a lunge and the crate hurtles to the ground on top of Harry, whose leg is badly injured. From a neighboring flower stall Kitty has witnessed the accident. She recognizes Harry. He is lifted on to Labby's barrow and, Kitty accompanying them, Labby drives to his home. Here Harry is carefully tended and Kitty brings him necessary comforts and dainties. Harry pledges her not to divulge his secret to his uncle.

When Harry's birthday arrives, he has almost recovered from his injuries. Kitty calls and gives him as a present a set of artist's materials, but he has done with art forever. But through the joint persuasion of Kitty and Labby and his wife, Harry finally agrees to paint a picture of Labby and his moke by way of wiping off his debt.

When finished, the picture is excellent, and Labby, on Kitty's advice and unknown to Harry, sends it off to the Academy, where in due course it is accepted and hung.

Meantime Kitty has a surprise. Mr. Hilliard informs her that he has married her mother. She tells him she also has a surprise for them. They must come with her to the Academy on the opening day.

The Academy opens. Labby makes some excuse that he and Harry must

CLASSIC CLAIRE McDOWELL

By MARJORIE HOWARD

"ONE of my greatest ambitions is to play frequently in costume pictures," says Claire McDowell, who appears on the cover in a scene from "Beyond the Pale," a five-reel production in which she is playing the lead at Universal City. "My favorite role of all those I played on the speaking stage was 'Bathsheba' in 'Herod,' with William Faversham. How I did enjoy that play. I revelled in the costumes, for I look better in them, and am much more at home in them than in modern dress plays. I hate myself in modern clothes.

"At the close of the 'Herod' season I saw the handwriting on the wall and went into pictures. I was identified with the Biograph for six years, and almost wept to see it close. I belong to the public with all my heart, and love my work. I don't think that the public realizes the wild, enthusiastic devotion that the temperamental actor feels towards them. Letters are the only applause we have in pictures, and we do miss the approval that comes instantaneously on a piece of work well done. The letters are very sweet, though, and more tangible, as we can keep them with us and read them over in years to come."

Miss McDowell has had her wish of appearing in costume films, since she joined the Universal. Her first picture was a decided hit, and was called "The Caravan." The scene was laid in ancient Egypt, and the production was compared by the professional critics to those of the Ballet Russe, which is high praise for a motion picture to receive. Another photoplay in which Miss McDowell had the lead, and in which she might be as picturesque as she wished in costume, was the Red Feather "Mixed Blood," in which she played a Mexican Carmen, with an Irish mother. The second picture of the four above is from this photoplay, while the others are from the forthcoming release, "Beyond the Pale," which has a Hindoo setting. Miss McDowell also has the lead in the unusual Imp drama, "Avarice."

CLAIRE McDOWELL, a lover of costume plays, as a Hindoo maiden in a forthcoming production, called "Beyond the Pale," in which she is playing the lead.

HARRY CAREY

in

"The Outlaw and The Lady"

BISON Two-Reel drama, written by Harry Carey and played by him, with Louise Lovely as his leading lady, under the direction of F. A. Kelsey, who also made the scenario.

CAST.

Cheyenne Harry	Harry Carey
Ruth Carter	Louise Lovely
Her Father	Jack Richardson
Sheriff	William Gettinger

SUPPORTING Harry Carey in one of his own stories, directed by F. A. Kelsey, Louise Lovely has a strenuous role as the daughter of a Western mine owner, who is carried off to his "hide-out" by the "outlaw," besieged there by the sheriff, and then heaps coals of fire on the "bad man's" head, by rescuing him from justice and setting him free, while she goes home to dream of him. Miss Lovely is an ardent motorist, and in this picture she certainly drove her racing car like the probervial whirlwind. Carey has taken quite a few risks in his screen career, but he declares that her driving comes near making a new record. She has to spill the deputy, whom the sheriff assigns to ride with them, in the road, and his tumble had far more truth than fiction about it, to which sundry bruises testified. The costume in which she performs these feats is remarkably attractive, as may be seen from the cut above, and all together Miss Lovely makes about the best leading lady whom Harry Carey has ever had. The story, in which Carey again assumes his well-known character of "Cheyenne Harry," is briefly as follows:

Major Carter, owner of the Sunset mines, is at breakfast in his home. He happens to read of a reward offered for Cheyenne Harry if captured. The butler gives him a telegram telling of the flooding of several shafts in his mine. He orders his car immediately. Ruth, his daughter, wants to go with him. He refuses, but she starts upstairs, telling him that she is going anyhow. While she is packing, he leaves, but this does not daunt Ruth. She orders her roadster and is soon on the way.

In the hills, Cheyenne Harry reads the newspaper account of himself, laughs, and looks at the road below where the sheriff and several of his men are riding. Harry picks up a stone and succeeds in hitting the sheriff. The sheriff and his men dismount and as Harry yells "Peek-a-boo!" they draw their guns and fire in his direction. Harry only laughs and moves off. Ruth's car sticks fast in crossing a stream, and when she sees Harry riding toward her, she calls to him to help her. At first he refuses, but she is so commanding that at last he asks her what she wishes. She tells him that she wants to rent his horse, but he only laughs at this. At last he consents to let her ride the horse and he will lead it. On the trail he tells her who he is, and that he is going to get even with her father by taking her to his hang-out. On the sly, she succeeds in tearing up some of her cards and scattering them along the way. When they arrive at the cave, Ruth lets Harry get supper.

Down by the stream her father and the sheriff meet, and all start to trail the horse, after finding her car. Later they come across the torn cards, and it is an easy matter to find the cave. The sheriff calls to Harry to surrender and he answers with a shot. They exchange shots and finally Ruth begs him to surrender and trust her. Harry consents and waves a flag of truce, but the sheriff shoots him through the shoulder. Ruth starts to bind Harry's wound and the men come up. She tells them that he is her prisoner, and that she will drive him back to town. The sheriff says a deputy must go along. Ruth agrees, and they start. She drives very fast and is soon ahead of the other machine. Suddenly she has engine trouble and the deputy gets out to see what is the matter. Quickly she starts the car and he is left behind. She drives to the river and points to Harry that his road lies ahead.

At dinner that night Ruth has a vision of Harry sitting at the table with her.

BENEDICT SIGNS LONG-TERM CONTRACT

AFTER having worked at Universal City for a long period, Kingsley Benedict has been given a long-term contract to play leading roles in Universal productions.

Benedict made a distinct impression by his performance in Director Rupert Julian's Bluebird production, "The Bugler of Algiers."

"WON BY GRIT"

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, written by Willis and Woods and produced by George Marshall, with Neal Hart in the lead. The story of a spoiled girl's challenge and how a real man accepts it.

"WON BY GRIT" is a very fine Gold Seal, and introduces Neal Hart, who will be well remembered for his role in the serial "Liberty," as a hero. He makes a very convincing one, in the role of a real man, who will not take a dare from his spoiled and selfish fiancee, who sends him to face great odds for a whim of her own. This is a modern version, written by Willis and Woods and produced by George Marshall, of the old story of the fair lady who threw her glove into the lion's den, and dared her lover to bring it to her. He did so, if you remember, but he said farewell to the lady as he returned it to her.

A tremendous fight, against six men, is a feature of the picture, and when it was being filmed, it was witnessed by no less a personage than the daughter of the president. Mr. and Mrs. William McAdoo were visiting Universal City at the time, and the Secretary was anxious to see one of the famous Universal fights. So he was escorted to the set where Neal Hart had the little job of defending himself from the assault of six huskies in a saloon. Mrs. McAdoo was much afraid that some of the men had been hurt, but was reassured to see them appear again laughing. Lois Wilson is most attractive as the daughter of the saloon-keeper who rescues Hart. A brief synopsis of the story follows:

CAST.

William Hadfield	Neal Hart
Rose Montgomery	Mina Cunard
"Dago" Frank	Richard La Reno
Teresa	Lois Wilson
Mrs. Montgomery	Helen Wright

William Hadfield, a powerful man, has made a fortune in cattle in the West and has come to the city to settle down. Rose Montgomery is about to become his fiancee, but his wealth is his only attraction for her, as she really has the greatest scorn for him and his life business.

While slumming, Rose and Hadfield with their party are guided into "Dago" Frank's dive, which is considered the toughest spot in the town. On leaving the place, Rose purposely drops her gloves, and as they are later getting into the auto to drive home, she asks Hadfield to return for them. He laughs at her request, but she looks at him contemptuously and taunts him with being afraid. Suddenly awakened to her real feelings, he smilingly turns back, while Rose is satisfied that this is a very clever way to test his devotion.

Soon after he enters the dive, a fight begins, and though Hadfield is a great fighter, he quickly loses strength struggling with Dago Frank and three gangsters at once. Teresa, Dago Frank's pretty young daughter, is a flower girl, of whom Hadfield has for some time been a customer. She has the greatest admiration for him, and has been watching the battle. Seeing him weakening, she suddenly switches off the light, at the same time telling him that the door is open. He escapes to her room, entering the wrong door in the darkness. She hides him among her clothes, and lovingly cares for his wounds.

Perceiving that she really loves him for himself alone, Hadfield asks her to marry him and go West with him. Dago Frank is finally persuaded to give his consent, and his marriage with her takes place in the morning.

Hadfield goes to Rose merely to return the gloves and bid her a cold good-by.

GAINSBORG DONE IT!

SURE, he went and done it! Lee Gainsborg is the fellow. In these hard times, when people are about ready to boycott eating, Lee's engagement is announced. But you really can't blame him—you should see the girl, Miss Sayre Gwendolyn Rutkin, of Newark, and the newly married Editor of the Weekly joins with many others in wishing Miss Rutkin and Mr. Gainsborg success. Mr. Gainsborg is the manager of the Universal Film Exchange, at 286 Market St., Newark, N. J.

Three Bluebirds Booked at the Rialto

> "There is a tide in the affairs of men
> Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."
> ....Julius Caesar.

OLD BILL SHAKESPEARE said that. And, with the possible exception of another widely quoted Bluebird maxim, "The Play's the Things," he never spoke a truer word. Furthermore, it's just as true today as it was the day he slapped it down on his little old last year's typewriter. The above quotation is eminently pertinent to the situation in which Bluebird Photoplays finds itself at the present moment. The company has just turned its first milestone, a year of which any company would be immensely proud. The success which has come to Bluebird has been phenomenal in the motion picture field. But all of last year's work, all of last year's advertising, all of its prestige, and all of its success, have merely served to put the company in a position from which it can see the rising sun of a wonderful success just peeping over the next hill. That is the goal toward which Bluebird is striving, and the path is getting more and more level.

THE stamp of S. F. Rothapfel's approval is set on Bluebirds. He has booked three Bluebirds at the finest of motion picture palaces, The Rialto.

ALREADY SHOWN

"THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."

TO BE SHOWN NEXT WEEK

"POLLY REDHEAD"

TO BE SET

The next Lynn Reynolds feature.

Only this week comes word that S. F. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto Theatre, has booked his second Bluebird, and made arrangements for a third to follow as soon as the title is chosen. Already "The Mysterious Mrs. M." has played the Rialto Theatre, and on Page 25 of this issue will be found a letter from him stating in black and white what he thought of it. He also backs up his opinion by booking for the week of February 5th the Bluebird photoplay, "Polly Redhead," with Ella Hall as the star. His next Bluebird will be the Lynn Reynolds story, the working title of which is "The Cruise of the Alden Besse."

Booking a film at the Rialto Theatre in New York does not make that film in itself any better than it was before, but it is undeniable that it adds prestige, for there is no gainsaying that S. F. Rothapfel is the leading motion picture exhibitor in the world, and that his house, the Rialto, is the quintessence of photoplay exhibiting palaces. Every other company which has had a booking at the Rialto has played that fact up in the strongest possible manner, and with the desired result. With the recognition which comes to the Bluebird Company through Rialto bookings, Bluebirds are placed on a par with the best pictures in the world.

Marcus Loew recognized the quality of Bluebirds long ago by setting aside a Bluebird day at all of his chain of theatres, and what he thinks about the latest Bluebird which has played his house, "God's Crucible," is contained in his letter which will be found on Page 24 of this issue. The judgment of these two showmen in conjunction would be enough to make any picture. But it gave just the fillip to Bluebird which was necessary to push it to the top of the hill, where the going is smooth as a motor speedway.

Another side of the Rialto booking is worth noting, as it signals the victory which Bluebird has scored in another direction. When the Bluebird company was organized, it was founded on the principle that "The Play's the Thing," and that the star was the subordinate factor in the picture. It had the greatest of difficulty at the start in convincing exhibitors of this fact. Constant hammering, constant advertising, and one excellent Bluebird after another, have finally built up this proposition to a place where a man like Mr. Rothapfel can advertise with safety in front of his theatre in this way: "MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."—BLUEBIRD. Now, mind you, Mary MacLaren was in this picture, and Mary MacLaren is one of Bluebird's most highly prized stars. If Mr. Rothapfel was not convinced that Bluebird's campaign on the name Bluebird, and "The Play's the Thing," had been effective, and had put the word Bluebird where it should be in the popular mind, he would never have advertised in this way. He would have put the star first. When he opened the Rialto he was asked, "What is your opening attraction?" and his answer was, "Douglas Fairbanks." In that instance he billed the star, and up until the time the Bluebird came to him, he continued to do so. With the advent of Bluebird he realized that the name of the company stood for more than the name of any star, however great that star's prominence or drawing power. The accumulative advertising value of the name Bluebird has been proven.

"The Mysterious Mrs. M." went over with a great, big smash at the Rialto. Everybody liked it, and everybody wanted more Bluebirds. When they see "Polly Redhead" with Ella Hall—and, mind you, it will be advertised "Polly Redhead, Bluebird,"—they will be all the more anxious for more Bluebirds, and they will get them. Mr. Rothapfel will see to that. "Polly Redhead" was formerly called "Polly-ooly," and was filmed by Jack Conway from Edgar Jepson's famous "Polly-ooly" stories which ran in a number of magazines, and were later put out in book form, in which style they had a wonderful success. Ella Hall is the star, and she is supported by a cast of excellent Bluebird players, among whom may be mentioned Charles Mailes and Gretchen Lederer.

Ella Hall has already proven her popularity, and her work shows a steady increase in public favor. Her role in "The Bugler of Algiers" won her many new friends, while her last Bluebird "Her Soul's Inspiration" fitted her to a T. She has a dual role in "Polly Redhead," and is on the screen in one character or the other, nearly all the time. There is some wonderful double exposure work in the picture. In one place a character walks right across the stage, while the two "doubles" are seen at the same time.

Bluebird Policy Achieves Pinnacle's Peak

M. H. Hoffman, in an address before the New York Theatre Club at Hotel Astor, shows how the slogan, "The Play's the Thing,' has brought success to Bluebird.

AT the last meeting of the New York Theatre Club at the Hotel Astor, New York City, the subject of discussion was "The Motion Picture." Mr. M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of the Bluebird Exchanges, gave the address of the day on "The Destiny and Wider Development of the Industry," which was received with great appreciation by the large audience. Among the invited guests of honor were Mr. R. H. Cochrane, Vice-President of Universal, and Miss Violet Mersereau, the Bluebird star. The Universal Screen Magazine, and "The War Waif," a two-reel picture featuring Allan Holubar and Zoe Rae, were shown to the guests. It is impossible, unfortunately, to give Mr. Hoffman's talk in full owing to lack of space.

He said in part, that in analyzing life, we found that its necessities ranged themselves into the classification—Food, Sleep, Work and Amusement. Of the last, the motion picture, within the reach of all, meets the requirements ideally. At first it was regarded as a mere toy, next as a scientific novelty, then as an educative force, and finally as a recognized form of comedy entertainment. The success of the screen comedy brought a thinking element with mercenary motives into the business. Melodramatic classics like "The Two Orphans" were screened—badly if compared to present-day productions—but they pleased the patron of the "nickel show." Pictures began to flourish. Vaudeville and repertoire theatre players entered the field, and the financial returns encouraged the investment of capital. A trust was formed, with the inevitable result of inviting rival competition. Both factions strove mightily to improve their products. The result was a tremendous development of the industry and the wide popularizing of the motion picture among all classes of society.

—"and the motion picture is justly entitled to the distinction of being "the art sublimating the arts." It is at once a record and an embellishment; the faithful mirror, and an idealizing force. It is the poor man's necessity and the rich man's pastime; an amusement and an educative force in one—and yet they want to close it up on Sunday."

The legitimate stage, following the example of Madame Sarah Bernhardt, who became a screen star, gave recruits to pictures. Players with names that had a commercial value on the legitimate stage were placed bodily in pictures, and the plays in which they had appeared in the dramatic field, were placed upon the screen without relation to their real fitness to the motion picture production.

About a year ago, Mr. Hoffman noticed that interest in motion pictures was lagging. At the same time the theatrical attractions had a better season than in the previous eight years. He came to the conclusion that the star was over-emphasized, and that no stress was laid on the importance of the play. This was the germ and nucleus of the corporation which was then started, and which is known as Bluebird Photoplays. All its policies, all its advertising are subordinated to the one central idea—"the play's the thing."

Bluebird believes that the patron does not want to see his favorite actor in a misfit role, solely because said actor is scheduled to appear each week. They rather believe that he wants a clean, snappy, logical story, played by natural types, and dealing with some prominent social problem or interest that concerns all real red-blooded people. Judging from the thousands of letters of felicitation on this policy received from all parts of the world, it may safely be said that this policy has been universally indorsed.

"This is the latest evolution of the motion picture. What is going to happen in the future, we can only tell from what has happpened in the past. So far, the motion picture has developed from a toy to an art. Its future is that of both art and a science. Even now, many churches throughout the country are using motion pictures to help them drive home their sermons. The schools are beginning the use of motion pictures to develop the motion picture taste of the children, and to lead it to higher instructional planes. University extension courses, State boards of health and agriculture, and boards of education throughout the country are beginning a concerted use of motion pictures for instructional purposes.

"This all presages a use for moving pictures in the future of which we have only a minute conception. Through their use the entire present method of teaching will be changed."

Mr. Hoffman prophecied that astronomy, engineering, mathematics, mechanics, medicine, surgery, sociology and public welfare, and in fact every science, whether applied or theatrical, will be taught by motion pictures.

"The Screen Magazine has become just as much a necessity to the man or woman who wishes to be up-to-date, as the printed periodical. Through its flicker—shall we say?— we are given the latest information on current events, domestic science, sculpture, fashions, art, and kindred topics. The history of the world's progress ultimately will be presented before us by the nimble celluloid. Even the old family album seems destined to appear in a new form, and who knows but what the Encyclopaedia Britannica will be reeled off instead of read in the not distant future?

"Printing has been rightly called 'The Art Preservatitve of the Arts,' and the motion picture is justly entitled to the distinction of being 'the art sublimating the arts.' It is at once a record and an embellishment; the faithful mirror, and an idealizing force. It is the poor man's necessity and the rich man's pastime; an amusement and an educative force in one—and yet they want to close it up on Sunday!"

The last phrase of Mr. Hoffman's speech stirred the curiosity of the audience, and they asked him to say a few additional words about Sunday closing, which he did.

"THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M.," the latest production of the great director, Lois Weber, which she made from a magazine tale by Thomas Edgelow, published in "Live Stories," is a delicately perfect piece of work, and will bring an hour of purest enjoyment to every class of spectator who is fortunate enough to see it. The play was the first Bluebird to be shown in the huge and gorgeous Rialto Theatre, on the corner of Forty-second Street and Broadway, New York, where it scored an immense success. A clever advertising campaign was conducted in the New York papers in preparation for the showing of this delightful picture. No information was given out about the picture beforehand, beyond the bare announcement of its name, which is in itself so mysterious. This aroused advance interest in the production, and drew attention to the fact the picture was the latest work of the famous Lois Weber, when the secret was revealed in the enthusiastic reviews which appeared in all the papers the next day.

This is Mary MacLaren's first appearance in a light role, in which her girlish charm has an opportunity such as the deep emotional work demanded of her in previous Bluebirds has denied. She rejoiced in the chance to wear the pretty frocks of "sweet seventeen," which are really suited to her, instead of the rags of "Shoes," the nurse's uniform of "Wanted — A Home," or the musical comedy gorgeousness of "Saving the Family Name." The picture is full of those wonderful little touches which would label the work as Lois Weber's even if her name did not appear on the screen. The arrangement of a vase of flowers, the placing of a lamp, the flash of the crawling of a bee from the heart of a blossom and over the hand of the nature-loving heroine — all betray Lois Weber by their pure artistry.

Raymond meets Phyllis again after many years.

One of the best of the screen's leading men supports Mary MacLaren in the role of Raymond Van Seer. This is Harrison Ford, well known to Broadway for his work in several successful plays. He first attracted attention in the support of Robert Edeson and Mary Mannering, in several productions. Then he was with W. H. Crane, and later played the lead in "Excuse Me." His latest Broadway appearances were with Louis Mann in "The Bubble," and in the successful play, "Rolling Stones."

The story of "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," which is a distinct novelty and has a really surprising ending, runs briefly in this way:

Raymond Van Seer, wealthy and with every reason to be happy, has become morose and dissatisfied with life. His mental mood has worried his friends and when, finally, his true condition of mind is disclosed by the accidental discovery that he is reading a book entitled "Famous Suicides," drastic action becomes necessary.

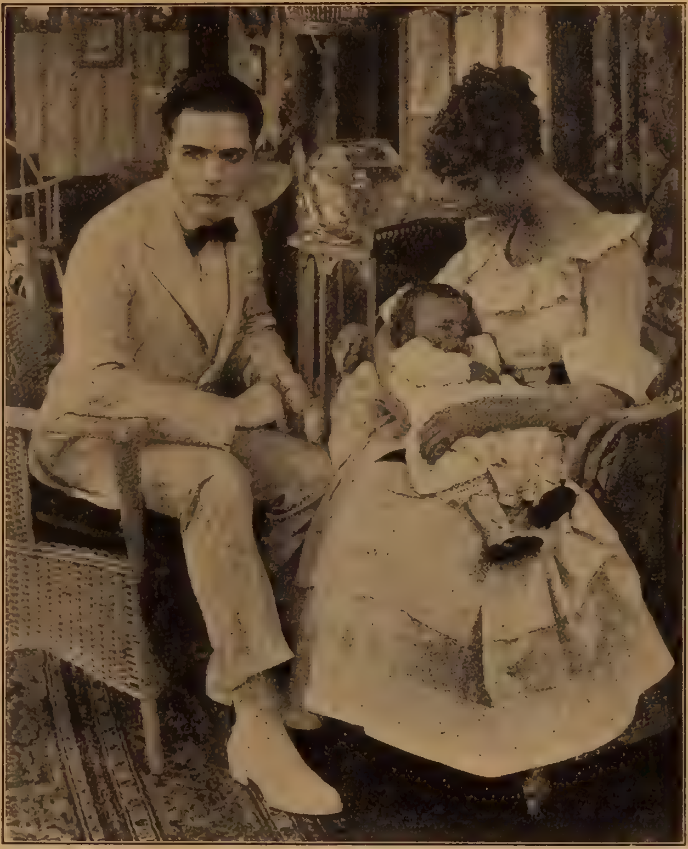
One of Van Seer's friends at the University Club, where he lives, has lately visited a famous fortune teller, known as "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," and in relating his experiences to Van Seer creates slight signs of interest in the incident. As a result of the combined urging of his friends, Van Seer visits the sorceress, although thoroughly suspicious of her practices and abilities.

When, however, she tells him that on a given date he will meet with a painful accident while out of doors, Van Seer hopes to thwart whatever truth there may be in her prognostication by remaining indoors, at his club, all day. Despite the invitations of his friends to venture forth, Van Seer sticks within his room until, late in the afternoon, fire is discovered in the clubhouse and, with the other occupants, Van Seer is forced to leave.

Just as he is crossing the threshold, he trips, falls headlong to the sidewalk and breaks his wrist. He will have none of the attention offered by the club physician, but takes his machine and rides to his country seat, where he submits his broken wrist to the treatment of Dr. Woodman, the family physician. The accident makes Van Seer "take notice" of the seeress.

Prompted by a desire to test her abilities further, Van Seer again visits "The Mysterious Mrs. M." She gravely informs him that on a certain date, still three months away, he is suddenly to die. As a token of his disbelief Van Seer gives her an order on his execution to pay her an immense sum of money if he shall die in accord with her prophecy. The fortune teller hands him back the order, stating that his money will do her no good as she is, herself, going to die within a week.

Raymond receives a new idea of pleasure.



To see her with the child was keen pain.

Van Seer bribes the fortune teller's butler to keep him advised by telephone of Mrs. Musselwhite's health. Promptly on the day the woman has set for her death, the butler calls Van Seer to the phone and informs him that Mrs. Musselwhite has died that very morning. Being now thoroughly convinced of the woman's sincerity and power, Van Seer contemplates the likelihood of his own death as specified—but now he wants to live.

Dr. Woodman's daughter Phyllis has come home from college, beautiful and bewitching. Van Seer has fallen in love with her, but believing that his day of death is fixed by fate he refrains from advancing his own cause while all the time Phyllis is in love with him. So matters continue until Van Seer's last day on earth.

He spends the hours alone, locked in his library, watching the hands of the clock approach the hour of midnight. Wearily the moments drag along, and still Van Seer feels no sign of illness. When at last the hour of midnight arrives and passes with Van Seer still alive he is suddenly aroused to the realities of life by having his club friends burst in upon him with a letter from "The Mysterious Mrs. M."

She has all along been in the employ of Van Seer's club friends and has prognosticated and acted along previously decided lines. Rejoicing in his good health, good fortune and the love of Phyllis, there is the happy ending of Van Seer's romance of life and death.

Famous Covent Garden In "Me An' Me Pal"

WHEN the Universal officials were shown the next Red Feather, "Me an' Me Pal," in the projection room, they exclaimed with one accord, "Another 'My Old Dutch'." That was a picture of London coster life which has never been forgotten, and this is another with all that made the first one famous, and more.

The London costers are one of the most picturesque groups of people in the Western world, and the scenes depicting their characters, customs and avocation as vegetable peddlers are depicted with extraordinary realism in this delightful photoplay. They obtain their supplies of vegetables at the great central market of Covent Garden, celebrated in English play and novel all over the world. Here they go with their donkey carts, or with hand-barrows if not so prosperous, so early in the morning that the street lamps are still burning. One of the sights for the tourist visitor is the great market in the early dawn, especially the flower stalls, loaded down with piles of marvelous English wild-flowers. The London season, paradoxically enough, is in the spring, and many a smart automobile is seen waiting outside the market while the ladies and gentlemen, in evening dress, are inside buying armsful of blossoms, still wet with dew.

All this is reproduced in the picture, when the unsuccessful artist, having pawned his last possesion, and spent his last penny, at a coffee stall, takes a job as porter in the famous coster market.

Two leading characters, an artist and a coster, in the current Red Feather, "Me an' Me Pal."

Pictorial Russia in A Bluebird

MANY pe ple who have witnessed the advance showing of the next Bluebird photoplay, "The Reward of the Faithless," have commented upon the wonderful Russian atmosphere. Director Rex Ingram has left nothing undone to create the foreign illusion, and his production is filled with characteristic details which lead the spectator to imagine that the scenes were actually taken in the Czar's country.

In achieving this effect, Director Ingram was materially assisted by one of his leading players, Nicholas Dunaew, who is a Russian by birth. Moscow is his native city, and he was identified for eight years with the stage in his own country, both as actor and as producer. The cut gives some idea of the faithfulness of the Russian detail. The scene is a mere vision, seen by one of the characters, yet the wedding is correct in its most minute feature. The officiating priest wears the unique robes of the Greek church; the altar is furnished with Russian emblems, the costume of the girl is the traditional dress of the Russian bride.

"The Reward of the Faithless" is a feature of vivid and striking contrasts. Two phases of Russian life are illustrated: that of the aristocracy, with its pomp and lavish display, its almost medieval hospitality and charity to the poor; and that of the degraded peasantry, living in squalid huts the life of animals, and dressed in pitiable rags. Director Ingram's vivid imagination, and sense of the pictorial, aided by Dunaew's special knowledge of things Russian, have produced a photoplay of more than usual interest from the standpoint of the picturesque. Mr. Ingram was engaged in a sculptor's career before he became a motion picture director, and his taste and training make his pictures a treat to those who appreciate the artistic in films.

LATEST ADDITION TO U. S. NAVY

THE newest and biggest American dreadnought, the "Mississippi," was launched the other day at Newport News, Virginia, and the Weekly cameraman was there to secure views for Number 57. The immense hull cost $8,000,000. She was christened in the traditional manner by Miss Camille McBeath, in the presence of Secretary of the Navy Daniels and a distinguished company, who cheered long and loud as the great hull touched the water for the first time.

"That Dawgone Dog"

L—KO KOMEDY in two reels, produced by Dick Smith, with Sammie Burns in the lead, and a whole kennel full of canine actors.

CAST.

The Butler	Sammie Burns
The Girl	Vera Reynolds
The Rich Woman	Katharine Griffith

DICK SMITH has staged a typical L-KO Komedy in which Sammie Burns divides the honors with a group of canine actors, who have important roles. A valuable necklace plays a part in the picture, and causes a typical chase, in which automobiles, motor-cycles, pedestrians, police, dogs, and dog-catchers, pretty Vera Reynolds, and stately Katherine Griffith, are all featured. In the end the entire cast, including the necklace, disappears over a cliff, and lands in a huddled mass of dogs and humans.

The story begins with the theft of a valuable necklace from the rich woman, at whose home Sammie is butler. No one knows who has stolen it. Sammie is friendly with the maid and we see him offer her a necklace, so suspicion points to him. The rich woman notifies the police of her loss. Sammie and the maid have an afternoon off. They go out to the park and sit on a bench. Sammie offers the necklace again. The maid is about to accept it, when she sees the tag which reads "Woolworth, 5 and 10 cents." She scornfully returns it to him.

The crook meanwhile has made a getaway with the loot. He looks for a place in his room to hide the necklace, but cannot find one. He catches sight of the dog and puts the jewel in its collar.

Sammie, in the park, comes across a girl weeping at the grave of Fido. He comforts her. A little girl appears with a dog. The dog-catchers' wagon comes on, looking for stray dogs. They attempt to take a bulldog, but don't succeed.

The crook takes his valise and goes to the station with his dog. He ties the animal outside and goes to buy his ticket. Some one unties the dog, which runs away with the necklace still in his collar. Every one seems to have lost a dog, and a chase ensues. Sammie decides to buy one for the girl who is mourning Fido's loss, and goes to a dog-store. He gets a big one and manages to upset several policemen and pedestrians with it. The dog-catchers are so determined to arrest all dogs, that they even attempt to arrest a statue of one, which is broken in the scuffle.

Soon every one is hunting for a dog, the old blind man for his, Sammie for his, the dog-catchers, and the crook for the one with the necklace in its collar. After a terrific chase in which the police join, the whole party falls over a cliff, tangled up in the remains of the dog-catchers' wagon and the police automobile.

The girl tries to rescue her precious pup.

BEAUDINE JOKES BALLET MASTER.

WHEN a famous Russian ballet organization was playing in Los Angeles this week, many of the dancers, accompanied by the maitre de ballet, took advantage of the opportunity to visit Universal City and they were particularly interested in the making of Joker comedies by Director W. W. Beaudine, with Gale Henry and William Franey as his principal players.

The particular set on which they were working had a living room and a hall room next door. In the hall was a telephone on a table. The maitre de ballet remembered he had an appointment and was late, and he requested permission to use the phone. Beaudine's sense of humor immediately came to the surface and he said, "Why, certainly."

The ballet master sat for quite a long time at the phone and then appealed to the director. He tried again. Finally Beaudine told him it must be that the line was out of order. But the Russian never knew that the telephone cord extended no further than the edge of the carpet and that it was merely a "prop" instrument. The latest Joker is called "Out for the Dough."

HARRY CAREY ENCOUNTERS GOAT.

HARRY CAREY, who is featured in "The Outlaw and the Lady," a Bison picture, films a great many of his scenes near the ranch at Universal City, and where practically all of the animals are kept. Wandering about the premises and over the hills usually are a number of goats, some of which were brought from Catalina Island.

One ram in particular has long horns and a decidedly peevish disposition, in addition to being revengeful. One morning Carey amused himself between scenes wrestling with this goat and the animal did not enjoy it. It waited for an opportunity some ten minutes later when Carey had his back turned, and the first thing he knew, something struck him and he went headlong into a fence. "That goat got my goat all right," declared the actor as he gently rubbed his bruised anatomy.

Gentlemen:

I had the pleasure of sitting through one of your "Bluebird" pictures called "God's Crucible" yesterday, and I want to say to you that that is the kind of material that is bound to put your Organization to the front. It was not that I only liked the picture very much, but the audience seemed to appreciate it even more.

I personally have not seen "The Mysterious Mrs M" but the reports from my men are splendid.

Yours very truly, Marcus Loew

Gentlemen:

I am about to present "The Mysterious Mrs M".at the Rialto Theatre and I can say this that if the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.can conscienticusly produce such pictures as these they must be considered sericusly in the front.ranks of the American producers.

"THE MYSTERIOUS MRS M." directed by Lois Weber, in my opinion, is one of the prettiest pictures I have seen in a long while. The acting, the direction, and the beautiful touches of real artistry are a joy and I can assure you I deeply appreciate it.

Any more such pictures that you might produce you may rest assured that I will be glad to book them, and I will consider them a credit to the Rialto.

Very sincerely yours,

"HER SOUL'S INSPIRATION"

Adapted from the well-known story, "MARY KEEP YOUR FEET STILL."

It's A BLUEBIRD Photoplay

"'Her Soul's Inspiration' is good—the star captivating—the staging excellent. A BLUEBIRD IDEA ADAPTED FROM ONE SENT OUT BY THE KANSAS CITY BLUEBIRD WHICH BROUGHT BIG RESULTS

THE theme of "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M." hinges upon the prophecy, made by a famous clairvoyant, that the hero will die at midnight on a certain day. An atmosphere of profound mystery hangs over the entire production.

Imbue your advertising with the same atmosphere. Have a man dressed in Oriental clothes walk through the streets and hand out cards on which the following copy is printed:

> "MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."
> Invites you to witness her amazing ability to foretell the Future, at the > (Name) THEATRE
> (Day and date here)

A variation of the foregoing idea is to have a woman, dressed in Oriental attire and heavily veiled, distribute these cards from an auto. They can also be mailed. On the day you show this Bluebird, have your cashier dress in the costume just described. Your ushers should also wear Oriental clothes.

For several days prior to the presentation of this feature, conduct a guessing contest along the following lines: Get any kind of a glass container. The bigger it is, the better. It might be a two or three-gallon glass bottle, or one of the carboys used for acids.

Fill this container with fine, dry sand and then seal the mouth up with plaster of paris. After the latter has hardened, drill a fine hole through it so as to allow the sand in the container to trickle through in a thin stream.

Announce via your advertising columns in the local papers, or on a sign suspended over the bottle, that the persons guessing the hour at which the glass will be free of sand will be presented with two or more free passes. Or the passes might be given for the best guess on the time required for the emptying of the container.

DE GRASSE ENJOYS VISIT TO CITIES OF EAST COAST.

DIRECTOR JOSEPH DE GRASSE has returned to the Bluebird Studios from New York, Boston and other Eastern cities, where he went for a well-earned vacation. He spent the holidays in the metropolis, and says he never remembers having such a period of enjoyment in his life. He has been working in the West for a number of years, and says it is a relaxation to get back to the old stamping grounds of his stage days and meet his many friends.

"I went East really for a rest," said De Grasse, "but I found so many friends that I knew and between them and my relatives I kept on the move all the time and I had a lot of fun. Perhaps I didn't get the rest, but I certainly feel like a new man."

J. M. Mullin Says Public Wants Short Reels

IN a handsome glass-inclosed office at 13 Stanhope Street, Boston, J. M. Mullin of the Film Exchange Managers' Association, and manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange, discussed the question of the ten to twenty episode serials, all-star productions and programs of short plays. Mr. Mullin has been in the business more than 15 years in many cities. He represents a company which has over $4,000,000 invested in property alone, to say nothing of their photoplays and scenarios.

"Regarding high-salaried stars, I consider them unprofitable to the producer, the exchange and the exhibitor. The public is the chief salary payer. Any $500-a-week star is a liability to this industry, and in order for an organization as large as ours to protect the future of its business it must encourage the exhibitor to use his better judgment in selecting variety shows for his patrons.

"The future success of this business depends upon the prosperity of the exhibitor, which indirectly means that he must increase his patronage by offering to his people a variety program; meaning by this that he is driving patrons away from his theatre by showing them too many five-six and seven-reel subjects which could be cut to two reels without any material loss. I venture to say that there is not a long subject on the market today that could not be made in two or three reels.

"It costs us a great deal more money to produce short length films than it does feature productions. Inasmuch as our organization is positively the largest film producer in the world today we could make five, six and seven-reel features if we felt that that was what the public wanted. In so doing, we could save a great many dollars for the time being. But what we are most interested in is the future of the industry.

"Not many years ago the public was patronizing motion pictures in greater numbers than they are at the present time for the reason that they could drop in at any time and see a variety of subjects and feel sure at all times that in the selection of four, five or six different pictures it would find at least 50 or 75 per cent. of them that would please its desire for amusement. Under the present method of exploitation of this business by the exhibitor the public is forced to find amusement in long productions that possibly do not please their particular taste.

"I have discussed the future with many prominent exhibitors in New England recently and I see that they are beginning to realize the importance of more short-length films. They claim that nobody will come to their theatre after 8 o'clock at night for the reason that the show has already started, while only a few years ago tickets could be sold as late as 10 o'clock without difficulty and the public was satisfied.

"After all you must admit that the story and the action is the most important thing. It is all very fine to put the name of a big star in front of your theatre as a bally-hoo to lure the public, but what it really wants is genuine amusement stripped of technicalities and padding.

"One of the most popular style of pictures on the American market today is the serial production, which is seldom more than two reels per episide. This shows conclusively that the public is in search of action, a live story and lots of punch. If it were true that the public was in search of long-drawn-out stories, serials now on the market would not find patronage.

"This is equally true with comedy film. Ninety per cent. of all the theatres throughout the country make an open statement that they could not do business without good, lively comedy, and yet comedy is not produced in more than two reels, which again proves conclusively that the public wants action with plenty of live and interesting amusement without footage.

"Therefore, I must repeat that the future success of the moving picture enterprise as an amusement for the masses depends upon the selection by the exhibitor of good short-length material and plenty of variety in his program."

"When Thieves Fall Out"

IMP DRAMA IN TWO REELS. WRITTEN BY WM. LIPPERT. PRODUCED BY J. HARVEY.

CAST.

Dan Wallace	Sidney Bracey
Olga Strogoff	Sonia Marcell
Herbert Wood	Harry Benham
Julia Dale	Mildred Gregory

Harry Benham as Herbert Wood.

WHEN THIEVES FALL OUT" is an Imp Drama, written by Wm. Lippert and produced by J. Harvey with Harry Benham in the lead. The story concerns a clever band of crooks and their outwitting.

Herbert Wood, a confidential clerk, is in love with Julia Dale. Mr. Dale approves of his suit for his daughter's hand, but Julia's mother favors Dan Wallace, who poses as a society man, but in reality is the leader of a notorious gang of thieves.

Affiliated with Wallace is Olga Strogoff, who is an expert purloiner of jewelry at social gatherings. Wallace plans to discredit Herbert in the eyes of Julia. He instructs the gangsters to place a man outside of the Dale residence during a reception.

Wallace and Olga both attend the reception. Olga steals a watch from an old gentleman and drops it out of the window to the waiting gangster. Then she adroitly unclasps and removes from Julia's neck a costly pearl necklace. As Olga is about to drop the necklace through the window, she is stopped by Wallace, who tells her angrily that her instructions were not to take anything belonging to Julia. Presently Herbert is seen to drop a card-case. Wallace picks it up, and after enclosing the necklace, puts the card-case back in Herbert's pocket.

The old gentleman discovers the loss of his watch and Julia the loss of her necklace. Mr. Dale telephones to the police station, and Detective Lamar quickly responds. Wallace announces that he knows Herbert to be the thief, as he saw him put the necklace in his coat-pocket. The detective searches him and the necklace is found. The proposed arrest of Herbert, however, is frustrated by Mr. Dale, who declares there must be some mistake.

Nevertheless Wallace has apparently accomplished his purpose, as Julia cuts Herbert dead the next day when he bows to her. But there is trouble in store for Wallace, as Olga betrays jealousy, and after vainly trying to get him to desist in his attentions to Julia, she plans revenge.

Olga conceals herself in the den of the gangsters, and overhears Wallace giving directions to rob the safe of the office where Herbert is employed. Detective Lamar, accusing Herbert of being up to his old tricks, takes him in charge. On the way to the police station, Olga takes note of the arrest and informs the detective of Herbert's innocence. The den is raided and we see Herbert, the detective and half a dozen policemen engage in a vigorous hand-to-hand fight with the gangsters, who are ultimately subdued and led off to the police station. Wallace, however, is shot while attempting to make his escape, and Olga is overcome with emotion and remorse on hearing of his death.

"The Crimson Arrow" with Mona Darkfeather

Big U Drama in Two Reels.

After many years of peace, the Indians become restless and decide to make war upon the white men. Black Partridge, the chief, who is chosen by the tribe to be their spokesman, goes to Fort Dearborn, to return to the Commandant the symbol of peace which has passed between them.

"White father," says the Indian, "my people are crying for your blood. I return to you the Peace Medal which you gave us."

The Commandant, however, makes light of the warning, and Rawlins, a black sheep among the officers, even attacks Singing Bird, the daughter of Black Partridge, on one of her visits to the fort. The members of the tribe, who are bitter against the whites, stir the feelings of the others with impassioned oratory, and scouts are sent to encircle the fort and watch the movements of the inhabitants. They report that no notice has been taken of the warning, and that the soldiers are not preparing. So they gather their forces and fall upon the whites.

Singing Bird rushes ahead of them to warn the whites that the Indians are upon them. The cunning savages offer safe conduct to the soldiers, who accept it. As they march out of the fort on their way to Fort Wayne in accordance with the orders of their superior officer, the Indians fall upon them. Nearly all are killed, but Singing Bird shows a way of escape to he rfavorites, among them the officer and his wife.

She assists them to the river, where they take to a canoe. The remnant of the survivors is rescued by soldiers from Fort Wayne, but Singing Bird is fatally wounded in a last encounter with her people. She willingly gives her life for the officer whom she loves, but who has a white wife.

REYNOLDS FILMS PLAY.

DIRECTOR Lynn Reynolds and his company of Bluebird players have gone to the snow-clad countains in the vicinity of Huntington Lake, California, for the purpose of securing snow scenes and correct atmosphere for a big story laid in Alaska.

The Reynolds' company has been provided with fur clothing, snowshoes and a complete outfit for living in the wilds, even to the dog team of "huskies," which is maintained at Universal City for just such photoplays. Several Alaskans assisted Reynolds in making his preparations for the trip. His next Bluebird release will be "The Cruise of the Alden Besse."

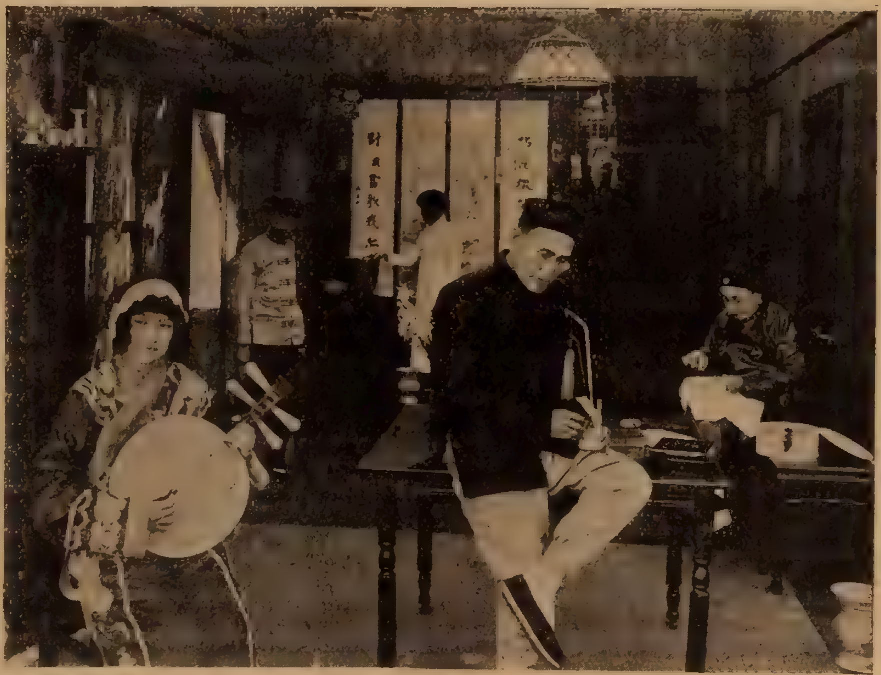
A Chinese Picture By Chinese Actors

A PRODUCTION unique in the annals of picture-making will be released as the Red Feather feature on February 26. The photoplay is called "The War of the Tongs," but it is far more than a mere story of Chinese secret societies. The story was written by a Chinaman, and every single role in the play, from hero and heroine to extra man, was played by a real Chinese.

The picture was produced in San Francisco, and deals with the life of the Celestials who inhabit their own quarter in that city. To the last detail the picture is true to life, and is uncolored by American settings, properties or costumes. It is true that the film was directed by an American, but that was more for the sake of the mechanical details of the production, than for any other reason, and the native actors were quite uninfluenced in their work by his Occidental ideas.



The cast was recruited from the "Imperial Chinese Players," a dramatic organization of San Francisco, and is the only motion picture ever made in which the entire dramatis personae is composed of Chinese. In the native theatre, all the feminine roles are taken by young men, for, as was once the custom with the Western stage, actresses are unknown to the Chinese drama. In "The War of the Tongs," however, the leading feminine role is played by Miss Lin Neong, who acts for the camera like a veteran. The scenes in the household of Lee Hoy give most interesting glimpses of home life among the San Francisco Chinese. One of them is illustrated in the cut.

"HIS WIFE'S RELATIVES."

Nestor Comedy.

Written by Bess Meredyth.
Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Ma Smith	Mrs. Roberts
Pa Smith	Fred Gamble
"Big Bill" Smith	Lee Moran
Eddie	Eddie Lyons
Cousin	Harry Nolan
Girl	Edith Roberts
Kid Sister	Lena Baskette

Eddie, deeply in love with Edith, was invited to her home. There he met Pa Smith in his shirt sleeves; Ma Smith shouting orders to the others; the baby howling; the kid brother dashing about with a wooden horse; the kid sister, and "Big Bill" Smith, who bossed the whole family. Eddie was jollied by Bill, and when he asked Pa Smith if he could marry Edith, all the family listened at the door.

After the wedding, the family and their friends accompanied Eddie and his wife to their new bungalow, where Bill broke some of the new dishes; the children jumped up and down on the bed; Pa passed the gift-cigars to all the friends; and upon the suggestion of Bill, they all decided to stay there for the night.

So the family, with Bill's pals added, went to bed. Edith and Ma slept in one bed; Bill and his friends in the other; Pan on the couch; the two youngest Smiths on the dining-table; and Eddie had the bath-tub.

The next morning Eddie rented the bungalow nearby and had two huskies move all the furniture over. They all rushed out to discover the trouble, and Eddie told them that this was his home. He calmly informed Edith that she must choose between him and her family, turning away toward their own home, said in unison, "Well, if that isn't a grateful guy for you."

"FEARLESS FREDDIE IN THE WOOLLY WEST."

Powers Comedy Cartoon.

Fearless Freddie has many exciting adventures in the wooly West. First he becomes a cowboy, and attempts to ride a bucking broncho. Then he starts out in search of Indians, who shoot at him with their bows and arrows. He saves himself from being killed by waking in time to hear his mother telling him to go to bed.

"GIANTS OF THE AMERICAN FOREST."

Powers Educational in One Reel.

"Giants of the American Forest" is a wonderful one-reel study of the Redwoods of California, without doubt the oldest living things in the world. The Government has set aside several parks where they will be preserved. The cutting of one of the monsters is shown. The tremendous diameter o fthe logs necessitates the blasting of them into more convenient size. They are then "snaked" by cable up the hillside, felling trees and underbrush in their path. If the cable breaks, there is great loss of time and money. The logs trains carry the logs to the saw-mill. A ninety-two-inch board, easily the largest in the world, is shown. The longest flume in the world carries bundles of boards sixty-five miles to Sanger. It drops 4,000 feet in the first six miles. At Sanger the boards are received and sorted, and then loaded onto flat cars.

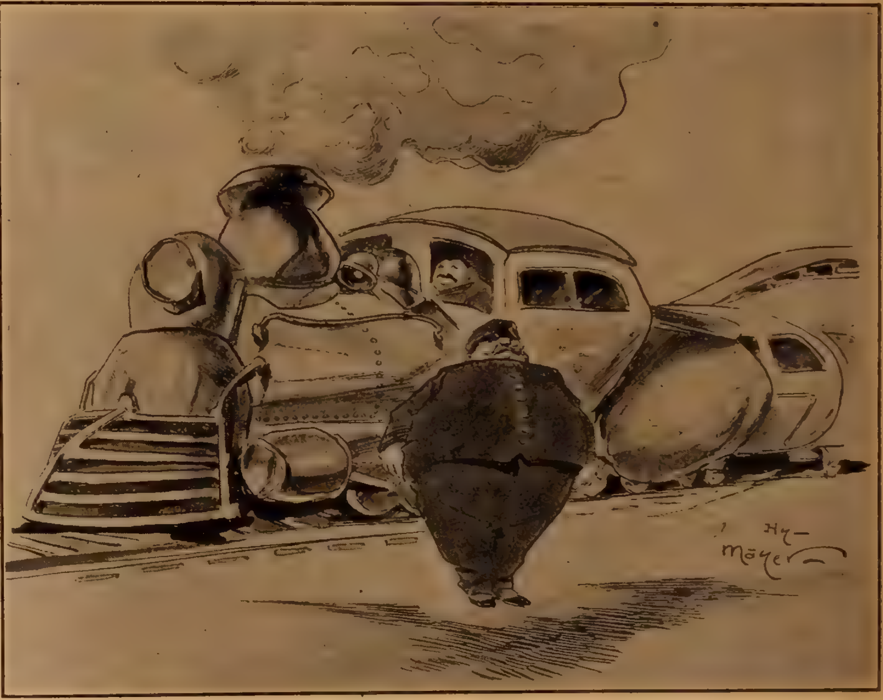
"IN THE SHADOWS OF NIGHT."

Rex Drama.

With Jane Fearnly and William Shay.

Jane and William, about four and five years old, are seen at the bedside, saying their night prayer, with their mother close by.

Years pass, and Jane is married. Her only child is about four years old. Her brother William has taken the downward path and associates with a gang of crooks. Tired of always sharing the loot with the gang, he starts out to do a job himself. He enters a house and hears a child saying its prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep." He recalls how he and his sister used to say the same prayer together. He draws the curtain and sees his sister with her little boy. This touches William's heart, and he is leaving, when Jane hears him. She takes a revolver and fires two shots through the curtain. William falls to the floor. Jane enters the room and is just in time to see her brother breath his last.



If our railroads continue to be prosperous they soon will look like this, according to Hy. Mayer, famous caricaturist of the Universal Animated Weekly.

"OUT FOR THE DOUGH."

Joker Comedy.

Story and scenario by Jack Cunningham.
Produced by William Beaudine.

CAST.

James Cartottle	John Cook
His Daughter	Lillian Peacock
"Wandering" Webster	Wm. Franey
Hired Girl	Gale Henry
Lillian's Sweetheart	Milburn Moranti

Cartottle catches his daughter Lillian and her sweetheart Milt making love, and he kicks Milt so hard that he lands in a hay-stack. Then he leads Lillian by the ear into the house, telling her that she must be very pleasant to the new minister, who is on the way to their house. Lillian hurries out to tell her troubles to her lover.

Meanwhile, "Wandering" Webster, a tramp, sneaks to the kitchen window and is seen by the hired girl, who can love anything in the shape of a man. Bashful and smirking, she invites him into the kitchen to eat. Cartottle passes the window and sees this picture of contentment. He rushes in and kicks him out.

Wandering Webster meets the new Reverand driving a lazy horse, and reading the Bible at the same time. He forces the man to descend from the buggy and to exchange clothes with him.

When Wandering Webster arrives as the minister, Cartottle receives him with great gusto. The visitor makes many demands with well-assumed nonchalance, and makes love to Lillian in the most presumptuous manner.

Having been informed by Milt that the hired girl is an heiress, the tramp proposes to her and soon afterward they became man and wife. He then finds that her fortune consists of a smill pile of pennies. The real minister tells him he must stay by his marriage contract.

Milt and Lillian have also been married. The unfortunate tram pis set to washing dishes, large tears dropping into the pan all the while.

"RED VENGEANCE."

Big U Drama.

The Indians and whites are living in peace until one of the whites commits an overt act, which arouses the redmen. Johnson, the trapper, finds Peach Blossom out in the fields gathering herbs, and kidnaps her. The girl sees the Indians out on a hunt, and calls to them. The trapper throws her to the ground and then escapes. Eagle Eye, in revenge, goes to Johnson's and takes his boy, who is carried to the Indian camp and turned over to Peach Blossom. She becomes a little mother to the child, refusing to permit others to touch him.

Mrs. Johnson rides to the fort and informs the commander of her loss. He orders out a troop. When the Indians hear of the approach of the soldiers, they break camp and are caught in a very poor tactical position in a hollow, where the soldiers can not only shoot down into them, but roll rocks among them. The Indians are captured and lodged in the stockade.

Big Rock and Peach Blossom scale the fence. Big Rock steals up behind the sentry, throws him to the ground and gets away. The soldiers pursue. The chief, exhausted, is overtaken and shot. The Indian woman plunges a knife into her heart.

"THE HIGH COST OF STARVING."

Victor One-Reel Comedy.

Scenario by Maie Havey.
Produced by Leslie T. Peacocke.

CAST.

Sidney Simpson	Eugene Walsh
Mrs. Simpson	Eileen Sedgwick
Chef	Al McKinnon
Maid	Dolly Ohnet

Mrs. Simpson attends a lecture on "Vegetarianism," and is invited to join the club by the professor. She becomes a fanatic on the subject, and forbids any meat to enter the house, much to the disgust of Sidney, their servants, and the local butcher.

The cat's chop is the only morsel of meat that is allowed to enter the house. Sidney manages surreptitiously to eat the chop. Then a great idea strikes him.

He buys several kittens and brings them home in triumph. He then tells his wife that they must have at least three more chops daily.

Sidney then reads in his paper an announcement of an alarming epidemic in Russia, brought on by vegetarian diet, which causes terrible blotches on the face. He takes the cook and the maid into his confidence and they and Sidney pretend to be sufferings from "Ricketts," shaking violently all over. Sidney paints all their faces with blotches of "Iodine" and that of his wife, while she is asleep. Her alarm in the morning sends her to the telephone to order in a plentiful supply of meat.

Victor Fairy Drama.

Story by Helen Jonas.
Scenario by Fred Myton.
Produced by Lule Warrenton.

CAST.

Sea Foam	Peggy Custer
Prince Happy Day	Antrim Short
Zamba	Elsie Cort

One day, Zamba, a wicked witch, finds a box washed up by the waves, and in it is a beautiful fairy child, Sea Foam. Zamba takes her to her cave and begins her up-bringing.

Years later, when Sea Foam has developed into a beautiful young girl, Zamba uses her as a lure to draw travelers to a pool into which she pushes them after removing their valuables.

One day, the news of Sea Foam's unhappiness is brought by the Wind to the Goddess of the Good Fairies. It is discovered that love is the only charm that can overcome the machinations of Zamba. So Prince Happy Day is sent to the rescue, but Zamba casts her spell over him and, blinded, he goes the way of the others.

Sea Foam manages to elude the witch. When she kisses the Prince, the spell is broken and his sight restored. Fire flares up and consumes Zamba, and Sea Foam and Prince Happy Day are free.

CAST.

The Ragpicker	Claire McDowell
Death	T. D. Crittenden
The Man	Leo Pearson
The Wife	Betty Schade

In a dirty, dilapidated hovel, lives an old ragpicker. Though existing in a wretched cellar, yet she possesses a bag of gold and a magnificent diamond necklace.

One night, while worshipping her hoard, Death appears before her and reviews with her the horrors of her past life. All has been for worldly gain. When young and beautiful, she auctioned her body to the highest bidder; she sold her son to the gallows for gold; and because of her monstrous greediness, throttled a young woman for her jewels. Death claims her, and she has to leave all.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

ST. JOHNS, N. B.—Mr. Walfield of the Orpheum Theatre in Bridgewater has just made arrangements with the Universal Company to use Red Feather and Bluebird Features.

Bartling and Mulhall of the Opera House in Liverpool opened their house with Universal service and have been using Universal service ever since.

Mr. Margetts, St. John, N. B., Universal Manager, writes:

"We have just had a private showing of the Special State Right Feature "Idle Wives." This subject has been passed by the New Brunswick Board of Censors and some fifty prominine citizens as well as newspaper men and moving picture men saw this picture. Every one pronounced it an excellent production and one of the best things that has ever been shown here. This exhibition took place in the Imperial Theatre last evening.

"Although no arrangements have been made for the booking of this subject here in St. John, we are in hopes of making arrangements to show it at an early date. We have had a number of requests from exhibitors in the Province regarding this subject and we are in hopes of booking it in most of the larger towns before it leaves the territory. It has already been booked in New Glasgow by Mr. N. W. Mason for three days, and it will also run in Sydney, N. S., in M. L. R. Acker's Palace Theatre for three days in the early part of February.

"The Roseland Theatre owned by Mr. N. W. Mason in New Glasgow was opened recently; they used the Red Feather, "The Mainspring." Mr. Christie of this office was in New Glasgow for the opening to represent the Universal and he reports that the house was packed from the time the doors were opened and that every one was well pleased with the program presented. The house is very prettily decorated in old rose and without a doubt is one of the finest theaters in the Maritime Provinces. They are using two Powers 6B machines and have a motor generator set in their booth.

"We also have a large number of calls for "Robinson Crusoe," and we are in hopes of receiving this subject at an early date so that it can be booked through the territory. "The Purple Mask" is beginning to take hold and we expect to have an exceptional run on this serial before it is finished."

Mr. F. R. Lennon, Assistant General Manager of the Universal Film Company in Canada, announces that "Black Orchids," the sensational Bluebird Feature with Cleo Madison, is being played at the Strand Theatre, week of January 15th. The same week the Joker Comedy "When Damon Fell for Pythias," which had a full week's run at the Rialto Thetre, New York, played the full week at the Regent Theatre, Toronto.

Many bookings have been talked of for "Robinson Crusoe" the special Universal release just received.

The Animated Song Pictures which the Universal is releasing now are becoming very popular and it is expected that the Regent Theatre, Toronto, the biggest house in the city, will book them, following which is quite a list of bookings which would take some time to publish .

All the publicity work in connection with the Monster Rally of the Exhibitors and Exchangemen of Toronto on Tuesday and Wednesday, January 23rd and 24th, has been in charge of the Publicity Service Department of Universal under W. A. Bach. As the Rally was only decided upon seven days in advance, it naturally took some rapid work, but by the rapid methods and loyal assistance of the Department Staff, the work was accomplished in good time, and as a result the whole of Ontario is fully covered and the necessity of meeting in Toronto to organize and fighting the adverse legislation is understood.

Quebec.—The bill increasing the censorship fees on moving picture films was amended by the Legislative Council last week in such a way as to provide for a reduction of the new schedule of fees if it is found not to be workable.

The bill increases the censorship fee to $5 per film. The amendment is to the effect that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, if expedient, make a reduction in the charge.

VANCOUVER.—"The Dumb Girl of Portici" played to capacity business at the Columbia Theatre, Victoria, the entire Christmas week. This film is now being shown at the Globe Theatre, Vancouver, and played to a record matinee on New Year's Day. Business during the balance of the week was very satisfying to the National Amusement Company. Next week Pavlowa will play in the largest suburban house, Broadway Theatre, seating capacity almost 1,000, and everybody feels sure that business will be good.

have a day off, and drives Harry to the Academy in his little donkey cart. There Harry is surprised to see his picture on the line and to meet his uncle and his new wife and Kitty among the crowd who gather around and admire the picture "Me an' Me Pal." Then Mr. Hilliard learns that Harry painted the picture. And, as a reward, he not only sets up Labby in a regular green grocer's shop, but makes peace with his nephew, who shortly marries Kitty.

"A STUDIO CINDERELLA."

Laemmle Drama.

CAST.

Plain Jane	Jane Gail
The Artist	Matt Moore

Plain Jane, the Cinderella of the studio, loves the famous artist in spite of her rags. One afternoon she dresses herself in the clothes of a rich client. The artist is struck with her beauty, nurses her after an accident, and then marries her.

"JOYS AND TEARS OF CHINA, AS SEEN BY DOCTOR DORSEY."

Powers Educational.

In this release we see the Chinese at work and at play. We pass along the streets lined with vendors, and see a wedding procession in which every one parades except the bride, who is forced to remain at home. It also shows the contrast between the funeral of a poor boy and of a Chinese prince.

Sign 'Em Up!

A PROMINENT director, lately returned to New York after a considerable absence, has had an eye-opening experience.

Two manufacturers immediately bid for his services—and in practically the same way.

"Now, see here," said each. "How much do you want?"

"Well," said the director, "I—I don't——"

"How about $——?" interrupted each manufacturer, mentioning a year's salary which approximates a millionaire's yearly income.

"Thanks," said the director. "But just a moment. You expect me to produce good pictures—of course.

"Well, then, there are other considerations more important than my salary. What material have you got? What is your organization?"

"Oh! That's all right," said the manufacturer. "We'll talk about that afterwards. Just sign your name here."

We cite this remarkable incident, not to indicate to legislative investigating committees that the manufacturer is rolling over in wealth—nor to the exhibitor that the manufacturer has money to throw away.

As a matter of fact we know for a certainty that the manufacturer is having the devil's own time to make or keep any money.

The point is that good pictures are not made by directors' salaries—nor stars' salaries, nor by anyone's salary.

The talent and money thrown helter-skelter and opulently into pictures today give ample proof of the producers' generous desire to make good pictures.

Production extravagance, in fact, savors of the early sluicing era of a great gold field.

And our distribution leaks are just like the gaping cracks of the first crudely made sluice boxes.

Gold is slipping through and away at an alarming rate. The waste-pile is getting it.

Salaries don't make good pictures.

Only one thing does—and that's organization.

It certainly is a portent of good pictures and good business to come to have a director wave aside an overwhelming salary and ask for the tools to work with.

It is a sign, we believe, of the sanity now entering the industry and of the solidity we all know it is bound to have.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

"The Purple Mask"—Episode Seven

Patricia's ready sympathy is enlisted by the unfortunate mother.

IN this chapter, called "The Race for Freedom," Pat successfully smuggles Kelly out of the country, and they find themselves on the same boat bound for America.

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Detective Phil Kelly	Francis Ford
Mrs. Van Nuys	Jean Hathaway
Silk Donahue	John Duffy
Pete Bartlett	Pete Gerald
Bull Sanderson	Jerry Ash
Stephen Dupont	John Featherstone
Jacques, the butler	Mario Biannchi
Duke Hestor	Duke Worne

KELLY, acting upon the King's orders, arrested Pat when she faced him in the King's presence. He applies the handcuffs to her wrist, and sends her into the next room under guard of one of his assistants. The populace enter the palace and commend the king for giving the money to the poor—a tribute he unjustly received—for Pat had been solely instrumental in having the dead Queen's wishes complied with.

The Sphinx is angered by the King's attitude and forgets himself. His language to the King angers his majesty and Kelly is ordered under arrest. While the guard leaves Kelly alone with the King for a few moments, the Sphinx attacks his majesty, changes clothes with him and escapes. When the guard comes to arrest the Sphinx they find in his stead the King, bound hand and foot.

In the meanwhile, Pat has induced Kelly's assistant to unlock the handcuffs that shackle her wrists. Just at that moment some members of the People's League enter the room, and Pat leads them in an attack upon Kelly's man. The assistant detective is shackled with the handcuffs to the arm of a chair, and Pat makes good her escape.

When Kelly flees from the palace he is directed by Duke Hestor to take a certain sleigh that will carry him to the border. Complying in haste, because the King's guards are approaching to arrest him, Kelly is rushed across the boundary line and takes an automobile for Paris. Just as he is entering the machine a card is handed to him from the driver of the sleigh—and it is then disclosed that it is Pat herself who has safely conducted Kelly across the border. The girl takes another motor and is hurried to Paris by another route.

When Kelly arrives in Paris he is summoned before the commandant of police and ordered to leave France, a long stay in America being suggested as his proper move. Kelly has come under suspicion of the police because of the several escapades in which Pat has been concerned and in which the Sphinx has every time been baffled. Wondering what will become of Pat (because she has with her aunt disappeared from home) Kelly takes a boat for America.

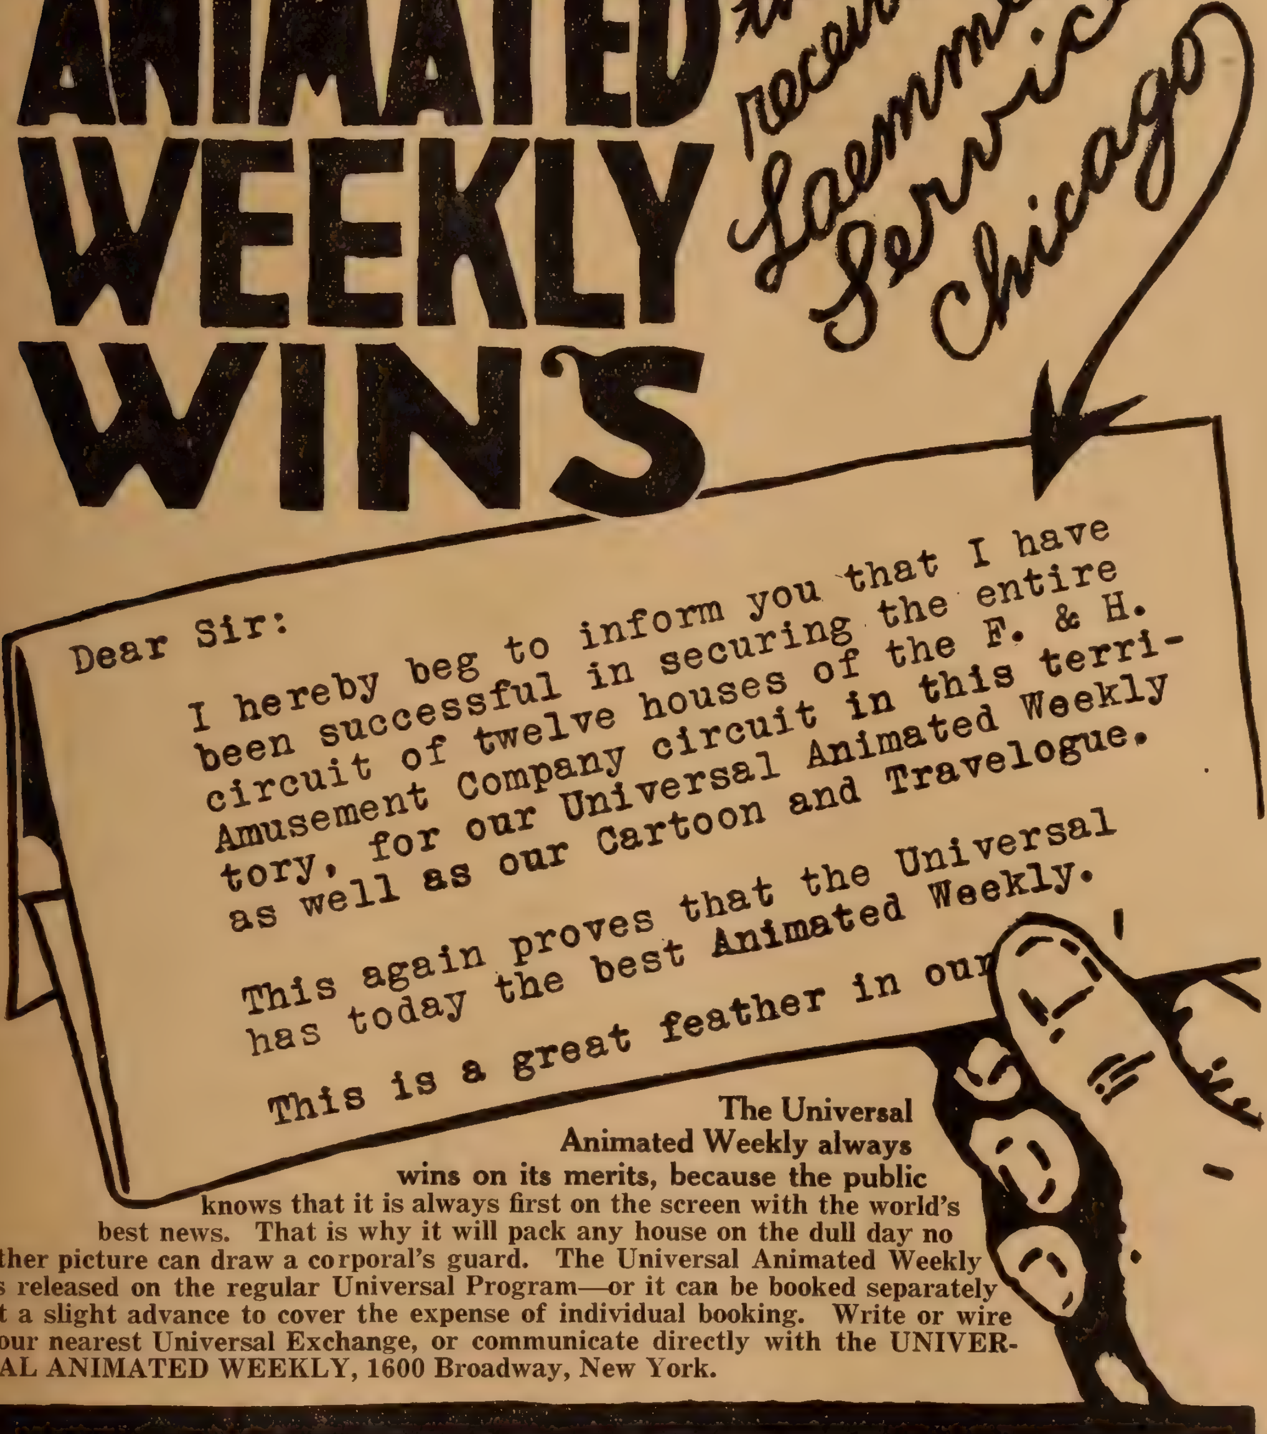
He is astonished to see Pat and her aunt in the dining salon at the first meal on shipboard. On the passage over, Pat interests herself in a poor woman, with a baby, who is traveling second class. The woman points out among the first class passengers a man and his wife, telling Pat that the man betrayed her, robbed her of all her money and then married the woman he is now with.

There is a costly string of pearls, the woman tells Pat, that was bought with her money. Now the wife of the woman's deceiver is wearing the pearls and other jewels, while the woman who provided the money through the ruthless actions of the man, is penniless. Pat's sympathy being aroused, she promises the woman that she shall be recompensed.

On the morning of the day the ship is due to land in New York, the pearls are stolen. The captain of the ship commissions Sphinx Kelly to recover them, and as the episode ends, Kelly is just entering Pat's stateroom, prompted by his suspicions, to make a thorough search for the pearls among Pat's belongings.

The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY WINS

Read this letter received from Laemmle Film Service Chicago



Dear Sir:

I hereby beg to inform you that I have been successful in securing the entire circuit of twelve houses of the F. & H. Amusement Company circuit in this territory, for our Universal Animated Weekly as well as our Cartoon and Travelogue.

This again proves that the Universal has today the best Animated Weekly.

This is a great feather in our

The Universal Animated Weekly always wins on its merits, because the public knows that it is always first on the screen with the world's best news. That is why it will pack any house on the dull day no other picture can draw a corporal's guard. The Universal Animated Weekly is released on the regular Universal Program—or it can be booked separately at a slight advance to cover the expense of individual booking. Write or wire your nearest Universal Exchange, or communicate directly with the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY, 1600 Broadway, New York.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

WHAT is bothering the Editor of this here page is:

Do Exhibitors generally—that vast army of successful men who are running the Universal Program—take all the advantage of the stunts printed on this page week after week?

Won't you please write to me, THE EDITOR, Moving Picture Weekly, 409 Pearl Street, New York, and tell me whether you have ever tried any of these stunts, and if so what did they get you?

Now that is off my chest, please crowd in together for a little close harmony. Honest to goodness, can you imagine any one handing out these stunts week after week if they didn't have the inspiration of that wonderful Universal Program? No. Of course not. Please look at pages 28 and 29. Look at the feast for fans spread there. Think of the varied subjects, night after night; the stars that are appearing in one, two and three-reel pictures. Why, man, you ought not to need these stunt suggestions at all. You ought to be able to put something over on your own account for every release on the Universal Program. Take a close look at the releases on the pages mentioned. Do a little hard thinking FOR YOURSELF, and then write me what you have done or what you plan to do.

THOUSANDS of people remember the Universal picture, "My Old Dutch," with pleasure. On February 12th a Red Feather photoplay will be released, which has been pronounced by a room full of experts to be a second "My Old Dutch." It is called "Me an' Me Pal." "Me" is a London coster, and his "pal" is a small and very intelligent donkey. The picture is one of those simple, homely, altogether delightful stories which are as rare as they are popular. If you ran "My Old Dutch," you should do something to let people know that this Red Feather is on the same order. Newspaper advertising, posters and slide announcements should be used to that effect. You know, the London costers are some of the most picturesque and distinctive people in the world, with all manner of strange features in customs and dress. Have an elderly man dressed in coster clothes, tight trousers, widening at the foot, and sewn all down the seams with rows and rows of pearl buttons. He should wear a short coat liberally decorated in the same way and a felt hat, turned down in front and up in the back. Have him lead a donkey, if you can get one, but if not, his costume will attract attention. Of course he must carry appropriate announcements.

THE L-KO Komedy for February 16th is very funny, and is called "Brave Little Waldo." Fatty Voss, who tips the beam at something like three hundred, is little Waldo, who is sent to the West to overcome his incurable sissyism. His finnicky manners, wrist watch and dainty gestures are an amusing contrast to his great bulk. If you can get a big fat man, dress him in dandified fashion with a huge watch on his wrist. Then send him out, with an announcement on his hat and let him consult his watch very often so that no one will miss it.

THE Joker Comedy for February 17th is called "Mule Mates," and the mule in it is a scream. He is played by a celebrated impersonator of animals, and, with William Franey for his "mate," he provides a laugh in every foot of the picture. A big cardboard head of a mule hung in your lobby, with both the huge ears set on pins so that they may be manipulated by hidden wires, would attract a lot of attention to the picture. And if you could get a false mule's head from some theatrical costumer and send a man out wearing it and carrying an announcement at the same time, there would be few who would not know that there was something unusual at your theatre.

THE Universal Special Feature for the week of February 12th is a three-reel presentation of Daniel De Foe's famous story, "Robinson Crusoe." This is another case when special notices should be sent to the schools, because the book forms part of the curriculum of nearly all of them. The production is a lavish one, and the story has been closely followed and should attract every child and grown-up as well, who has read the book. If you send a man in typical Crusoe garb, dress of shaggy goat skin, with pointed cap of skin with ends hanging down over the shoulders and a tree-branch in his hand for a staff, through the streets, every one will recognize him. Don't forget to have a dog with him and to put a stuffed parrot on his shoulder. Have man Friday, too, if you like, but he may be rather chilly if the weather is true to form. This would make a splendid release for Lincoln's birthday, when all the children are out of school.

LIBERTY

The Universal Serial Glorious Has Set The World's Highest Standard

Consistently successful as the Universal Serials have been it is a fact that they scored their biggest success; their triumphant knockout in "LIBERTY."

Literally hundreds of Exhibitors have written to tell us that "LIBERTY" was the biggest winner, the greatest box-office attraction; the most remarkable money-getter they have ever shown.

A brilliant cast including Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt, Eddie Polo, G. Raymond Nye, Bertram Grassby, Neal Hart, and others are supported by hundreds of Rough Riders, Mexicans, Cowboys, Texas Rangers, American Cavalry—positively the largest and most distinguished cast ever used in a serial photoplay.

Book this picture for the assured profits it will bring you. Communicate with any of the 73 Universal Exchanges, or Universal Film Mfg. Company, Carl Laemmle, President, "The Largest Film Manufacturing Concern in the Universe," 1600 Broadway, New York.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Terror." Featuring Jack Mulhall. Fifty-sixth Red Feather Production. Directed by Raymond Wells. Released February 19. You may find it hard to imagine happy, smiling Jack Mulhall as a "terror"—in other words, a gunman, with plenty of notches on his gun. Not a Western bad man, but a product of the city; with nerve enough to go and get his man when the guy higher up gives the word. But when you see Jack in this part you will realize how wonderfully versatile he is and what remarkable stories are being made into plays under the Red Feather Brand. The story tells how Jack falls in love with a Salvation Army girl ,and though he is drawn toward a better life, he can't see how saying a few words will square him for all the evil things he has done. Which proves that he was square at heart after all. He refuses to kill the reform District Attorney, and a plot is hatched to do the work and frame Jack for it. How Jack saves the lawyer's life and "squares himself" makes one of the strongest dramas of the season. Book it and boost it hard.

Herbert Rawlinson in "The Great Torpedo Secret." Three-Reel Gold Seal Drama. Supported by Neva Gerber and a brilliant cast. Directed by Stuart Paton. Released February 20. This big thrree-reeler gives Herbert Rawlinson a chance to shine, and that is really all that need be said to convince you that it is a humdinger that will make your audiences holler for more of the same. Herbert has an uncle who retires from his work of manufacturing munitions of war, and Herbert becomes manager. He buys inventions for several hundred thousands of dollars, and his uncle tells him they are worthless. How Herbert proves they are not by selling them to the government for millions, and how a clever girl helps him —and—how Herbert gets the girl to help him spend the coin makes one of the prettiest and most interesting dramas that Herbert has ever appeared in.

"After the Balled-Up Ball." With Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. Another 2-Reel L-KO Foolishness. Directed by J. G. Blyestone. Released February 21. Here's where I quit. I refuse to try to describe an L-KO Komedy. It can't be did. There's nothing to tell but lawfter, and there's so much of that that there isn't space enough in this whole darned magazine to crowd it all in. It's a typical L-KO scream, and Phil and Lucille will keep your fans in roars from start to finish. If you want a big comedy night book this and play it up strong.

"The Comeback." Two-Reel 101-Bison Western Drama. A Charles Van Loan story. Released February 24. The amount of Western atmosphere crowded into this big two-reeler is due not only to Charlie Van Loan's knowledge of the West, but also to the fact that the Universal has been making the best Westerns for so long that Universal directors never make a mistake. The story is laid in a dead mining town. One day a stranger blows in, and the six men who still live there get him into a phony faro game and trim him proper. Later they find he has been prospecting, and looking over his samples, they think he has struck it rich. So they buy his claim for twelve hundred bucks, only to find that his revenge was sure, but sweeter to him than them. A corking good picture with a punch.

ALL your patrons do when a Universal Comedy is shown is LAUGH—LAUGH—LAUGH. They don't have to worry for fear something vulgar is going to make them uncomfortable—or whether there is plot enough to make the story hang together. That's the purpose of NESTORS, L-KO'S and JOKERS, the cleanest comedies in the world today. They have a punch, a freshness and spontaneous quality that makes them different from all other comedies.

You have the advantage—if you book the Universal Program Service—of getting these marvelous crowd-getters on the regular Program. Or if you want a Universal Comedy to strengthen your feature Program or make a better show for your people, you can book Universal Comedies separately, at a slight advance over the pro rata cost to Exhibitors who use the full service.

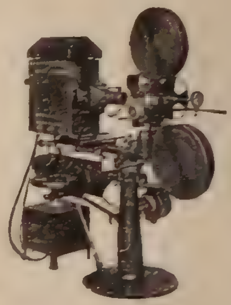
DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU



That the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. has done more for the exhibitor by furnishing a machine for his booth at a great saving than any other similar company in existence? If you did not know this we wish to impress upon you that the above is a fact.

WE fear no competition when it comes to COST OF UPKEEP and SIMPLICITY of machine, nor is competition plentiful when considering exactness of machine.

The MOTIOGRAPH is in a class by itself.

With a combination of accuracy—simplicity—economy — service and satisfaction and the comparatively small initial cost the MOTIOGRAPH is the biggest buy today.

The MOTIOGRAPH is not intended to merely produce an excellent picture for a short time, but to continue to give unexcelled projection for years. The material used will not wear out with continued use.

The price is within reach of every conservative buyer.

The performance of this machine, with exceedingly low cost of upkeep and extremely long life, are things that every exhibitor should take into consideration. Just give our dealer a chance to demonstrate its superior qualities.

S. L. ROTHAPFEL needs no introduction to the Trade. He is known (if not in person, by reputation) to every Exhibitor in the business. Mr. Rothapfel, by virtue of his exceptional managerial ability, keen foresight and knowledge of what the public wants, has achieved a brilliant success. That is distinctly why we doubly emphasize that fact that in Mr. Rothapfel's choosing BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS for the Rialto (America's Finest Moving Picture Theatre) he has set an example that will be followed by the shrewdest Exhibitors in the Trade. IT'S A PRETTY SAFE BET TO FOLLOW THE FOOTSTEPS OF SUCCESSFUL MEN. Think it over.

To the Exhibitor who runs an "Open Booking or Feature House"

You are always on the lookout for distinctly good specialties that will strengthen your show, popularize your house and add to your profits. The specialties in the smaller circle above are the finest of short reel subjects that can be booked anywhere. Look over the list, and thank the Universal for so arranging the great Universal Program that, by paying a slight advance, you can book these marvelous program attractions and be assured that you have crowd-getters, no matter what else you may have on your program. This list is made for your convenience. Read it carefully and then communicate with your nearest Universal Exchange, or with the Home Office at the address given below.

To the Exhibitor who Runs a "Program House"

If you are running a program house and not getting the patronage you think you are entitled to, look at the twenty-nine reels included in the releases listed in BOTH circles above. These twenty-nine reels constitute the regular UNIVERSAL PROGRAM—the most varied and scientifically balanced Program on earth. Look at the high class dramas with well known stars—in two and three reels—look at the comedies—Nestors, L-KO'S and Jokers; look at the Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Screen Magazine, the two greatest one-reel features in the world; look at the Westerns, with more punch to the reel than most other five-reel Westerns; look at the Red Feather five-reel feature—the peer of any five-reelers on the market. You can't beat this layout, gentlemen. Better get in line for good business today by writing to your nearest Universal Exchange, or to

ALL HAIL

(No. 163. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

WHETHER you want to believe it or not; and whether you argue against it or not, the regular program is coming back faster and faster. Ultimately it will be king. That's settled. Accept it as a fact and do all your future figuring and planning with that fact as your basis.

If there were not already hundreds of proofs for any thinking man to see, you could prove it to your own satisfaction by simply watching what the feature companies are doing—AND THEN ANALYZING IT.

For example, some of them are announcing that they intend to release one-reel comedies, one-reel novelties and so on.

Why?

Simply because they know the feature is dying a gradual but horrible death and they want to establish themselves in the short-subject business before the feature fad collapses forever.

Why, gentlemen, do you realize that the more enterprising theatres are now using features as fillers whereas only a short time ago the short subjects were considered little more than fillers for features?

And now the point has been reached where the FEATURE WON'T CARRY ITSELF but must have a one-reel comedy or novelty along with it to interest the jaded and featured-to-death movie fans!

It's the handwriting on the wall and it's written in letters a mile high. If you don't see it and grasp its significance it's simply because you don't want to see it!

TH' KINK!

If you think I'm hammering home these facts to benefit the Universal Company you're making one grand mistake. It is for your good that I am throwing the spotlight on the true situation. It is a matter of complete indifference to the Universal whether the demand is for features or for a program, because we are not only making both kinds, but making them far better than any one else. Moreover, I believe ours is the only company which has elminated waste and extravagance and reached the closest approach to 100 per cent. efficiency that any company can ever hope to reach in this business.

It is going to be INCREASINGLY DIFFICULT for others to compete with the Universal in quality or cost because most of them will have to go through the experimental stages which the Universal has long since left behind.

We've never for one day permitted the quality of our short subjects to drop—and we never intend to. We held back when all others cast short subjects to the winds and let themselves be stampeded toward the feature. And now we're going to reap the reward, because——

The program is coming back and no one on earth is, or will be, in the position that the Universal is to meet the demand for quality and quantity!

Kiss your feature nightmares good-by and prepare to get back again to the joys of NET PROFITS!

King Program is about to climb aboard his throne again. ALL HAIL THE KINK!

Scenes from the RED FEATHER PRODUCTION
"THE WAR OF THE TONGS"

"The Indian's Lament"

GOLD SEAL Drama of the plains in three reels. Story by Noble Johnson. Scenario by Walter Woods, produced by Henry McRae, with Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill in the leading rôles.

Above—Young falls exhausted from his horse. Below—The Indian hurt on the trail.

CAST.

Jim Young	Lee Hill
John Adair	E. N. Wallack
Bess Conolly	Marie Walcamp
Mrs. Conolly	Nanine Wright
"Sleepy Horse"	Noble Johnson

MARIE WALCAMP has never had a better opportunity to show her daring horsemanship than in this Gold Seal picture, which was written by her fellow-actor, Noble Johnson, adapted for the screen by Walter Woods, and produced by Henry McRae. The story fairly hums with action.

John Adair is game warden in one of the countries bordering on the Indian reservation, and he and his deputy, Jim Young, make their headquarters at Mrs. Conolly's boarding-house. Mrs. Conolly has a daughter, Bess, who commands the admiration of all who see her. Both Adair and Young are in love with the girl. Adair receives a letter from headquarters telling him that a party of Indians has left the reservation in search of hunting grounds.

One day while riding alone, Bess sees a party of Indians. She tells the news, but when she learns that Adair intends driving them back, she is sorry. She knows the deplorable conditions on the reservation, but she agrees to show the warden their camp.

Adair brutally tells the Indians to get back to the reservation, destroys their camp and takes charge of a deer that "Sleepy Horse" has killed. Adair and Young have a fierce argument over his treatment of the Indians, and, later, Young prevents the Indian from shooting Adair.

The Indians camp for the night. One of the old squaws is moving about in the brush and is taken for an animal by two amateur hunters from the city and killed. The hunters meet a real bear, drop their guns and flee. "Sleepy Horse" hears the shot and finds his mother dead. He believes this deed was done by the warden and, starting his father out for the reservation with the body, he determines to avenge the dead.

One day Bess is out riding. "Sleepy Horse" has an accident and falls into the roadway. Bess finds him and binds up his wounds. Meanwhile her horse has wandered away and Adair, who has followed her, comes up. He offers to take her home and then tries to force his attentions on her. They struggle, and he is about to overcome the girl, when they are interrupted by Young, who has found Bess's horse and is looking for her.

Meanwhile at the reservation, the news of the murder is told and a party of braves set out to avenge the deed. They see Bess and Young returning to the town and capture them. Young is tied to a horse and the horse turned loose.

Adair is in a bad humor when Young comes in. During the excitement caused by his news, Adair succeeds in beating the weak man into unconsciousness. He then plans a fiendish deed. He places the unconscious man near the cages of the captive wolves and opens the door.

The rescue party is whipped by the Indians and they are about to kill Bess when "Sleepy Horse" hears the fighting. He sees Adair thrown from his horse and is about to kill him when he sees the pursuing wolves, which carry out his revenge. He is in time to save Bess, and he orders the Indians to return home. Young has been found and is revived. He leads another party to the rescue. They are met by "Sleepy Horse," who tells them that the Indians are going back and that the game warden has met his just deserts.

Later, Young is offered the place of Warden. He asks Bess if she will be his assistant for life.

Buchanan of Pittsburgh and his faithful camera.

CAMERAMAN'S CLOSE CALL.

J. B. BUCHANAN, cameraman for the Universal Animated Weekly at Pittsburgh, Pa., is the hero of the disastrous Uniontown race, for the Universal trophy on last Thanksgiving Day. It was Buchanan who was in the very act of filming Hughie Hughes, after his first miraculous escape from injury, when Frank Galvin's Premier dashed wildly up the track, swerved, struck Hughes, causing instantaneous death, mortally injured Galvin himself and killed his mechanician, hurting eight newspaper men, who were reporting the race from the stand. The runaway car snatched the camera from Buchanan's hand, while he was actually turning the crank; and the first thing that he knew, he was lying on the ground on his back, with a strap in his hand, and the camera knocked to smithereens. He was very badly bruised, and had a long cut above his left eye, and was taken, with Galvin, to the Emergency Hospital, where his wounds were dressed.

He showed far more solicitude over the loss of his camera and his pictures than over his own hurts; and was delighted to hear that, when the camera was knocked away from him, one of the magazines, containing the exposed film, fell at the feet of a Universal official, who immediately wrapped his coat around it, to protect it from the light. In this condition it was forwarded to New York by special messenger, where the films were developed, and exist as an everlasting memorial of the fatal race.

Buchanan, or "Buck" as he is called, has landed many a scoop for the Animated, though he has never been quite so close to death as he was last Thanksgiving Day. He has covered many events of national importance, such as the Eastland disaster at Chicago, the riots at Youngstown, Ohio, the Amherst wreck, and many fires. He accompanied President Wilson on his preparedness trip throughout the country and he was also with Hughes, throughout the greater part of his tour last fall. "Buck," however, is perfectly sure that this is not the reason why Hughes was defeated, for he has supreme belief in his own star. His many escapes from an untimely end are the reason for his confidence.

His territory for the Animated Weekly is Pittsburgh and its surroundings, and he has a large number of "scoops" to his credit. Among the splendid force of nearly two hundred cameramen of the Universal Animated Weekly, stationed all over the world, Buchanan's name stands high in the list of achievement.

On the opposite page, in place of the usual cuts from the current Animated Weekly, is a reproduction of the striking advertisement issued by the Animated this week. Write to your Exchange for a copy of this patriotic poster.

THE NAVY IS READY.

WITH the country on the verge of war, the greatest interest of the public is centered in our navy. Is it ready for the test which may come any day? The Animated Weekly Number 58 has proof positive that it is. Beginning with a portrait of Secretary Daniels, this splendid number shows the turret guns of the huge dreadnought Pennsylvania, one of the largest battleships in the world. Views of our submarines, ready for action, are seen. The mosquito fleet, which will prove invaluable in guarding the greater vessels of the navy from the perils of undersea boats, passes in review before us with the small, swift craft, most effective "Submarine Chasers."

"Robinson Crusoe"

SPECIAL Universal Release in three reels, founded upon Daniel Defoe's immortal story, and directed by Robert Leonard, who also plays the name part. A screen version of the classic which is like the book itself come to life.

Remember it's a Special.

PROBABLY no book in the English language, with the exception of the Bible, has been read by more people than De Foe's "Robinson Crusoe." Not only that, but the work has been translated into almost every language spoken in the world. The man of affairs, the child in the nursery, the king on his throne, the beggar in the street, all have heard of Robinson, his goat, his dog, his parrot and his man Friday. There is no story written which has had a wider appeal. And that it lends itself wonderfully to pictures, goes without saying. It was hardly necessary to make the customary screen version, and Robert Leonard, the director, might almost have produced the picture from the book itself.

His version follows the original in the closest detail, and not one familiar feature of the tale is missing. Splendid sets and a fine cast lend their aid in making the picture fully worthy the name of "Universal Special." It is hardly necessary to give a synopsis of the well-known story, but the one used by Mr. Leonard in his production follows:

Robinson Crusoe cannot overcome his great desire to cross the seas in search of adventure, and his parents are much distressed. One day he goes to them and begs to be allowed to ship aboard some vessel, but both his father and mother lecture him and appeal to him and he gives his promise to stay.

His desires prove too great for him to keep this promise, and one day he runs away to sea. He has qualms of conscience as he gazes upon the receding shores and suffers other qualms of a physical nature very soon afterwards. The good ship arrives in the South Seas. A terrible storm arises and the vessel is soon a total wreck and Robinson is the sole survivor. He reaches shore more dead than alive and offers up thanks to God for his deliverance. That night, in mortal fear of wild beasts, Crusoe sleeps in a tree. The following morning Robinson sets to work to provision himself and swims to the wreck. He makes many trips and secures supplies and provisions, but what pleases him even more is securing a cat and a dog.

Later Robinson builds a well-stocked and barricaded home and finds solace in hard work. The years pass and Robinson adds to his friends in the form of goats, parrots and other animals, and he repairs daily to his lookout platform in the hopes of seeing a friendly sail.

One day, whilst making the rounds of his island, he comes across footprints. This strikes terror to his soul, and later he sees through his telescope the arrival of some canoes containing cannibals. He hurries to the shore and is in time to kill several cannibals, who are pursuing one man who has escaped and who has been destined for a meal. The cannibals, terrified at the noise and at seeing their companions fall without being struck, hurry away in their canoes, and Robinson makes friends with his man, Friday.

For two years Friday is Robinson's constant friend and learns to talk his language. Again the cannibals visit the island, and this time Robinson and Friday are enabled to rescue a Spanish castaway and an old native who proves to be Friday's father.

Their peace of mind is broken by the arrival of a boat from the ship of Captain Hardy, who is rowed ashore with his beautiful daughter. Their own men have bound them and left them on the rocks. The mutineers are attacked by Robinson and his natives. That night Robinson makes a surprise attack on the ship while the men are throwing dice, and defeats them. Many enlist under Crusoe's command. Robinson and his party set sail in the ship. They are attacked by cannibals and Friday is killed. He is mourned and buried at sea. On Robinson's return to his native town he is received as a hero. He marries the captain's daughter and lives happily ever after.

MISCHA ELMAN PLAYS FOR BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY.

AMONG the directors whose interesting work was watched by Mischa Elman, the world famous violinist, during his recent visit to the Bluebird studio was Rex Ingram, who was filming some very dramatic scenes for his production, "The Reward of the Faithless," the story of which had been prepared for the screen by E. Magnus Ingleton.

Elman was surprised to find that Director Ingram had an orchestra for the dramatic work of his company.

"You might favor us, if you will, on the violin," said Ingram to the virtuoso.

"Glad to do so," said Elman, and taking up the instrument, he played as no one had ever played before in the big studio. It was only for a few moments, but the work of the performers during those memorable fast-speeding moments was better, the director said, than at any time since he started the picture.

When Elman turned the violin and bow over to the musician to whom they belonged Director Ingram thanked him and said he had been greatly honored by what he had done, and felt certain that the several scenes during which Elman played would be all the better for the wonderful music he had given them.

"The Losing Winner"

VICTOR Comedy-drama in two reels. Story by H. C. Warnack. Scenario by C. Wilson, Jr. Production by Carter De Haven, featuring himself and his wife, Flora Parker De Haven.

CAST.

Jack Bryson	Carter de Haven
Maizie	Flora Parker de Haven
Henry	M. K. Wilson
Penelope	Eileen Sedgwick
Daisy	Jessie Arnold

CARTER DE HAVEN, surrounded by a bevy of pretty girls, as if he were a musical comedy hero, has produced an amusing Victor comedy, from a story by H. C. Warnack, which was arranged for his use by C. J. Wilson, Jr.

At the head of the charming ladies who help him put this story over, is his wife, Flora Parker de Haven, who has been the star of several Red Feather features, both with her husband and by herself. The combination of both these stars in a two-reel program picture is very unusual. Supporting them are Eileen Sedgwick, who is used to seeing her name at the head of a cast under the direction of Allen Curtis, Jessie Arnold, who has had many important roles, and M. K. Wilson, a producer in his own right, who has played the lead in many films. This remarkable cast works together in perfect harmony in an excellent story of the fluctuating fortunes of a young gambler. His adventures run something like this:

Jack Bryson, a young clerk, thinks himself in love with Maizie, one of the stenographers. But when the daughter of his employer, Penelope, calls at the office, he falls a victim to her charms. Henry, the secretary, is also in love with Maizie and seeks to win her; but she is in love with Jack and will not accept the secretary's attentions.

Jack proposes to Penelope, who tells him her father would never consent to their marriage unless he had a certain sum of money. Jack attempts getting this by gambling and has secured the right sum when he chances to meet a beautiful chorus girl named Daisy. He falls in love with her promptly. She, however, demands twice the sum that Penelope's father did, and he starts gambling again in an endeavor to get that amount.

Three possible wives at once are two too many for any man!

Henry, who has persuaded Jack to try gambling, brings Maizie to the gambling house that she may see what sort of a chap Jack is. Yet with the perversity of woman, she still loves Jack and scorns Henry.

Penelope is waiting for Jack on the corner with a minister. Daisy is to meet him at the casino in an hour. Fate turns her wheel and Jack loses every cent of his winnings, whereupon Daisy turns him down. He fears to leave the casino as he knows Penelope is waiting for him.

Jack is astounded to see Maizie in the casino. Henry, who now thinks he has won out, assumes an air of possession, but Maizie, taking Jack by the arm, takes him out the back way, leaving Henry a sadder but a wiser man.

NEW CREDIT CLUB.

Organization for Protecting Managers and Exhibitors in Minneapolis.

AT last the various exchanges seem to have accomplished what seemed to be the impossible. The Hoye Agency, now operating in New York, Chicago, Buffalo, Detroit, Cincinnati, and other cities in the United States, have established what is called a Credit Club. This Credit Club is supposed to be of benefit to the exhibitors and the exchanges as well. Mr. Hoye was in the Twin Cities, and has made arrangements for the club to show its activity shortly.

It will be a splendid means of getting the exhibitor in closer touch with the exchange, in fact it will put the motion picture business on a different business basis. In every legitimate line of business a Credit Club is needed, and in the motion picture industry the consumer seems to be getting in closer touch with the manufacturer and exchange, which will undoubtedly result to the benefit of all parties involved. Here is good luck to the Credit Club of Minneapolis!

W. H. CLUNE PLAYS "EXTRA."

IT is rather an unusual thing for a theatrical magnate and the producer of a big film play, such as "Ramona," to take the part of an extra man himself. But this really happened the other day at Universal City.

The magnate in question was William H. Clune, owner of Clune's Auditorium and Clune's Broadway, two of the leading theatres of Los Angeles. Clune was visiting the celebrated photoplay city with a party of friends. Lois Weber, famous director and playwright, was engaged in filming the scenes for the picture, "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," connected with a fire in an athletic club, and required a large number of well-dressed men for one of the scenes. Spying Clune, Miss Weber called out to him, "Just the kind of a man I need—please come into the picture and bring your friends along."

Clune and the members of his party did so, and each was presented with a $3.00 ticket for their work as an "extra." Clune said, "I am going to have mine framed—I'll point proudly to it when I become a real leading man."

"STAND BY THE PRESIDENT!"

THIS patriotic slogan is now being read by millions of people who see Universal films every day. It is only one of the ways the Universal has taken to wake up the country to its duty and its privilege. Thousands of feet of film with this title and President Wilson's picture have been shipped to exchanges, and the title is attached as a trailer on all films that go out from the factory.

The Universal Animated is this week most patriotic in its tone and in keeping with the intense Americanism of the Universal. Incidentally, the company has offered by a telegram sent on Saturday the entire resources of the Universal and its exchanges to the President to use in any way that he may see fit.

The Back and Front of Fatty Voss

By MARJORIE HOWARD

Yes, this is a human back.

NO, this is not a patient suffering from elephantiasis. This is the unexaggerated, perfectly natural, unposed portrait of one of the L-KO players, who furnish the laughs twice a week for the Universal program.

"Franklin H. Voss" is what his parents fancied for his name, but he wasn't three years old before the Franklin H. lapsed into innocuous desuetude, and the far more descriptive and picturesque "Fatty" was substituted. Fatty he has been ever since, only more so. Age has done anything but wither his noble proportions, and from year to year his bulk increases to keep pace with his fame.

When he poses for the camera, the most skillful operators—or cinematographers as I believe they prefer to be called—find the utmost difficulty in taking close-ups of Fatty. They can take a close-up of so small a part of his abundant anatomy at one time, and selecting the most attractive section is a matter for long consultation between the cameraman and the director. The whole of his countenance is so vast, that it baffles the widest lens.

Franklin H. has a real biography, of course, just like everybody else. It reads: Born, Chicago, 1890, educated there; stage career, with Shuberts, in burlesque, cafe entertainer, vaudeville, roadshows, and anything else in the theatrical line which you can think of. Perhaps Franklin H. grew too big for any stage, perhaps transportation of his great form became increasingly complicated. At any rate, he was finally persuaded into the movies, and joined the L-KO Komedy Kompany, where he found himself an immediate success. He says that he is five feet nine in height, and that he weighs—but you would not believe that anyway. He also declares that he is a wrestler, boxer, and all-round athlete. He has been heard frequently to insist, with all the earnestness of which he is capable (and that is some earnestness, believe us), that his tremendous bulk is composed of solid muscle, and that there is no fat about him at all! Well, when you see the stunts that he performs for the camera, it really looks as if there might be some truth in his contention.

And this is the front elevation.

Besides being funny to look at, Fatty is naturally funny as well. He proves that in the picture, "Brave Little Waldo," which adorns the cover this week. You must see him in his dainty interpretation of Western garb, with a large wrist watch, having adventures with a bronk. And during the week of March 7th, he is starred in a two-reel L-KO called "Fatty's Feature Fillum," which is crammed with new ideas, and is one of the best comedies which this brand has released for some time. He has often appeared with Alice Howell, usually in the role of husbandly oppressor, when his belligerency and her pathetic terror make a very amusing contrast.

"Miss PREPAREDNESS" BEING CHOSEN at MADISON SQ. GARDEN

AS we rush to press in the excitement of the German crisis, a contest which is taking place at Madison Square Garden as our presses grind, assumes more importance on account of the diplomatic break with a first-class European power than otherwise would have been accorded to it. The congress of beauty and amateur dramatic talent is being held in conjunction with the hardware and home preparedness show this week. The winner will be chosen from the contestants who have entered either prior to the opening, or during the progress of the show. The contest for the honor of being Miss Preparedness will close on Thursday. and the winner will lead the Grand March on the following Friday night. But more important than this, she will receive a contract for a series of American patriotic industrial films to be issued jointly by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the American Patriotic Publicity Committee.

Over two hundred young women had entered the contest up to Saturday, but immediately upon receipt of news of diplomatic complications the number multiplied until upwards of a thousand candidates presented themselves. The honor of being selected as Miss Preparedness will mean a great deal more, in view of the fact that these films are actually to be used as many similar ones in England were used, and as "The Eagle's Wings" is being used at the present moment to arouse the public mind in the most effective way to meet a crisis which confronts the U. S. today.

"The Reward of the Faithless"

The ghost of Dione seems to appear to the terrified man who has come to open her coffin to obtain the ring.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, adapted for the screen and produced by Rex Ingram. A modern version of the Romeo and Juliet theme, with a setting in Russia and in Rome.

CAST.

Princess Dione	Claire DuBrey
Prince Paul Ragusin	Richard Le Reno
Feodal Strogoff	Nicholas Dunaew
Guido Capanelli	Wedgwood Nowell
Peter Vlasoff	Bill Dyer
Anna, his daughter	Betty Schade
Karl	Jim Brown
A Cripple	Bill Rathbone

THIS Bluebird Photoplay, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, and adapted for the screen and produced by Rex Ingram, is a modern version of the Romeo and Juliet theme of simulated death, the scenes of which are laid first in Russia, and then in Rome. The story is one of the strange, exotic tales which exactly suit the talent and imagination of the young director, whose recent Bluebird success, "Black Orchids," showed what he could do with a theme of picturesque horror. "The Reward of the Faithless," unlike the other photoplay, has a happy ending, and the lovers, instead of coming to an untimely end, are united in the last reel, after a series of adventures which would seem incredible, if the story were not so logically told.

A remarkable cast, including Claire DuBrey, who makes a bewitching picture in the Eighteenth Century garb, which is the chosen costume of the eccentric Princess; Betty Schade, who portrays the sinister development of a girl driven by rapacious greed; Wedgwood Nowell, who will be remembered for his work in "Black Orchids"; and Nicholas Dunaew, a Russian by birth, well known to the stage of his own country, whose assistance in the matter of "local color," was of great service to Mr. Ingram in the production of the play. An outline of the story gives but a hint of the impressiveness of this unusual Bluebird.

The Prince Paul Ragusin is in very poor health, but the one thing that is most consoling to him is that he thinks that his beautiful daughter, the Princess Dione, will marry Feodal Strogoff, a rising author of noble family. But it chances one day that the Princess meets the suave Guido Capanelli, secretary to the Italian ambassador, and he determines that he will win her.

Peter Vlasoff, a Russian peasant, has a daughter, Anna, very pretty and a street vendor. The returns from her wares are not great enough to satisfy Peter, and he tells her to bring more money. She meets Guido, who is attracted to her. When she returns home, the father scornfully turns her into the street. Her brother, the cripple, takes her to Princess Dione, who has the reputation of being kind to all. Dione sends the girl to a convent.

Guido gives Anna her reward.

Anna in Guido's home.

The Prince dies, and Guido, taking advantage of the sorrow of Dione, presses his suit and she accepts him. Later they take up their residence at a country home of hers. Dione has a wonderful opal ring which has been in the family for years, but has a tale of sorrow and misery as its history. Feodal is miserable in her choice. For a time she is very unhappy.

But when Anna returns home from the convent, she and Guido meet. He threatens to disclose her past, and Anna finally consents to the lovemaking of Guido. After a time, he has so poisoned her mind against her benefactor that the girl almost hates Dione. The Princess becomes very ill and finally dies, or at least, falls into a stupor which has the appearance of death.

Feodal visits the tomb. To his consternation Dione revives and tells him of the perfidy of Guido and Anna, for she has seen them making love. They plot for the downfall of the two guilty ones.

Some time elapses. Rome is talking of the strange and wealthy princess who has a penchant for the costume of the Eighteenth Century. Guido is beginning to tire of Anna and when once he meets Dione, he seems filled with the desire to possess her.

Dione is very cold and formal with him, but this only seems to strengthen his desire for her. Finally she tells him that to win her favor he must give her the famous opal ring belonging to his dead wife and which he knows is buried in her coffin.

Anna had long tried to persuade Guido to open the vault and obtain the ring for her, but Guido, fearful, has refused. When first Dione asks that he give her the ring, he thinks that he cannot do it for her, but seeing that she is adamant in her ultimatum, he determines to overcome his fear and secure the jewel for her. So he returns to Russia and the scene of his courtship of the Princess.

He goes in the night to secure the ring. He pries open the coffin, to find it empty. As he is leaving the place, Dione confronts him, holding out the opal. The terrified Guido thinks it is the ghost of the Princess, and rushes blindly from the place. In his mad haste he falls over a precipice into the sea. Later we see Anna passed by for better-looking and younger women, while the Princess and Feodal are happy in their love for each other.

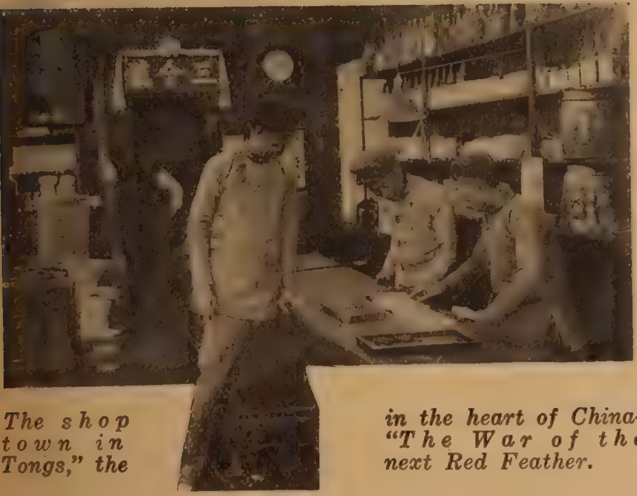
Red Feather Reveals Closely-Guarded Chinese Secrets



The shop in the heart of China-town in "The War of the Tongs," the next Red Feather.

Do you remember the shop in the immortal "Alice in Wonderland," which was so full of things that Alice kept discovering new ones whichever way she looked? If you do, the shop in the next Red Feather, "The War of the Tongs," will certainly remind you of it. There is everything apparently on its shelves, including a pair of white kittens, with which the hero amuses the heroine when she comes to visit him. He takes them from among the tea caddies and the pickle jars, but a people who eat bird's nests evidently don't object to the presence of cats among their eatables.

This typical Chinese shop is only one of the many unusual features about this picture, which is that almost incredible thing—a real novelty. Not alone is it the only picture ever made in America from a story and scenario conceived by a Chinaman, played exclusively by Chinese actors, with never a white man in the entire five reels, with all the settings, properties, etc., designed and made by Chinese workmen, but it shows for the first time many phases of Chinese life, of which we have heard, but the details of which we have never seen.

In the shop itself we are introduced to the business methods of the Celestials, their primitive adding machine, their bookkeeping, their manner of making sales, and recording them. The interesting way in which they weigh and measure their merchandise is shown. It is well known that in their business relations the Chinese are absolutely honest and upright. Travelers in the Orient have remarked upon the curious circumstance that nearly all positions of trust in the neighboring kingdom of Japan are held by Chinese. In this Red Feather, we see that the very weighing of goods depends upon the honesty of the clerk. He holds a primitive balance in his hand, and weighs the tea, sugar and other things by eye. His customers have such confidence in him that they do not question the correctness of his weight.

For the first time the complete interior of a Chinese gambling establishment, with the peculiar games played there, is shown on the screen. Chinese fan-tan and dominoes, called pai-gow, are played before us in detail, actually and faithfully reproduced by Celestials themselves.

Lotteries in our country have long been illegal, but the Chinese of San Francisco conduct them regularly, and the methods of choosing the winning number, making out the tickets, etc., are full of interest, and shown so clearly in this picture that we can all follow them. The marriage customs, the archaic way of choosing a wife by means of the services of a "go-between," the important matter of the dowry form other interesting scenes.

Perhaps the secret societies, the so-called Tongs, are more mysterious, and therefore more interesting to us than anything else about the life of the Chinese of California. Details of their ritual, of their crafty schemes against their enemies, of their relentless methods of extermination against those who have offended them, of the devotion of one Tong-brother to his fellows—all these things are seen for the first time, in a production which really merits the much-abused term "unique."

HERBERT RAWLINSON BANS SWEARING.

Woe to the member of Herbert Rawlinson's company at Universal City who indulges in sulphuric language. This popular Universal star has issued an edict prohibiting profanity around the studios and has appointed himself judge and jury to try all offenders who so far forget themselves as to give vent to their feelings in picturesque talk.

A nominal fine is imposed for the first few infractions of the rule, but the fine increases in proportion as the offence increases. Mr. Rawlinson has already collected four fines—from himself! Rawlinson is featured in a Gold Seal three-reel comedy drama called "The Great Torpedo Secret," which will soon appear in the program.

Announcing "The Voice on The Wire"

The star of "The Voice on the Wire," Ben Wilson and his leading lady, Neva Gerber

GREAT Universal Surprise Serial in fifteen episodes of two reels each. First installment released March 12. Scenario by J. G. Alexander from the novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball. Production by Stuart Paton, director of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." Starring Ben Wilson, with Neva Gerber as his leading lady.

A POLITICAL graft serial, a circus serial, a patriotic serial staged on the border, a girl-Raffles and detective serial, and all in a little more than a year! No one can accuse the Universal Film Company of monotony in their serial output, and get away with it successfully. And now the latest of all is announced, under the mysterious title "The Voice on the Wire." And a mystery it is—a great surprise serial—which will keep the most experienced Sherlock Holmes in any audience guessing vainly from one episode to the other.

First for the authorship, and details of that sort. The scenario was made by J. G. Alexander, from the well-known and widely-read novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball. The story is the result of the cooperation of two men of great experience in their chosen fields, who know the requirements of a mystery tale, and exactly how to work up suspense and conjecture to the highest pitch. Then for the production. This was in the capable hands of Stuart Paton, whose greatest claim to distinction is his triumph of direction in the Universal Special feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which is at the present moment of writing breaking all records at the Broadway Theatre, New York. And now for the cast. At its head is Ben Wilson, who certainly needs no introduction to patrons of the screen, to whom his work has been familiar for years, and who is one of the most popular leading men of the day. As Montague Shirley, a student of criminology, he is asked to unravel a series of the most baffling crimes which have ever been brought to the attention of the forces of law and order. One after the other, prominent men meet their death by violence, and each time the only clue is a mysterious voice over a disconnected telephone, and the shadowy appearance of a muffled figure. The murders are all committed in the same way, by the Japanese "death punch," delivered just under the heart. Wilson's role fits him to a "T."

Most prominent in Wilson's support is Neva Gerber, who has made herself many friends by her work on the Universal program in the past year. She is one of the prettiest of leading ladies, and she is something even better than that—an accomplished actress. She was born in Chicago, and educated at the Immaculate Heart College. Unlike most screen players, she has had no experience on the speaking stage, but had every intention of following the footsteps of her own father, in the choice of a professional career. She planned to become a woman lawyer, and read assiduously to that end. But the call of the screen interfered. A career in pictures seems far more appropriate to a pretty young girl than a legal one, no matter how distinguished, and Miss Gerber wisely decided to follow her star. It led her through many engagements to the position of leading lady at Universal City, where she has been playing lately, in the company of Stuart Paton, producing two and three-reelers for the program. She was the logical and most suitable choice for the feminine lead in his serial. She has light-brown hair, and brown eyes, is five feet two inches in height, and screens to perfection.

She wears charming clothes with an air of great distinction, and is, among other things, a licensed air pilot.

A typical Universal cast supports Mr. Wilson and Miss Gerber, among whom are Joe Girard and Howard Crampton, recognized favorites and famous for their powers of characterization. They both appeared in "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Ernest Shields, L. M. Wells and Francis MacDonald will appear throughout the serial, and countless other actors of Universal City will be introduced from time to time, as the story demands them.

"The Voice on the Wire" will be in fifteen installments of two reels each, and the first episode will be released in the week of March 12. A little calculation will show that this is four weeks before the completion of "The Purple Mask," the present serial. The overlapping of serials was tried for the first time with the start of "The Purple Mask," and the plan was so successful that it will be continued. The interest starts with a bang in the first instalment, and the threads are hopelessly tangled in the first thousand feet. The unravelling of them is an absolute impossibility. Five episodes were shown to the case-hardened critics who pass on the first showing of pictures in the projection-room of the Universal home office. Every person in the room had a different theory at the end of the five chapters, as to the identity of the voice on the wire, and every person was absolutely certain that he was right. If experts can offer a dozen theories and all of them entirely different at the end of the showing of five chapters, you will readily acknowledge that the serial that keeps them all guessing must be some mystery.

The advertising department has been inspired by the wonderful possibilities of this serial, and they are getting out the most remarkable campaign book, which even the Universal Film Company, noted for its campaign books, has ever issued. Everything will be included in this splendid volume, even the material which is usually sent out in advance in the form of press sheets. The book will be ready for exhibitors three weeks before the release of the first episode; but, lest this should not give time enough for advance work in connection with the serial, the press sheets will be printed separately and sent out in advance of the book to those who need them. Everything which the live exhibitor needs to put this serial over in a fashion which will outdistance anything that he has ever done before with a serial photoplay, will be found in this book, which is a real triumph for the Universal advertising department.

LOIS WEBER DINES PLAYERS.

THEIR great success was celebrated by Lois Weber, noted feature director of Universal City, by giving a dinner to the cast of "The People vs. John Doe," at a French restaurant

Miss Weber explained with a laugh that the dinner was given for the purpose of allowing her actors and actresses an opportunity to tell each other "what good actors and actresses they are," without permiting any one to question the veracity of a single statement. Of the eighteen members of the company, the principals were, in addition to Assistant Director Arthur Forde, Harry De More, Evelyn Selbie, Willis Marks, Maud George, George Berrell, Mrs. Mattie Witting, Harry de Roy, Charles Mailes and Orrin Jackson.

This is the wonderful feature which is being sold on State Rights basis, and which has been pronounced by the Board of Review a most powerful arraignment of capital punishment and third degree methods. The report of this body on "The People versus John Doe" fairly bristles with superlatives, and is reproduced on another page. The picture played to capacity during its recent run at the Broadway Theatre, New York.

Jack Mulhall in "The Terror"

Jack Mulhall in "The Terror."

THIS Red Feather picture, written and produced by Raymond Wells, and adapted for the screen by Fred Myton, is the first big feature in which Jack Mulhall has been starred. He has seen his name mentioned in the support of several other stars, and at last he has attained the dignity himself. He did excellent work opposite Flora Parker De Haven in "The Whirlpool of Destiny," and he has supported Ruth Stonehouse in several Red Feathers, notably "Love Aflame" and "Fighting for Love." His work has been so satisfactory in these roles that he has received the coveted promotion. His first stellar vehicle shows him in the usually unsympathetic role of a New York gunman, a professional, who accepts money for his crimes, and is under the orders of the "man higher up." However, Chuck Connelly will win the sympathy of any audience before the end, for we discover that environment and circumstances have had more to do with his taking the downward path than his natural character. He has been furnished with a splendid cast for the picture, and a good story, which runs as follows:

Chuck Connelly, a product of the New York East Side, discovers his sister in a compromising situation with one of the gunmen belonging to a protected organization. Connelly kills the man and thinks he has made a clean getaway. Two private detectives connect him with the crime and decide to watch him.

Later, when the members of the protected organization attempt to kill Chuck, the detectives are on hand. Chuck kills three of the gunmen and the detectives help him make a getaway and lay the killing on one of the gunmen who dies.

The detectives then call on Chuck and force him with threats of the electric chair to kill a reformer that has been upsetting the control of the organization in that precinct. After this cold-blooded killing Chuck becomes a member of the organization, and receives his orders from the "man higher up" the same as the other gunmen.

Chuck falls in love with a girl named Annie Mangan, who has a leaning toward religion. One night she is persuaded by a Salvation Army lass to go with her to the Salvation Army home. Chuck comes to the dancehall looking for her and is told that she has joined the Salvation Army. He at first does not believe it, but he goes to the Army headquarters merely out of curiosity.

RED FEATHER Production, written by Raymond Wells, adapted for the screen by Fred Myton and directed by Raymond Wells. The tale of a New York gunman and how he squares himself.

The new District Attorney, who has just been elected, is pounding the graft organizations. The word is passed to the gunmen to get him. Chuck goes to the District Attorney's house, the first time only to threaten. While he is talking to the District Attorney, his three-year-old daughter comes into the room and, leaning trustfully on Chuck's knee, looks up into his face with a smile. Chuck, when he becomes aware of her presence, is rather taken back and leaves. He goes to the Salvation Army for another sight of Annie and is an involuntary listener to the sermon, which at the time does not affect him much.

Chuck's sister, in the meantime, has become the mistress of Jim Canford, a gambler, the man higher up. The District Attorney pays no attention to the warning given him by Chuck and continues on the same line of endeavor.

The word is then passed to Chuck to kill him. Late that night, Chuck goes to the house and breaks in. As he creeps up the stairs he sees on the landing the District Attorney's little daughter, who forgot one of her dolls when she went to bed and is on her way to the library to get it. Chuck steps back out of sight, the child passes him, gets her doll and goes back to bed. Chuck makes another attempt to go up the stairs but cannot do it.

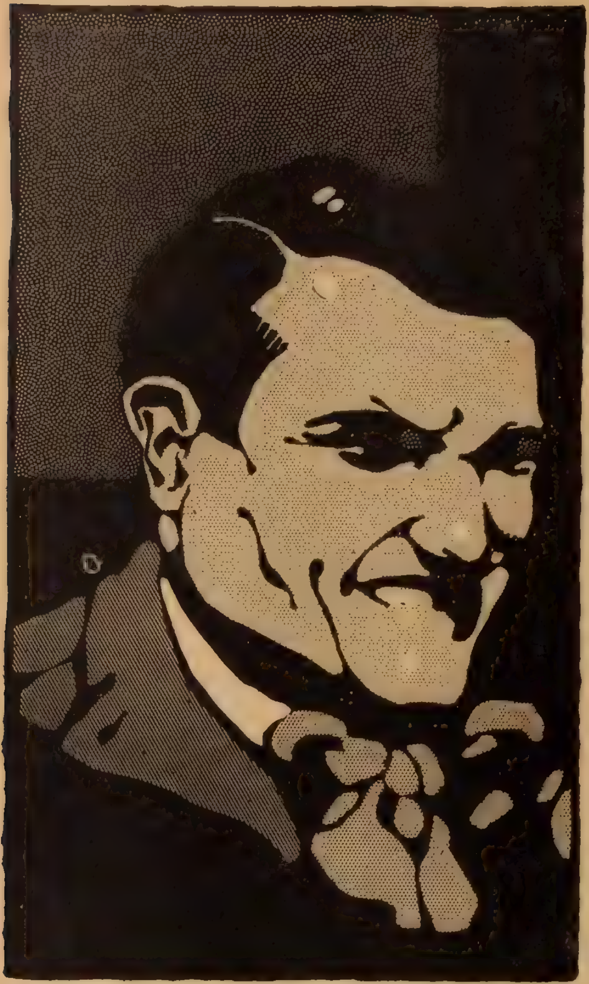
When the word reaches Canford that Chuck has thrown him down, he arranges with the ward heeler to put some other man on the job and accuse Chuck. His sister overhears the plot and goes to warn her brother.

Chuck, in the meantime, has gone to the Salvation Army. He tells Annie that he has thrown the gang down and asks her to teach him "this religion thing." She explains, but he tells her that he cannot understand that by saying a few words of acknowledgment he can square all that he has done. During the talk Chuck's sister arrives and tells him of the intended frame-up. He sees that here is a chance "to square himself with God," and goes to save the District Attorney's life.

The gunmen have reached the District Attorney's house and have stationed themselves around it before Chuck arrives. He reaches the door, but before he can ring the bell, he sees the gunmen coming for him. There is no time to wait for someone to open the door, so he breaks through the library window. The District Attorney and his daughter are sitting in the library as Chuck breaks in. He has no time for explanations but hurries them up the stairs ahead of him, turns in the middle of the stairs, and faces the gunmen as they enter.

The District Attorney's life is saved, but Chuck is mortally wounded. Word is sent to Annie and his sister and they come to the house. Chuck dies, feeling that this was the only way in which he could atone.

FRANKLYN FARNUM RENOUNCES THE SPEAKING STAGE FOREVER



Remarkable Poster Drawing of Franklyn Farnum by Burton Rice, Paris Artist of the Moving Picture Weekly.

"THIS is the life," says Franklyn Farnum, featured player of the next Bluebird, "The Man Who Took a Chinese." "I have been in the pictures comparatively few months," he continued, "and during that time I have heard a great many of my brother thespians declare that they long for a return of the good old days of the spoken drama. They are talking merely because there is nothing they love better than the sound of their own voices.

"I've had fifteen years' experience on the speaking stage, and, thank goodness, I was always a leading man. I have played on Broadway and I have played one-night stands in all parts of the country, and any actor who will say that he prefers working on the road, with uncertain hours, different beds or Pullman berths each night, a change of cooking every day and no opportunity for recreation, is suffering either from dementia, or is a plain, ordinary chump. In pictures a man lives a natural life; it means early to bed and early to rise, but he has his evenings for recreation. Ninety per cent of his work is in the open air, under the sunny skies of California, and he soon finds the natural color coming to his cheeks. Living naturally a new and happy life, he cannot but feel sorry for the poor fellow who has to play a matinee, again at night, and then rush down to the depot to catch a train for the next stand. I repeat I am for pictures, first, last and all time. It's the most delightful occupation I ever entered, and I hope to goodness I shall never have to go back on the stage."

Farnum knows what he is talking about, for, during his stage career he played the leads in the Frohman productions, "The Sunshine Girl" and "The Dollar Princess"; in Henry W. Savage's "Little Boy Blue," "Somewhere Else" and "The Sultan of Sulu"; in George W. Lederer's "Madame Sherry"; Joe Weber's "The Only Girl"; while for five years he was featured in Italian parts by Nixon and Zimmerman. Having played in these varied productions, Farnum feels that he can speak authoritatively on the advantages motion picture players have over the stage. He has been remarkably successful with his work before the camera, and after a very short experience won for himself a long-term contract. Farnum is unmarried, and lives at a well-known athletic club, where his most intimate friends are Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, of the Universal Nestor Comedy Company, and where he spends most of his evenings at his favorite game of pinochle or working in the gymnasium. He does some strenuous work sometimes before the camera and he keeps himself in excellent physical condition. He practices what he preaches about early to bed and early to rise, and he has established himself as one of the most likable men in Universal City.

TWO REMARKABLE BLUEBIRD CONTESTS

PRIZES offered for the best lobby, billboard and newspaper advertising. Contest closes on March 15.

THE announcement that Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., would offer cash prizes to exhibitors who create advertising ideas for lobby and general displays has awakened marked interest among theatre managers throughout the country. The first contest will be decided as applying to February. Each month will employ a separate and distinct contest. The initial contest will be decided upon the basis of advertising campaigns starting with February 1 and continuing through that month. There will also be territorial prizes, offered by the various Bluebird branch exchanges, to exhibitors in their territory who are selected by the judges as entitled to first honors.

Should the judges be unable to decide between two or more entrants, as to the merits of their exhibits, there will be additional sums appropriated to give every exhibitor entitled to first prize the full amount offered in both the general advertising and the lobby display contest. The contests will be limited to those exhibitors having bookings on Bluebird photoplays at the time the prize offers are made.

The lobby display contest and the contest for the general advertising display will be separate and distinct each from the other. No entrant can win both prizes. While Bluebird furnishes exhibitors with advertising ideas and material, exhibitors will not be prevented from adding their own ideas to this material if they desire; and as a matter of fact, the exhibitor will be limited in no way in expressing his ideas through his efforts to win the prize.

The main prize for the general display will be $60, awarded on March 15 to the exhibitor who shall submit during February, the best evidence of his publicity campaign on behalf of Bluebird. This will be understood to include newspaper and billboard advertising, novelty floats, the distribution of heralds or special advertising; window cards "sniping," and lobby display—all to be considered by the judges as a collective campaign of publicity.

There will also be a prize of $40 to be given as applying exclusively to lobby displays; to be considered in the first award. Then there will be territorial prizes, offered by Bluebird branch managers—$10 to the best general display and $5 to the best lobby

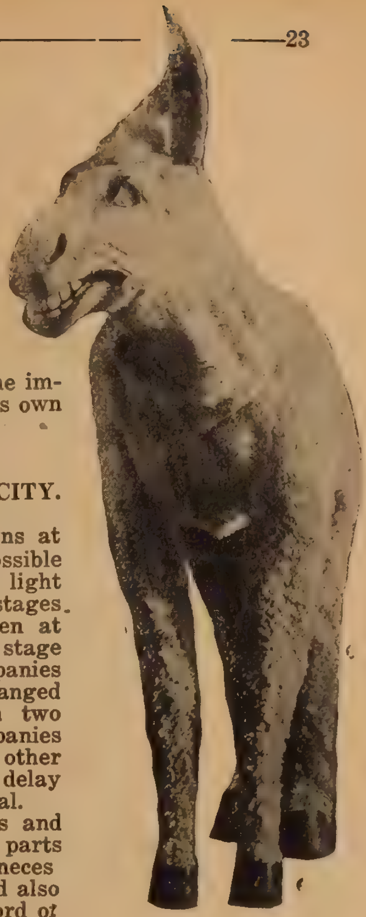
Concerning "Mulemates" and Other Interesting News of Universal City

Moranti and Franey, the mates

SOMETHING new under the sun is the Joker comedy for February 17, called "Mule-Mates." If you have tears, prepare to shed them now, for "Mule-Mates" is bound to make you laugh till you cry. Gale Henry and William Franey can make a cat grin, even by their own efforts, but in this corking comedy they have, for the first time, the assistance of Fred Woodward, in the role of the mule.

Woodward has long been known to the stage as an impersonator of animals, and has appeared often on Broadway in that capacity. He might have a salary check every week in the year in vaudeville or on the speaking stage if he wished, but he also has felt the call of pictures. He was tired of hearing how funny he is as a dog, or a cow, or a mule, and he determined that he would try for a job on the screen, where he could see himself as others have been seeing him for so long. Ever so many film companies immediately made bids for his services, but Universal City looked like the best bid to Woodward. So he hiked for California, and makes his screen debut with the inimitable Jokers, in one of the best comedies which even this matchless set of comedians has ever issued. Wait till you see him chase Gale Henry up the long flights of stairs of an office building; wait till you see his ingratiating expression as he follows Franey all over the town. The cut gives some idea of the variety of facial distortion of which he is capable, but you must see the film to get it all.

Woodward has also appeared in some of the pictures which the little Cinderella of the screen, Violet MacMillan, has been making lately at Universal City. In one of them, called "The Wishing Slippers," he impersonates several animals, in his own inimitable fashion.



And the mule.

EVEN RAIN FAILS TO STOP UNIVERSAL CITY.

DURING the recent heavy rains at Universal City, it being impossible to work out of doors, the big light studios and the waterproofed stages were utilized entirely. But even at that there was not adequate stage room for the twenty-six companies working at one time. It was arranged therefore to make pictures in two shifts—one-half of the companies working in the day-time and the other half at night, thus avoiding any delay in production at the film capital.

In some instances, the actors and actresses, who were working in parts in two pictures, found it was necessary to work part in the day and also at night, but there was not a word of protest. In order to keep the players warm, huge salamanders were placed on the stages and in addition hot-air blowers, operated by electric motors, also were used. Consequently, the players did not suffer to any extent from the cold. Hot coffee was served regularly and everything possible was done to provide for the comfort of the people.

BEN WILSON ENTERTAINS.

BEN WILSON, star of the new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," under the direction of Stuart Paton, recently tendered an elaborate dinner to a party of friends at Levy's Cafe in Los Angeles, complimentary to those who had entertained him during a visit of Mrs. Wilson and Ben Wilson, Jr., to New York. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Barney Oldfield, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Kipper, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Chance, and Mrs. G. Harvey. Kipper entertained the same party at a later date at the famous Kipper Ranch in the San Fernando Valley.

RUTH STONEHOUSE, the talented Universal star, has for a time been directing herself in a series of Kid Stories in which she plays the role of Mary Ann, an eleven-year-old youngster. The first one of these stories will soon be released as a Victor comedy drama.

While Miss Stonehouse was filming "The Heart of Mary Ann," the truant officer from the Los Angeles schools visited Universal City, as is his custom once or twice a week, to check up the children and see if they are going to school. He spied the young actress. A call was made upon the engaging director, and inquiry was made if the young woman working on the set was attending school. He replied he did not think so.

Whereupon he was notified that Miss Stonehouse must attend the Universal school regularly when not working in the pictures. The engaging director finally succeeded in appeasing the truant officer.

"John Osborne's Triumph"

BISON Two-Reel Drama, story by Burton S. Wilson, produced by Murdock MacQuarrie, who plays the lead himself.

A tale of villainy and its retribution, depicted with power and authority.

CAST.

John Osborne......Murdock MacQuarrie
David Merrill.....................Arthur Moon
Shelah Osborne..................Edna Payne
Ralph Condon........Albert MacQuarrie

THIS Bison two-reel drama, which was written by Burton S. Wilson and and produced by Murdock MacQuarrie, is a variation of the ever-popular theme of the overthrow of villainy and the triumph of justice. Some one has said that there are just seven plots in the world, and that all of the millions and millions of stories which are written must be based upon variations of these seven original forms. Of all the seven, there is none which has caused more satisfaction to a greater number of people, than the tale of virtue triumphant and vice rewarded. "John Osborne's Triumph" is based upon this theme, and worked out with true sense of the pictorial value of its incidents, into a fine two-reel photoplay.

John Osborne is a power in Wall Street and has made enemies of David Merrill, a broker, and his friends. Osborne has a daughter, Shelah, who is the pride of his heart. Merrill has long desired to win the girl, but she has rejected his advances.

Merrill has succeeded in installing one of his clerks in Osborne's office, as a spy. Osborne and his associates are planning a big coup with which they hope to break Merrill's crowd, but the spying clerk gets all the details and when the trick is sprung, Merrill is ready. In the ensuing scramble, Osborne is forced to the wall, and suffers a nervous breakdown as a consequence. When all the debts are cleared, there is nothing left but a small plot of land in the West, and Shelah persuades her father to move out there to live.

A mining engineer, Ralph Condon, has been a frequent visitor and there has been an attachment between them, but he, thinking he has no chance because of the girl's money, has gone, hoping to forget her.

Shelah and her father settle on the ranch and are making a go of it, when Merrill learns of their success. He succeeds in taking up a note of Osborne's. Condon happens to cross the Osborne land and finds indications of oil. He meets Shelah and there is a happy reunion.

Merrill arrives with the note and threatens to foreclose unless Osborne uses his influence for him with Shelah. Osborne manages to raise the money and pays the note, hiding the paper in the chimney. As he goes to place the stone back, he slips and falls, and is paralyzed. Merrill sees the fall and realizes the hold he has over the girl, as she knows nothing of the note being paid.

She, believing he still holds the note, tells Condon she will have to marry his rival. Osborne tries in every possible way to communicate with her, but without avail. Preparations for the wedding are made.

Merrill has discovered the indications of oil and thinks he will "kill two birds" by marrying the girl.

"The Purple Mask"

EPISODE eight of the super-serial, written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is called "The Secret Adventure," and brings Pat and Detective Kelly to America to continue their unique contest of wits.

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Eleanor Van Nuys	Jean Hathaway
Phil Kelly	Francis Ford
His assistants	Pete Gerald Jerry Ash

EPISODE No. 7 left the girl Apache leader and the detective, Phil Kelly, in an exciting situation, but the mystery and suspense deepen in this chapter, which is called "The Secret Adventure." The two leading characters are brought to America, where Pat assumes direction of the organization which she finds awaiting her. In this country the band is even more fully equipped than it was in Paris, with a trick house which would baffle the intelligence of ten Sherlock Holmes' rolled into one.

When Kelly entered Pat's stateroom, by her permission, he found the girl apparently curious to know the reason for his call. He was considerably embarrassed, through the nature of his mission, but managed to tell her that he suspected the stolen Phillips' pearls were in her possession and declared that he must search the room.

His quest avails nothing, and he leaves after informing Pat that she, as well as all of the passengers, must be searched upon leaving the ship, by customs officials. When the steamship docks and everybody is searched, the pearls are still undiscovered. Pat goes with her aunt to a hotel, taking with her the woman whom Phillips had robbed and betrayed. It is disclosed that Pat has secreted the pearls in the bottom of a box of chocolates.

Moving to a house that the American branch of the Apaches had especially built for the secret purpose of their craft, Pat sends a letter to Phillips informing him that she has the pearls, but holds them for $10,000 ransom, the money to go to the woman he has wronged. Phillips, on Kelly's suggestion, goes to Pat's house, sees the pearls and is also shown the woman he has betrayed. Offering a check, which Pat refuses to accept, Phillips goes to the bank, gets the currency and because he is too ashamed of his conduct to face Pat again, he sends Kelly with the money to redeem the pearls.

While Kelly is at Pat's, private detectives Mrs. Phillips sent to recover the pearls, arrive. Kelly pays Pat the money and sends the pearls out of the house by one of his assistants. Then he confronts the detectives Mrs. Phillips has sent and tells them that the pearls are not in Pat's house. He has left the girl alone in her drawing-room, while he goes to confer with the other detectives, and when he returns Pat has disappeared. The room is empty.

In the photoplay it is disclosed that Pat has moved aside the mantle and fireplace, exposing an exit from the room. When the girl passes through the secret door, the fireplace swings back into place and thus is Kelly baffled again by the clever girl.

THE FOURTH WITNESS

The gruesome discovery.

The Coroner's Inquest.

LAEMMLE Two-Reel Drama. Written by Alice Catlin, adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates and produced by John McDermott, with Lee Hill and Louise Lovely in the leads.

CAST.

Dr. Cameron	Lee Hill
William Bryant	Charles Mailes
Margaret, his wife	Louise Lovely
Butler	George Berrill
Chauffeur	Malcolm Blevins

A VERY remarkable cast appears in this fine Laemmle detective mystery, which was written by Alice Catlin, adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates and produced by John McDermott. For his leads he had Louise Lovely and Lee Hill, and in their support Charles Hill Mailes, one of the best "heavies" in pictures, with George Berrill and Malcolm Blevins, who have both appeared in countless Universal productions. Louise Lovely has a strong role as the wife of the murdered man, who sees the net woven closer and closer about the man whom in the end she comes to love. The excellent story runs like this:

As just compensation for a dissolute life, William Bryant is a hopeless cripple, refusing to be nursed by any one but his wife, Margaret, and endeavoring to make her as miserable as possible by his taunts and sneers.

Dr. Cameron, whose professional duty and sympathy for the wife compels him to serve Bryant as physician, arrives at his patient's home one evening, just in time to intercept a blow which Bryant is about to give Margaret. The two men struggle and Bryant is finally thrown upon the bed unconscious. The doctor makes a hurried examination and assures the terrified wife that her husband is not dead. Margaret beseeches Dr. Cameron to take her away, and he, having secretly loved her for some time, and feeling a passionate desire for her, consents to her request.

Cameron, deciding to drive his machine himself, dismisses his chauffeur, an indifferent fellow, who is tempted to make an easy haul, as he is aware that Bryant's house is poorly guarded. Cautiously he approaches, and climbs through a front window.

Meanwhile, Bryant has regained consciousness in time to see Dr. Cameron and his wife drive away. Tense with excitement, he resolves to avenge himself. Inspired with a malignant idea, he goes to his desk and hastily writes in his diary, after which he draws out a revolver with the intention of killing himself.

Later, Margaret and Cameron are brought to the police court by a country sheriff, who has arrested them on their way from the city. Cameron, to shield Margaret, confesses that he did it, not realizing the seriousness of the charge against them; but when they hear that they are held for the murder of Bryant, they are petrified by the terrible accusation.

Bryant has made his wife and Dr. Cameron victims of his virulence by writing in his diary, "Doctor Cameron is coming to-night and I am sure that he and my wife are going to attempt my life. They love each other, traitors!" This evidence is now in the hands of the police, who are satisfied in their conclusion that Cameron and Margaret are the murderers.

As the two prisoners are being led to their cells, Bryant's aged butler suddenly confesses to having accidentally killed his master while attempting to wrest the revolver from him to prevent his committing suicide. His testimony is corroborated by the chauffeur, who attests to having seen the whole of the struggle.

Dr. Cameron continues his professional visits to the home of Margaret, but he fails to charge her for his services.

"The Girl Reporter's Scoop"

Reading her story.

Helen prevents Howard's escape.

IMP Drama in two reels. Story by Fred A. Kelsey. Scenario by Maie Havey and production by Fred A. Kelsey. Irene Hunt and Roy Stewart have the leads in a clever story of a newspaper woman's triumph.

THIS Imp drama, produced by Fred A. Kelsey from his own story, which was adapted for the screen by Maie Havey, was the first picture in which Irene Hunt played upon her return from her honeymoon. The original title of the film was "Back on the Job," and this caused the bride, Mrs. Scott, no little amusement, when she heard it for the first time. The title was subsequently changed to a more descriptive one.

The plot of the picture is quite original in conception and working out, and some of the scenes are taken at one of the California beaches, affording a very pleasant contrast for those of us who are in the grip of winter. Miss Hunt does some fine work, supported by Roy Stewart and E. P. Evers. The story is as follows:

Helen Dale, a reporter on a big daily, returns from her vacation to find the office agog with excitement over some daring robberies which have been committed.

CAST.

Helen Dale	Irene Hunt
Dick Bayless	E. P. Evers
John Howard	Roy Stewart

Helen discovers that the supposed robber closely resembles a chap with whom she had carried on a flirtation at the seashore. With the good wishes of the staff and the promise of a better position from the editor if she can apprehend the thief, Helen, with one of the reporters, Dick Bayless, returns to the beach city.

Helen points out her acquaintance, John Howard, to Bayless, and he lies down near him on the sand. In a short time, Helen stealthily makes her way to Bayless' side and lifts his watch; Howard sees this and falls into her trap by offering to put her next to bigger game. She gets an opportunity of telling Bayless what has happened.

Howard introduces her to his gang and they plot to rob a certain manufacturing establishment. Making an excuse to leave them, she phones Bayless, and he, with some policemen, follow. They take the crooks into custody just after they have opened the safe and started away with the loot.

Helen receives the praise of the staff as well as the reward offered for the apprehension of the thief. We are left to assume that she gets a husband into the bargain, in the person of Bayless.

L-KO NOTES.

DAN RUSSELL, under the direction of Craig Hutchinson's has just completed a two-reel picture called "Spike's Busy Bike." The story was written around a six-day bicycle race. In shooting the chase Dan Russell fell from his wheel and dislocated his collar bone. At one point in the picture a dummy was thrown under a street car. The passengers were unaware of the substitution of the dummy and almost caused a panic. One woman actually fainted.

Phil Dunham has started a new picture under the direction of Kitty Howe the scenario of which was written by J. S. Blystone. It is a slapstick detective story and full of thrills.

While "A Limburger Cyclone" was being shown in the city of Los Angeles, the theatre was visited by the feature's leading comedian, Phil Dunham. As he seated himself in the theatre he noticed two beautiful girls at his right. He could not help but overhear their conversation, in which one of them said she knew Mr. Dunham very well. Phil listened with interest and found out that he was a terrible drunkard and had a past that made Nero look sick. Mr. Dunham, however, found that they knew so much about him that he didn't know, that he felt it necessary to move on. Before leaving, he gravely presented them with his visiting card.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

THE story of "The Reward of the Faithless" deals with an emerald ring stolen from a king who ruled some centuries ago. Purchase three or four cheap emerald rings, place each one in a small ring-box, and drop one box on each of a number of busy corners.

Have a man dressed in the costume of a court jester distribute circulars with the following matter:

LOST!

A duplicate of a valuable emerald ring stolen from a 16th century king.

The finder will receive a liberal reward if the ring is returned to (name of Manager).

The true story of the ring is shown in "The Reward of the Faithless"

The attached letter sent to the people on your mailing list will bring in business. Have the letter multigraphed on your business stationary:

Dear Friend—Prince Paul stared at the woman before him with superstitious terror.

Just three months previous he had seen his wife's lifeless form laid away. He himself had witnessed the sealing of the crypt which hid her forever from view.

Yet, gazing squarely into his eyes was the living, breathing image of the woman whose heart he had broken.

The events which led up to this startling incident and its amazing sequel are told in "The Reward of the Faithless." It is a BLUEBIRD photoplay and without question one of the most interesting productions ever issued by that organization.

"The Reward of the Faithless" was booked by the management of the (name here) Theatre as the result of the sensation this feature has created wherever shown. Critics have been unanimous in pronouncing it as vivid in its realism as anything Poe ever wrote.

See this production. It will be shown on (day and date here). A splendid program consisting of (give program here) will be shown in addition to the five-reel BLUEBIRD production.

Cordially yours,

Manager.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

REGINA, Sask.—Mr. G. Saywell, proprietor of the Star Theatre, Broadview, Sask., has disposed of same to Mr. Jas. Foley of Broadview. Universal service is used exclusively.

MONTREAL, Que.—The Idealograph Theatre of this city burned to the ground and was the cause of the death of four people, damage amounting to about $20,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. However, they suspect same was due to defect of insulation.

A dangerous fire was averted at the Globe Theatre due to the booth being of the most modern construction. However, ten reels were burned, including a Pathe feature, and reels from the General and Universal Departments.

The Censor Board in this province seems to be on the rampage at the present time. Recently two wonderful Bluebird features were condemned, namely, "The Piper's Price" and "The Devil's Pay-Day."

The Regent Theatre is reported to have booked the Universal Screen Magazine permanently every week. This novelty has made a very favorable impression upon the patrons of the Regent, and Mr. Roberts therefore decided to use it altogether.

The London Theatre of this city has been purchased by Mr. Sam Holman, the present proprietor of the New Grand Theatre, one of the first-run photoplay houses. It is his intention to demolish the present structure and build an up-to-date house, seating approximately 1,400 people. This theatre is situated in a very desirable spot on St. Catherine Street, and at the present has a somewhat cramped seating capacity according to the amount of business being done.

CANADA ORGANIZES.

New Film Association Elects Officers and Plans Protection.

TORONTO, Can., Feb. 3 (Special)—Motion picture men representing a capital investment of almost $2,000,000 gathered from all parts of Ontario yesterday, and at a meeting held in Cooper's Hall, launched into being the Ontario Moving Picture Protective Association. While this organization has been operating for a couple of years under a provincial charter, it was purely local in character, and yesterday its operation was extended for the first time to embrace the province and to incorporate in its membership the exchange men. During the meeting it was stated that the launching of the present organization was but a step toward the motion picture men's ideal, which is a Dominion-wide organization with a Dominion board of censors to pass on all films to be shown in Canada.

The gathering was presided over by F. R. Lennon, and W. A. Bach acted as secretary. Among the addresses delivered was one by Mayor Church, who gave the out-of-town delegates an enthusiastic welcome. Other speeches were made by W. Baillie, the retiring president, who welcomed the delegates; P. J. Nolan, of Ottawa, who spoke on organization; W. A. Bach, who addressed the meeting on the necessity of organization to strengthen and increase business; Phil Kaufman, who spoke on censorship; and Arthur Cohen, who advocated the union of the motion picture industry from coast to coast.

Mr. Bach, in his speech, touched on the necessity of union to protect the industry. He said that one of the immediate goals of the association would be to send a deputation to the Government, requesting that no legislation dealing with the motion picture business be passed before it was first submitted to the officials of the association. Mr. Kaufman, in speaking of the present war tax levied on all houses, said that if this should be increased that it would be necessary to increase the price of admission, as the houses had lost a great deal of patronage since the war tax was imposed, but that no motion picture man complained of the loss, as all were patriotic and willing to make every possible sacrifice to assist the Empire.

In order to give the new organization a provincial standing both in character as well as in charter, the old executive resigned and many new members were elected.

To become eligible for the GENERAL ADVERTISING prize, forward to our NEW YORK OFFICE, during the month of February, a photo showing your lobby display and a description of advertising you get up in connection with the showing of each BLUEBIRD photoplay.

To become eligible for the LOBBY DISPLAY prize, send us a photo of your lobby display together with a description of it. DON'T FORGET TO WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS ON THE BACK OF THE PHOTOGRAPH. It is expressly understood that BLUEBIRD Photoplays, Inc., reserves the right to publish the photographs of all meritorious displays even though they may not be the winners of the prizes.

The Judges The JUDGES who will pass upon the campaigns and lobby displays submitted, will consist of the Board of Directors of this organization, the General Manager, Advertising Manager and the Assistant Advertising Manager of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

These Judges will carefully analyze all material submitted. Every Exhibitor stands an equal chance of winning the prizes. Advertising Brains—not prestige or pull—will count!

The contest will close at midnight of the last day of February and the Judges will render their decisions not later than March 15th. Should it be found that more than one Exhibitor is entitled to each of the prizes, as many additional prizes of the same amount as may be necessary, will be awarded! ! !

Every Exhibitor Bound to Benefit

Every Exhibitor who takes part in this contest is bound to be tremendously benefitted by the ADVERTISING IDEAS conceived by the WINNERS. The WINNING IDEAS—the ideas that have made BIG MONEY for the live wires of the business, will be passed on to every Bluebird exhibitor. Bear this important fact in mind! Advertising has converted many a theatre from dismal failure to brilliant success. If you are now showing BLUEBIRD features you are eligible, and you should try for one of the prizes.

STORIES OF THE ONE REEL PHOTOPLAYS

"A HASTY HAZING."

Nestor Comedy.
Story and Scenario by Karl Coolidge.
Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

CAST.

Eddie	Eddie Lyons
Lee	Lee Moran
Edith, his wife	Edith Roberts
Her Father	Fred Gamble
Tom	Harry Nolan

The one big moment of Eddie's life is when he arrives at college. The registrar asks Tom to let Eddie room with him. Eddie, looking out of the window, is pushed by Tom and lands in a blanket held by the boys below. Eddie escapes.

Lee and Edith have just been married, and as soon as they have rented an apartment they phone to Edith's mother and father to ask forgiveness. They say they will come immediately to see the young couple.

While Edith is changing her dress, Lee decides to buy some cigars for father and hurries out of the apartment. The boys take him for Eddie, and, grabbing him, they rush him out and begin to haze him.

Eddie sees the open window of Lee's apartment and climbs through it. Edith hears him, and thinking it to be Lee, says she will be there in a minute. Eddie bumps into mother and father, who threaten him for marrying their daughter. Edith comes to the door and says Eddie isn't her husband and then father draws a revolver. Eddie breaks away and runs madly out of the building. With a policeman they return to the apartment and are arguing fiercely, when Lee, having escaped from the college fellows, rushes in, followed by the crowd of boys. The boys grab Eddie and drag him down the hall. Lee explains and father relents.

"MR. FULLER PEP—HE DOES SOME QUICK MOVING."

Powers Animated Cartoon (Split Reel).

Mrs. Fuller Pep decides to move because there is a girls' school across the street which distracts her husband's attention. After a hard day's moving, Fuller arrives at the new house first. He looks out of the window. Oh, joy!—a charmer. Mrs. Pep arrives and decides to move again. After several other changes, we see them established in the middle of the Sahara Desert.

"BRAVE LITTLE WALDO."

L-Ko Komedy.
With Fatty Voss.

Colonel Bingo had arranged with Major Godfrey that his son Waldo should marry the Major's daughter. But first Waldo had to be sent to college to cure him of his wild and fighting temper. The cure was entirely successful and Waldo returns a perfect example of the genus "Sissy." The Colonel is perfectly disgusted and decrees that his son must go west and become a man or die. He goes to the ranch of his uncle. If clothes could make a man, Waldo at the ranch would certainly be a ruffian. He is togged out in Wild West garmens of the early eighties, including hardware. To the women he is perfectly irresistible. But he does not make such a hit with the cow-punchers.

They select a "gentle" horse for him to ride. Waldo just manages to survive the ordeal. Waldo writes home what a daredevil he has become and father and mother come out to see for themselves. Their disappointment is so acute that the result lands Waldo at the bottom of a cliff. Then father repents and goes after his offspring.

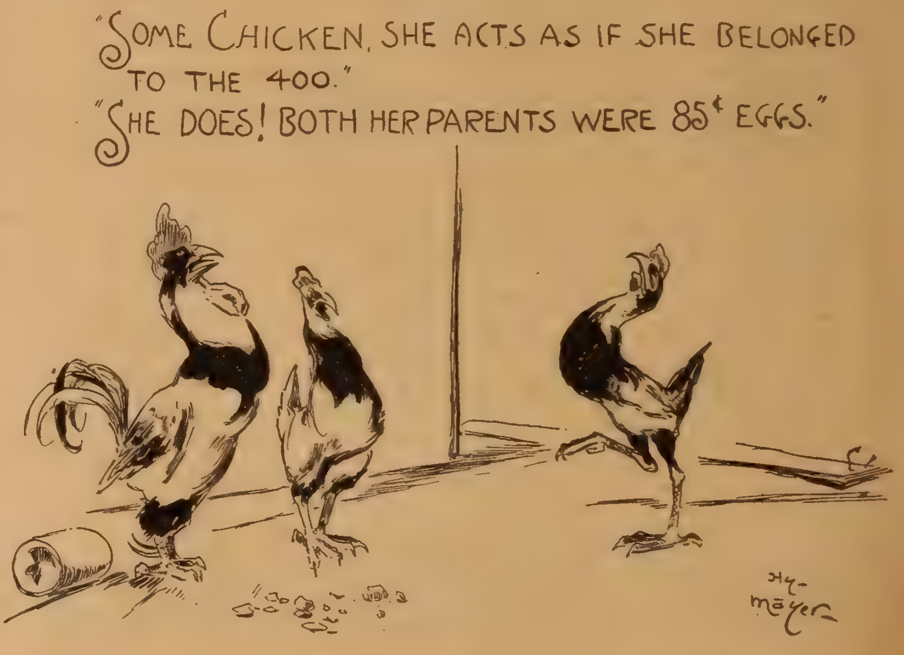
"BROKEN-HEARTED."

Laemmle Drama.

Leonard Dare, a play producer, finds himself without a player strong enough to enact the part of Philip Dawany, one of the important characters of the cast. His company is temporarily dismissed and he returns home.

Derwent Hall calls for an interview with Dare. Hall's wife is sick; the doctor has instructed Hall to give her better food and medical attention. Hall, desperate, takes the opportunity of urging Dare to allow him to read his play. Spellbound, Dare listens to the most absurd line of talk he has ever heard, but he is very much surprised by the magnificent acting of the author. Dare writes out a check for the play, and while the hungry man looks on, calmly throws the manuscript on the fire. Dare says he will make him the greatest actor living.

Hall is cast in the part of Philip Dawany. At first Hall is treated with distinct coldness by the audience, but at the last cheer after cheer rolls out as the curtain falls. In this moment—his hour of triumph—a message reaches him from home. His wife is dead.



"SOME CHICKEN, SHE ACTS AS IF SHE BELONGED TO THE 400."
"SHE DOES! BOTH HER PARENTS WERE 85¢ EGGS."

Original Conceit of Hy. Mayer, the Celebrated Caricaturist of the Universal Animated Weekly.

STORIES OF THE ONE REEL PHOTOPLAYS

"MULE MATES."

Joker Comedy.
Story by Wm. Beaudine and Jack Cuningham.

CAST.

Bill	Wm. Franey
Gale, his wife	Gale Henry
Lillian	Lillian Peacock
The Mule	Fred Woodward
Its Owner	Milburn Moranti

Bill and Gale begin to fight because the breakfast is not to his liking and finally the wife drives him from the house. On the street an Italian is beating a mule unmercifully. Bill becomes enraged at the cruelty and knocks the driver completely unconscious. So the mule follows him. He hires a policeman to hold the mule while he gets away, but a woman comes to ask the cop a question and the mule escapes, giving the two of them a terrific kick. The animal continues to follow Bill, who has stopped to get a shoeshine. Bill is reading the newspaper when he sees that his shoes are not being cleaned and, looking about, faces the mule. He hides behind a statue, in a barrel, climbs a telephone pole, all in vain.

The man hastens to his office building and slams the elevator door just as the mule enters and begins to climb the stairs. Bill finds his clerk making love to Lillian, the stenographer, and Gale, having repented her treatment of her husband, enters and finds Bill with his arms around his stenographer. The mule saves Bill from the ferocious assault of his wife.

Bill and the animal then go to a saloon and both become so intoxicated that they cannot stand up. They go to Bill's home, but Gale throws them into the street, where they go to sleep, Bill with his head pillowed on the mule's shoulder.

"DRAMA OF THE ORIENT."

Powers Educational (Split Reel)—

This Powers educational is part of the series taken by Doctor Dorsey. It shows unusual views of the native Chinese theatre. A pantomime of a servant seeking employment, in which all the actors are male, as there are no actresses in China, begins the reel. Then follows the pantomime of the pattery mender, and the street pantomime of the scared lions. Then comes a burlesque on the Ming dynasty, and after that a pantomime describing the Chinese New Year. A novel dance performed on stilts closes the reel.

"THE GIRL OF THE HOUR."

Victor Comedy.
With Herbert Brenon and Vivian Prescott.

William is told by Vivian's father that he can have his daughter if the Varsity crew, of which William is coxswain, wins the big race. Just a few hours before the race Will receives news that his mother is dying. This is a frame-up by some fellows who have a large bet against the Varsity crew. William goes to his mother. On the road he is knocked unconscious by two men who are connected with the frame-up.

Vivian arrives to see the race, She goes to the captain, tells him that she can act as coxswain. Will had often told the boys that Vivian was as capable in that position as he was. William has gained consciousness, and on his way to the club discovers that the missive was a frame-up. He is in time to see the Varsity crew win the big race. Vivian's dad gives them his consent.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, ISSUE NO. 7.

A remarkable device for the stabilizing of a bicycle, particularly useful to military bicycle corps, is the first number of the Universal Screen Magazine, No. 7. The second shows the profitable industry of silver fox raising. A pair of skins have brought as much as $2,500. An object lesson for those who spend their working hours in the safety of a modern office is given in thrilling pictures of the handling of dynamite. Then feats of strength are performed for the camera, including the bending of inch gaspipe.

Food inspection by the Board of Health of New York follows, and illustrates the untiring efforts to keep the public foods clean and sanitary. Inspection of meat and condemnation of that which is unfit for use is of interest to all consumers. The selection and packing of oranges for market form an interesting strip.

The wonderful result of persistent endeavor is shown by the skill and strength developed by a man who lost both his legs in a street car accident and was pronounced a hopeless cripple. The extraordinary feats which he has taught himself to perform are a lesson to the normal.

"THE END OF A PERFCT DAY."

L-Ko Komedy.

With Gertrude Selby and Hank Mann.

Gertie is an incorrigible flirt. She is sitting on the bank of a lake, and two of her admirers are contending for her favor. She throws a rose into the water and declares, "Who gets the rose, gets me." There is a very wet half hour after that.

Her sweetheart comes along and asks her to go for a ride in his car. She is delighted and goes into the house to change her gown. While he is waiting for her, Hank slugs his chauffeur over the head, takes his cap and goggles and gets into his seat. Reggie and Gertie climb into the tonneau, and have a lovely spoon, while Hank, as the chauffeur, drives them all over the town. Finally he drives right off the end of a pier and the joy ride ends in the ocean.

"THE HALF BREED'S CONFESSION."

Big U Drama.

Back in the lumber district of California, Clifford is convicted of murdering his employer on circumstantial evidence. Alice, Clifford's fiancee, and the dead man's daughter, is drifting down the river, when she observes an Indian who has been swept over the rapids. She rescues the Indian in a dying condition. He, believing he is dying, confesses to murdering Alice's father. They are miles from the country town where the execution of Clifford is taking place. She drags the Indian to an automobile and she hurries to the scaffold. The black cloth is over Clifford's head, and he is about to be hanged, as she pushes through the crowd, dragging the Indian with her. The execution is stayed a moment, while the Indian confesses to the sheriff. Clifford is liberated, and declared innocent.

"A DAY IN THE LIFE OF A DOG."

Powers Animated Cartoon Split Reel

Sammie Johnsin is reading a book about dogs. He goes to sleep and dreams that he is one. Many adventures happen to him, ending with a fight with a cat in which the feline has the best of it. Sammie wakes and decides that he does not care about being a dog after all.

Letters from Universal Exhibitors and Fans

FROM FAR RANGOON.

The popularity of "The Broken Coin" and Grace Cunard have penetrated to many out-of-the-way corners of the world, and have made friends for both of strange people. Recently there arrived at the New York office a letter addressed to Miss Grace Cunard, Cunard & Co., New York, America. It was passed by the censor from Rangoon, and found its way safely to Miss Cunard, although it was opened by the Cunard Line in New York in passing. The letter is from Miss Eila Das, a little Indian girl, who says that she is eleven years old. This is the letter:

Dear Miss Cunard—I have seen you acting in "The Broken Coin," and I have liked your acting very much. Please send me a photo of you. Please write to me. I hope this letter will reach you safely. Have you ever been in Burma?

Well, I must end now, with heaps and heaps of love from,

Your little friend,
MISS EILA DAS, (aged 11).

HAS NO EQUAL AS A MONEY SERIAL.

Laemmle Film Service,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen—"Wasn't 'Liberty' fine tonight?" That is what I hear from 90 per cent. of my patrons after the showing of each episode of "Liberty."

Your great serial is full of vim and action from start to finish, as it is dealing with one of the most important questions before the American people—the situation in Mexico.

I consider it the best and most popular serial on the market, and as a money getter it has no equal.

Yours very truly,
V. W. DAWSON,
Mgr. Oak Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn.

THEY LIKED YOU, TOO.

Colonial Film Exchange,
Sioux Falls, S. Dak.

Gentlemen—I want to state now that in all my dealings with exchange offices and their men, I have never had better treatment from any one of them than that which I received from the Colonial, and should I ever start another show anywhere around here I should certainly use Universal service from the Colonial Exchange.

Yours very truly,
LOUIS M. LIEU,
Egan, South Dakota.

TWO REMARKABLE BLUEBIRD CONTESTS.

display as judged by the committee of awards.

There will be no cost to the exhibitors who enter the contest. It is maintained that the theatre manager must and does advertise Bluebird for the day or days they are exhibited, and the only requirement to be considered in entering the contest will be to send photographs of the lobby display, and specimens of the printed matter and description of the special "stunts" that go to make up the general publicity the theatre gives Bluebird.

The photographs and evidence must be sent to the General Offices of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., No. 1600 Broadway, where they will be judged by the General Manager, Bluebird Board of Directors, the General Advertising Manager and the Assistant Advertising Manager and awards made strictly and solely upon the merits of the campaigns as shown by exhibits submitted. The branch managers will be guided in making territorial award of prizes by the decision of the Board of Judges in New York.

Bluebird declares that its purpose in making these awards is to create an incentive for co-operation among exhibitors; the interchange of ideas being held as likely to be immensely profitable to the individual showman. The winning displays will be described in the form of advertising in the trade papers; there will be a circularization of all exhibitors, with the fuller details; and thus it is held that ideas thus encouraged in development will be available for exhibitors in every part of the country.

On these lines Bluebird is going to divide $115 (or if ties result more money in sufficiency to give every winner his full prize) among exhibitors in February, 1917. The contest closes at midnight February 28 and the awards will be announced on March 15.

Condon tries to raise money to pay off the note, but fails. The night of the wedding arrives and the weather is very stormy. Amid a continual roll of thunder and flash of lightning, the participants arrive. Condon breaks in determined to stop the ceremony. As he opens the door a bolt of lightning strikes the house and the shock is so great that Osborne is thrown from his chair. He rises to his feet and stammers out, "There, third stone up," pointing to the chimney.

Condon catches his meaning and finds the cancelled note. Merrill is ordered from the house. Osborne has relapsed into paralysis, but his eyes glow with triumph over his defeat of Merrill.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

ATTENTION, PLEASE!

YOUR attention is called to the fact that hereafter, and beginning with this issue of the WEEKLY, releases will be scheduled and reviewed three weeks in advance, intsead of four, as has been the custom.

We believe the change will better serve the interests of Exhibitors. We believe that four weeks is too long for an Exhibitor to carry in his mind the release which made an impression upon him at the time of reading the review. Working a little closer to release date there will be little or no probability of a change of program. Beginning next week the regular reviews under the heading, "Blue Ribbon Advance Notices," will be resumed.

The reason this announcement is made on this page is to assure you that three weeks in advance will be ample time for you to prepare any of the stunts suggested here.

The suggestions will continue to be of a simple and inexpensive nature, so that the smallest Exhibitor in the country can make full and profitable use of them.

In fact it is the small Exhibitor, who has no other means of advertising, for whom these suggestions primarily are made.

Won't you please show your appreciation of our efforts by making use of these stunts every week, or some of them, and then take the time to write us the result? Thank you.

THE Red Feather for February 19 is something to make a noise about. It is called "The War of the Tongs," and is the first picture ever made in America in which a story, written by a Chinaman, is played by an entire cast of Chinese actors, without a white man appearing on the screen. The picture is that rarity—a real screen novelty—and is simply full of fascinating details of the life of the Chinese in San Francisco, their secret societies with their ruthless methods of exterminating their enemies; their business methods; their home life. Something big in the way of newspaper advertising should be done on this remarkable picture, but there are other things which ought not to be neglected. Print cards with such questions as "Have you ever seen the home of a Chinese Family?" "Do you know how the mysterious Chinese lottery is operated?" "Can you play Chinese fan-tan?" "Do you know how a Chinaman choses a wife?" Many other lines will suggest themselves to you, if you read the story about the picture on page —. "See 'The War of the Tongs" should follow every question. Send a procession of Chinese sandwich men through the streets with announcements, or men made up to look like Chinese. You can make a wonderful lobby decoration with Chinese lanterns, umbrellas, posters, etc., if you have found that a decorated lobby pays you. Try the Chinese lanterns anyway, as there is no prettier decoration in the world. Have a row of yellow ones, and paint on each one letter of the title of the Red Feather, then hang them in front of the theatre several days in advance with electric bulbs inside them. Put your ushers and cashier in Chinese dress and instruct them to bow low and shake their own hands on greeting your patrons, as the Celestials do. You might distribute small fans as souvenirs, if you like, as they are very inexpensive. But make a splash with this, as it offers a wonderful opportunity.

THE funniest scene in the L-Ko for February 21, called "After the Balled-Up Ball," is that in which Phil Dunham rides around on the train of a large, stout lady, at a ball. Stage this for a street stunt, if the weather will permit. Have a man dressed in the garb of a woman, evening gown, with headdress, or large hat, and a very flamboyant gown with a long train. On it have a dummy in evening dress, riding around serenely, seated on her train. She must wear a placard, and be sure to have the train made of some very substantial material, or lined with heavy cotton, so that it will stand the strain.

FOR Thursday, February 22, there is a beautiful story, released as a Rex, and called "The Keeper of the Gate." It concerns a monk who is led from his charge, the guarding of the gate, by the music from a street festival; spends the night watching the revelers, and in the morning finds that The Christus has taken his place. The picture is very touching and beautiful, and suggests the following plan to draw attention to it. Rent a monk's gown, with a hood which covers the head, and a girdle of rope. Dress a tall man in it, and have him stand mysteriously at the side of the box-office, holding his cowl over his face. There should be an announcement over his head.

THE Joker for February 24 is called "Rosie's Rancho," and is a perfect scream. Gale Henry is the masculine-looking owner of the ranch, and she certainly makes the cowpunchers sit up. Dress a thin, forbidding-looking person (a man if you like) in a travesty of woman's Western clothes, divided skirt, huge hat, and many guns. Send her, mounted or on foot, through the streets, driving a man before her at the point of a gun. He should wear a placard on his chest.

UNIVERSAL COMEDIES

Every day the demand for prints of UNIVERSAL COMEDIES increases. That's the proof of their growing popularity that is making greater profits for all concerned.

The fans are demanding them from the Exhibitors, because they are unusual—clean—wholesome—fresh—spontaneous—simply made for laffing purposes. UNIVERSAL COMEDIES give them most for their money.

The Exhibitors are demanding them from the Exchange, because they find that UNIVERSAL COMEDIES get the crowds that add to their profits; and because they will strengthen any show, they are the best possible releases for "special bookings."

The Exchange Managers are demanding them from the Universal Home Office, because they find that the Exhibitor who wants a "special booking" is glad to pay a slight advance for UNIVERSAL COMEDIES. Released on the regular Universal Program, or they can be booked separately. Write your nearest Universal Exchange today, or Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York.

NOW

Coming Every Week

To meet the demands of Exhibitors

An insistent and persistent demand from Exhibitors and Exchange men has COMPELLED us to produce the Universal Screen Magazine every week, instead of every other week as originally planned. This mighty one-reeler, that made good over-night, has proved such a drawing card—so great a hit with fans—that shortly you can get it every week. Watch for the formal announcement.

UNIVERSAL Screen Magazine

Here are a few brief extracts which show how your brother Exhibitors regard this wonder film; how Exchange men, who want the real live stuff only, regard it, and you can judge for yourself after reading them how the Universal Screen Magazine would go in your town.

Read these Extracts:

"I am showing the Universal Screen Magazine, and have been ever since it came out. I find it very good material to build up a program, and will say that it has increased the value of my program considerably. THERE IS ONLY ONE THING AGAINST IT AND THAT IS IT ISN'T RELEASED OFTEN ENOUGH."

(Name on request.)

"I was one of the first to book the Universal Screen Magazine. It was an instantaneous hit with my patrons, and boosted my entire show. If you could hand it to us every week we would appreciate it, I can assure you." (Name on request.)

Following is a TELEGRAM from an Exchange manager: "If Screen Magazine is issued every week we will be able to use here as well as in L———." (Particulars on request.)

From a letter from another Exchange manager: "We find the Screen Magazine a very desirable release. If you release it every week we could add greatly to our bookings. This arrangement would greatly benefit this Exchange as well as other Exchanges."

Write today for full particulars regarding this greatest of one-reelers. Address your nearest Universal Exchange, or the UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, 1600 Broadway.

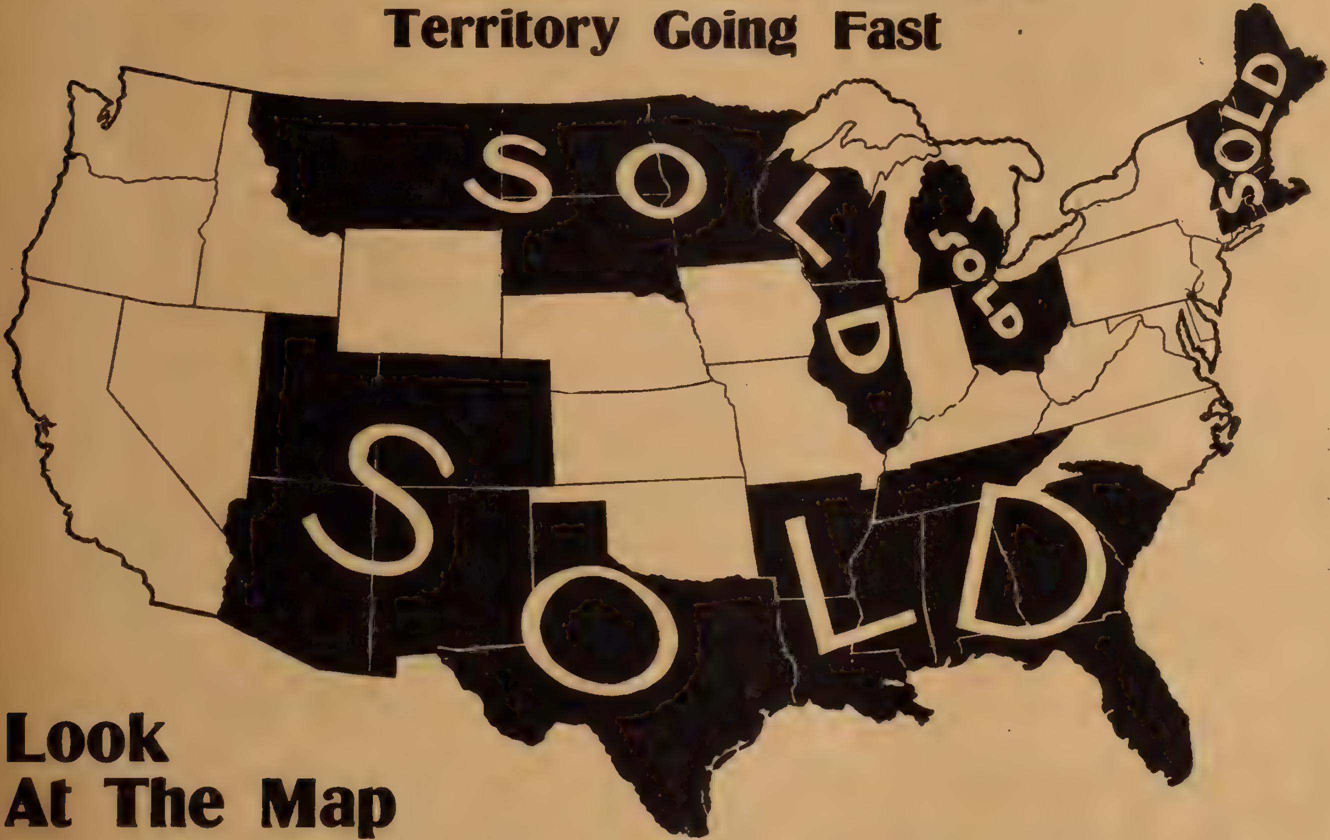
Territory Going Fast



Look At The Map

STATE RIGHTS

On this—the most remarkable picture ever filmed the stupendous production that is still the sensation of Broadway, where, at the Broadway Theatre, it played to $22,000 in two weeks—are going rapidly, as a glance at the map will show.

This remarkable realization and vizualization of Jules Verne's great dreams and future prophecies as foretold in his 50-year-old classic, "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA," cost a half million dollars to produce and was over two years in the making.

It is the ideal State Rights production, because so long as people can read, Jules Verne's wonderful tale will be read, and the people will clamor to see the story in this great picture. It will be as great a box office attraction five years from now as it is today when it is breaking all records wherever shown.

Write today for the magnificent book giving full particulars regarding every detail of this mammoth production, including advertising props, etc. Address all communications to the STATE RIGHTS DEPT. of the

NOW SELLING

State Rights Men and Exhibitors who UNDERSTAND the Box Office value of State Right Productions will need no selling arguments to convince them of the golden flood of profits in "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL." One single inspection of a sample print will SELL any State Rights man and book any Exhibitor in the country.

"HELL MORGAN'S GIRL," although powerful of title, is one of the greatest pieces of direction ever known—the story is unusual—the scenes and settings lavish and faithful to the last degree, and there's not one single iota of suggestiveness in the entire five reels. It's a money-getter from the word "Go." Wire for territory, terms and information to the STATE RIGHTS DEPT. of the

To UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise you that the majority comment on your photoplay "THE PEOPLE VERSUS JOHN DOE" reviewed by The National Board of Review on NOVEMBER 17, 1916 was as follows:

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE EXCELLENT EDUCATIONAL VALUE EXCELLENT

ARTISTIC VALUE: Dramatic interest of story VERY INTENSE Coherence of narrative STRONG Acting EXCELLENT Photography GOOD Technical handling ADMIRABLY Costuming (if period production) Atmospheric quality of scenic setting CONVINCING

Historical value (if period production)

MORAL EFFECT GOOD

GENERAL COMMENT: In the opinion of those present this production is a powerful indictment of capital punishment and third degree methods. Dramatically it was considered a film masterpiece.

PRODUCED BY LOIS WEBER

Read this Report

and you will understand why this stupendous LOIS WEBER production played to capacity at the Broadway Theatre, New York, and received from newspaper and film critics an endorsement rarely given to any cinema production.

Choice Territory Still Open

This is the ideal type of State Rights production. It not only gets the capacity crowds, but it starts discussion in Press and Pulpit as well as among the People themselves. Choice territory still available, but quick action is necessary. Write today for handsome illustrated and dscriptive folder which tells you all about this big production, advertising props, paper, etc. Address all communications to the

Advance Notices

Every Exhibitor should read every word-every week

"The War of the Tongs." A thrilling and sensational drama of life among the warring Chinese Tongs in America. Enacted by the Imperial Chinese players. The entire cast composed of Chinese actors only. Scenario and continuity written by Chinese. Props, sets and details all planned and executed by Chinese. Nothing like it ever shown in America. New—Novel—Unusual—Unique. A most unusual Red Feather Production. Released February 19. Sound like an advertisement writer, don't I? Well, well, so I do. And if you had seen this wonderful picture and were sitting here LCSmithing as I am you'd listen like a twenty-four sheet. That's a bet. But to get back to the greatest novelty filmdom has ever seen. I have an idea that the Chinese who wrote the story has been in the habit of attending some good old stock company melodrama house out in San Francisco, because he hasn't overlooked one of the good old melodramatic punches, and still he knew how to keep his story crammed, jammed full of human-interest. First of all, don't get the idea that this is a highbrow costume play. It isn't anything of the sort. It is a true tale of human lives and loves and hates, and Chinese secret societies; intimate glimpses of their gambling games—fan tan, chuck lo, lotteries, etc. It shows their methods of courtship, of arranging the bride's dowry, and their quaint betrothal customs. It shows their intimate home and family life—a loving father, a dear old mother and a beautiful marriageable daughter. I'm not going to tell you the whole story here, but it will appear in full detail with some wonderful still pictures in next week's issue of the Moving Picture Weekly, and as you value your happiness don't miss reading it all. I will give you an idea, however. A Chinese young man loves a pretty little Chinese girl. A wealthy gambling joint keeper and leader of his Tong wants her for his wife. She favors the boy, and her father says that if the boy can raise the dowry of nine hundred bucks he can have her. The boy tries the lottery, and gambles in an effort to raise the coin. He loses all he has, because his rival has worked a crooked game on him. The boy, angry, strikes the gambler. They belong to rival Tongs, and at a meeting a price of a thousand dollars is put on the boy's head. Getting exciting, eh? All right, get next week's Weekly—then go on with the story. In the meantime wire your nearest Universal Exchange and reserve your booking before your competitor beats you to it. It's a whale. It will pack any house in America. Get busy. It will be a long time before you'll have another chance like this.

ANNOUNCEMENT

You will notice that the usual Program releases are not reviewed on this page this week. After careful consideration we have concluded that we can better serve the interests of Exhibitors by giving reviews of pictures to be released not more than three weeks in advance. Four weeks is too long to carry these matters in your mind. You are likely to overlook something good that appealed to you several weeks before when you first read about it. Hereafter, then, no releases will be reviewed more than THREE weeks in advance. THE EDITOR.

"BLUEBIRDS HAVE ARRIVED"

The Strand, the Rialto, the Marcus Loew Theatres and many others in Greater New York now play BLUEBIRDS because of their superior excellence. The significance is that when BLUEBIRD announced its now famous policy of "The Play's the Thing," these astute managers said: "It can't be done; we must have stars; never mind the play; give us stars." The beauty and perfection of BLUEBIRDS have created a demand from the PEOPLE, which managers have been quick to recognize. The people are NOW demanding BLUEBIRDS. Are you wise?

picture so big—so unusual—that even udged by the ultra critical BLUEBIRD Exhange men according to the high BLUEBIRD tandard—it was pronounced one of the greatest pictures ever produced anywhere.

n spite of the fact that after weeks of advertisng valuable State Rights on this remarkable icture had been sold—THE MONEY WAS ETURNED—NEGOTIATIONS FOR FURHER SALES WERE WITHDRAWN—and LUEBIRD Exchange Managers prepared to release it as a BLUEBIRD Special—not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program of releases.

Now that it is a BLUEBIRD we do not hesitate to say that it is the finest BLUEBIRD ever released. "Hell Morgan's Girl" is based on a big story; time—the great San Francisco disaster; place—the famous Barbary Coast resorts of that wonderfully cosmopolitan city. Without fear of contradiction we pronounce this picture one of the three greatest box-office attractions on the market today.

"GET SORE!"

WHO'S running your business, anyway?
Is it Nellie Lensfiend, the million-dollar star? Is it Messrs. Bunkem and Bullem, the feature producers—or is it YOU?

WHY are you in business?

Is it because you like pretty Nellie and want to help her get over with the dear public? Is it because you want to assist Bill Bunkem and Joe Bullem land some quick and easy simoleons—or is it because you and the family like to eat once in awhile and are compelled by police regulations to wear clothes?
Nutty questions?

Not on your admission ticket? Just let these questions sink into your think tank. Answer 'em fairly and squarely. If the result isn't weeping and wailing that will make old Job's lamentation sound like the Songs of Solomon, I'll eat my hat!

Here's the situation. Stars come high, and as long as Nellie can command sky-high salaries, she dictates the price you must pay for your service. As long as Messrs. Bunkem and Bullem sqaunder their money on pink stars for punk pictures, they dictate to you how much of your gross receipts you will be allowed to keep. Now, IF features made money for the exhibitors booking them, the high prices demanded for these pictures would be justified—perhaps. But if you want to know how well these features go over, ask some of the men who have bought up the State Rights on them. Better still, ask the exhibitor who has followed the feature policy for the last twelve months to tell you what his PROFITS for the last year amounted to!

Honest! Hasn't it EVER occurred to you to get sore when a feature manufacturer babbles about the six-figure salaries he is handing out to his stars? Don't you KNOW that it is out of YOUR pocket and not HIS that these salaries must come from? Can't you see that every time a star is given a thousand-dollar raise your wife and babies are deprived of a certain amount of pleasure and comfort?

Suffering Box Office Receipts! If these facts do ever occur to you, WHY don't you get sore and go back to the Regular Service program that cost you LITTLE and gave you a fair return on your investment.
GO AHEAD—GET SORE!!!

WATCH FOR

(No. 164. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

DURING the first week in March we are going to give you a novelty in our Red Feather feature.

Frankly, it is an experiment along the lines of a pet theory that we have been entertaining for some time.

It is a five reel combination entertainment, the first part of it consisting of a story of city and society life and the last part consisting of western stuff.

The first part is a drama with a big punch; the second half is comedy with a string of big punches. The first half will have Cleo Madison, Molly Malone, Roberta Wilson and Jack Nelson as stars, and the second part will have Neal Hart, Joe Rickson, Edward Hearn, L. M. Wells and Janet Eastman.

THIS NOVELTY

Remember, the two sections are two totally different stories, having no connection with each other except that they together constitute a five reeler of the very essence of entertainment. Both stories are made in natural length.

I think your patrons are going to like the plan tremendously. I think they will like it infinitely better than if we had strung the first part of the story out to five reels in length, which could have been done quite easily.

It practically amounts to giving you EIGHT REELS OF ENTERTAINMENT IN FIVE. I think that is what the whole trade will have to come to if we expect to maintain public interest in moving pictures.

Be among the first to show this new and condensed form of feature. Advertise it far and wide and watch the result. Then PLEASE ask your patrons how they like the idea, and let me know what they say.

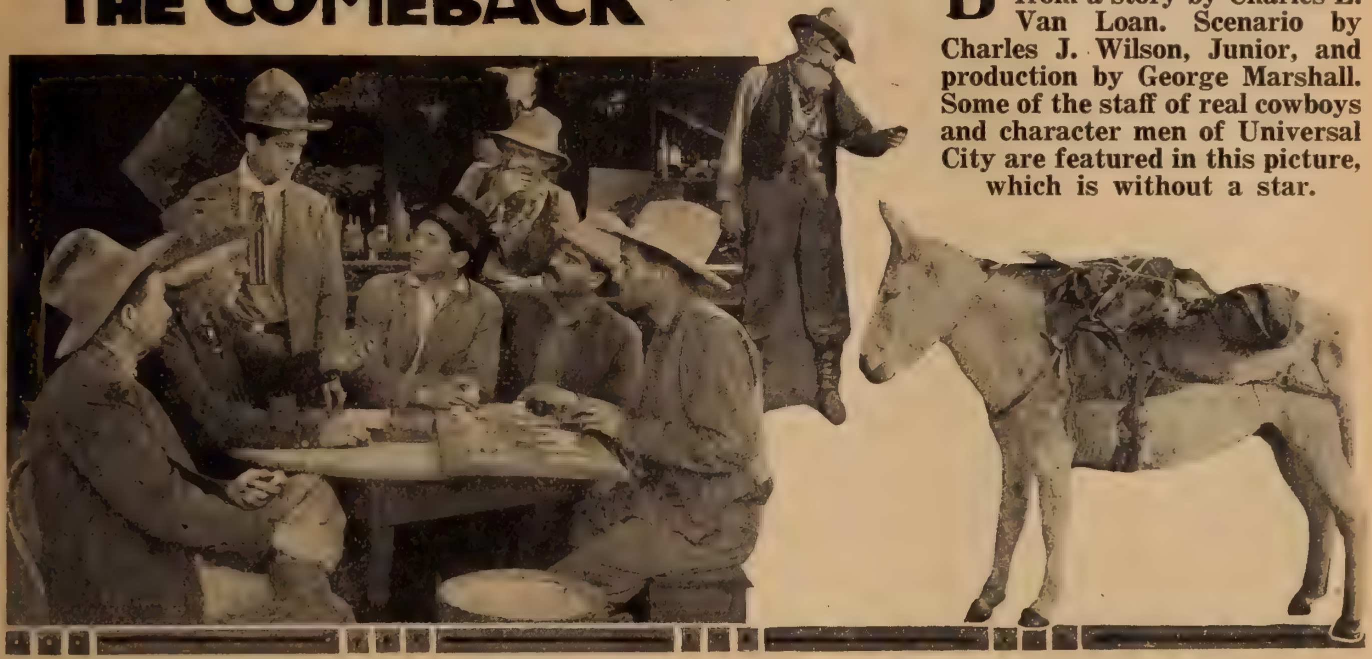
"THE COMEBACK"—

BISON Two-Reel Drama, from a story by Charles E. Van Loan. Scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Junior, and production by George Marshall. Some of the staff of real cowboys and character men of Universal City are featured in this picture, which is without a star.



CAST.

J. Lowell Quackenboss	L. O. Pierson
Cunningham	L. M. Wells
Uncle Jimmy	George Berrill
"Crying Kid"	Jack Walters
First Citizen	Bud Osborne
Second Citizen	Pedro Leon
Third Citizen	Tom Grimes

A CHARLES E. VAN LOAN story is sure to be a good one, and this Bison two-reeler was made by Charles Wilson, Jr., and George Marshall, from one of Van Loan's inimitable stories of the West. "Opportunity in Optimo" the tale was called originally, and it was read and enjoyed by thousands in the pages of a popular magazine.

The picture is unique, in that it was produced without a star. There is not even a "featured player." The seven roles were played by some of the cowboys and the character men of Universal City, with the assistance of a very intelligent burro. Of course, the cowboys of Universal City are a very unusual lot, and prove the contention of the famous Western player, Harry Carey, who has so often appeared with them, that though actors do not make good cowboys, yet cowboys are often good actors. The absolute naturalness of the work of these men in "The Comeback," their utter unconsciousness of the camera, shows that Carey knows what he is talking about. Here is the story:

Optimo is a dead mining town, and the remaining six citizens gather at Cunningham's bar daily, where they have a drink and then wend their way sorrowfully home. This has been a habit with them for the past ten years. One day, Quackenboss, a tenderfoot from the East on a prospecting trip, arrives in the town and treats the population to a drink. They notice his wad and plan to get it. One of them discovers that he is a bug on faro. They resurrect the old faro outfit and "frame up" a crooked game with Cunningham as dealer. They give him their combined capital of two hundred dollars and await their victim. Uncle Jimmy, who is always broke and always wanting a drink, arrives in the town during the preparations and watches them fleece their victim. They invite him to help himself to a drink. While the game progresses he indulges frequently, and becomes boisterous. So they throw him out. He is sore and waits outside until Quackenboss comes out after losing a thousand. Uncle Jimmy tells him of the "frame up." The old man outlines a plan to him.

Quackenboss goes on a prospecting trip and returns to the town tired and weary. The citizens have planned another Faro game, but he explains that he is too tired to play, and asks them to look over some ore samples. The majority of the stuff is no good, but suddenly they discover the real article in one of the samples and excitedly ask about it. He explains that he has found a canyon full of it. Cunningham quickly gets the others together and they persuade Quackenboss to sell them the claim for twelve hundred dollars. The next day they all start out on a mad rush. The only two who arrive at the canyon are Cunningham and one of the citizens. Instead of the gold they find a note informing them that there are other skin games beside Faro. In the meantime Quackenboss has given Uncle Jimmy his share of the twelve hundred and ridden away, leaving Optimo much sadder but also much wiser for his visit.

ALLAN J. HOLUBAR is directing and playing the featured lead in a five-act photodrama, "The Reward of His Government." Dorothy Davenport plays an important role in the film play. The story has a French atmosphere as the featured player is a government telegraph officer and there is more or less of the play connected with the present war.

DAINTY Ella Hall is being featured at Universal City in a Bluebird five-act feature photoplay, "Pawned." Miss Hall plays the role of a little girl in which she is unexcelled and is supported by a strong cast of players. Many of the scenes are laid in a pawnshop.

RUTH CLIFFORD, one of the pretty featured players at Universal City, is working in a five-act drama, "A Modern Mona Lisa." The atmosphere is laid in Paris and Miss Clifford enacts the role of a model, finally falling in love with the artist.

TAKING SCIENTIFIC PICTURES

ALPHONSE WERTHEIM does not look like a cameraman. He looks like a professor, and therefore it seems particularly appropriate that he should have taken so many scientific pictures for the Universal Animated Weekly and especially the Screen Magazine. It is rather hard to get from him data of the things he has done, for like most of his fraternity, he is inclined to be represented solely by his films. All the cameremen I have interviewed have shown the same tendency to let their accomplishments speak for them. But these are some of the recent subjects that he has photographed for Universal showing:

He went with his trusty machine up Otisville, New York, where the Health Department manufactures anti-toxin for diptheria cases, and photographed the horse which has supplied serum worth nearly half a million dollars, for the cure of the dread scourge. The Universal Film Company made something of a sensation, last summer, by their infantile paralysis pictures, with suggestions for preventive measures and first treatment, which were shown all through the streets of New York, by means of a unique cart-tail screen, invented for the occasion. It was Mr. Wertheim who secured these views, which were of great assistance to the Health Department in dealing with the plague. He has also taken many bacteriological pictures in the Willard Parker Hospital of New York, where the Health Department has its laboratories. He has photographed actual operations, on the eye, or on the throat, in the Seadside Hospital, which has a clinic for the treatment of children who need immediate attention. He also took the views of the horse ambulances, and the treatment of sick and injured horses, for the S. P. C. A., which were shown in an early number of Screen Magazine.

Mr. Wertheim does not tell you of hairbreadth escapes, and risks of life and limb, though he has often found himself in a position which would be decidedly unpleasant, to say the least of it, to the layman. For example, when he photographed the leave-taking of the 69th regiment, for the border, he had to climb to a most precarious perch with all the impedimenta of his camera, high on a pile of lumber, in order to get the views that he wanted. It was he who secured the pictures of the departing submarine merchantman, the Deutschland as she left Baltimore. He was in a small yacht, clinging to the rigging with one hand, while he turned the crank of his machine with the other, expecting every minute to be washed overboard by the huge seas which were running at the time. As he says, "If you've got to, you can do anything"—which would not make a bad motto for the cameramen's fraternity.

THIS is the remarkable Red Feather production, about which the Weekly has had so much to say. It is the only film ever produced in this country written by a Chinaman, with an entire cast of Chinese players. It is a most interesting picture of the intimate manners and customs of the Orientals, besides being a splendid story by itself. Here is the plot.

Chin Ting is a wealthy landlord and the leader of his Tong. Sam Hop, a tea merchant, is his tenant, and Chin calls for the rent. Sam Hop sends his clerk, Wong Wing, to Lee Hoy to collect a debt that he owes, in order to have the cash for his rent. Wong Wing goes to the home of Lee Hoy and meets his daughter, Suey Lee, with whom he promptly falls in love. He returns with the money for his employer.

Lee Hoy at home.

Suey Lee, wishing to see Wong Wing again, makes the excuse of purchasing some tea, and goes to Sam Hop's shop. The lovers are having an interesting conversation, when Chin Ting enters, and sees the girl. He decides on the spot that she would make a fine wife. He asks Sam Hop to talk to her father and try to arrange for a marriage. Sam Hop goes to Lee Hoy and makes a proposal for the hand of his daughter for Chin Ting. Lee is flattered that the wealthy landlord and the head of his Tong should wish to marry his daughter, and consents. But Suey Lee herself makes strenuous objections.

Sam Hop returns to his store and reports the favorable answer to the Tong leader, much to the distress of Wong Wing. Chin goes himself to call on the girl's family and finds them eating. Lee Hoy receives him with every mark of honor, but Suey Lee will have nothing to do with him. Wong Wing is unable to resist the temptation to follow. He enters in the midst of the negotiations, making the excuse of delivering a package. He has listened at the door, and heard Chin Ting trying to present a pair of jade bracelets to Suey Lee, who will not accept them. Wong enters and declares that he loves the girl. Lee Hoy cunningly says that if he can raise the dowry of nine hundred dollars, he may have her.

Wong determines to try his luck at the lottery. He pur-

RED FEATHER Photoplay, written by a Chinaman, and produced in San Francisco by an all-Chinese cast, recruited from the Imperial Chinese Players. The only film ever produced in this country by an entire dramatic personae of Celestial actors. An intimate and enthralling study of the manners and customs of the yellow race in the American city chases a ticket, but luck is against him and he wins nothing. Then he decides to try gambling. He visits the rooms of Chin Ting, and plays fan-tan. He wins at first, then begins to lose heavily, and so decides to try pai-gow, or Chinese dominoes.

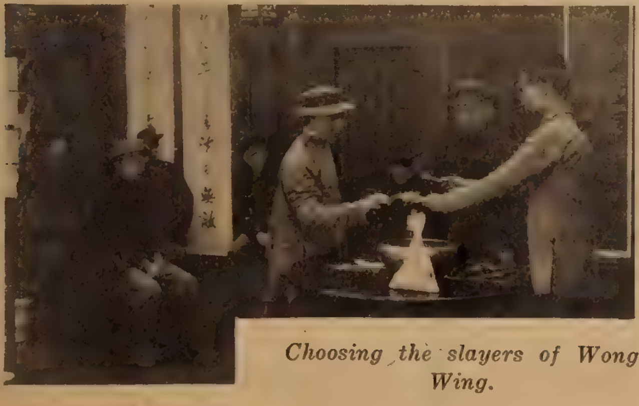
Chin Ting passes the table and sees that Wong is winning. He then instructs the dealer to cheat Wong. The dealer obeys and Wong loses all of his savings, which he has staked on one last throw. He is furious and declares that he has been cheated. He has a fierce quarrel with Chin, who finally has him thrown out.

Chin calls a meeting of his Tong, and tells the tale of the insults of Wong, who belongs to a rival brotherhood. They decide that death must avenge their leader. Two are chosen to put an end to Wong, although Lee Hoy speaks for him. They choose knives with which to do the job. However, Wong has been warned by the members of his own Tong, and the two men are disarmed and one of them killed. The other reports the death to Chin, who calls another meeting. Lot this time falls on Lee Hoy, who is forced to accept the task.



Choosing the slayers of Wong Wing.

He lays his plans carefully, hiding confederates all about the door of Wong's lodging. But Wong's Tong brothers have been beforehand. They are hidden on the roof commanding the entrance to Wong's home. When Lee Hoy steals up to kill the unsuspecting Wong, one of his brothers shoots from the roof of the opposite building and Lee is killed.

His body is carried back to the Tong, and Chin Ting determines to bury it with honors and then to proceed with the wedding. Lee, before going on his mission of death, has locked his wife and daughter in an inner room of his house, for he fears an uprising of the Tongs. So when Wong, after his escape, goes to tell Suey Lee of his safety, he cannot enter. This makes him suspicious, and he is still more disturbed when he sees the rival Tong leader and several of his men, coming to the house. He hides, and sees them vainly try to get in. Then they set about breaking down the door. He goes to the back of the house, and makes his way through a window. He has a revolver, and is just in time to rescue Suey Lee from Chin Ting, who has broken through the front door, and seized her. We are allowed to suppose that the course of true love runs smooth after the rescue.

Wong Wing rescues Suey Lee.

SIXTEEN companies at Universal City are at present engaged in picturing feature productions. Ten other directors are filming comedies, dramas, western and underworld stories in one, two and three reels. Despite the cloudy weather of the last ten days production has not ceased owing to the use of the rainproof stage and electric light studios where pictures can be made in any kind of weather, or any hour of the day or night.

RUTH STONEHOUSE is directing and playing the featured lead at Universal City in her own photoplay, "Tacky Sue," which is being filmed in two acts. This is one of a series of clever little stories being made by the well-known actress.

THE next few weeks are bound to be momentous ones in Universal history. The week of March twelfth, for instance, sees not only the second of the great series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," written and directed by George Bronson Howard, but a novelty in Red Feather releases as well. This will be a double bill Red Feather, consisting of a wonderfullly powerful society drama, starring Cleo Madison, Roberta Wilson and Molly Malone. Three Red Feather stars in one film. The other is a Western comedy-drama with a dozen punches and a real surprise ending. Together "The Girl Who Lost" and "Border Wolves" make one of the strongest bills ever released as a Red Feather. The two are tied together into five reels and are advertised together on the posters. They will make the Padded Feature boosters sit up and take noticc.

Then on March 12 also is the most wonderful of all serials, "The Voice on the Wire," with Ben Wilson. The Universal is certainly doing things these days. Just watch.

Advance Impressions of "The Voice on the Wire"

NOT since the publication of "The Murders of the Rue Morgue" has there been a series of crimes forming a mystery so baffling as that which forms the central theme of the new Universal serial, "The Voice on the Wire." Murderers, both in fact and in fiction, have before now succeeded in committing their crimes without leaving a trace for the authorities of justice to work upon. But in this serial photoplay, which is a screen adaptation by J. Grubb Alexander, of the novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball, a clue is left each time that a victim is sent to his doom, a triple clue, which never varies, but which serves only still further to complicate the impenetrable mystery surrounding the fate of each victim.

In the first place, there is the voice on the wire, from which the serial takes its name, and which is heard before each tragedy, sometimes by the victim himself, sometimes by the investigator, John Shirley, who is trying to solve the problems, sometimes by the dead man's nearest relatives. Before each of the series of murders, a warning comes over the telephone, but when the call is investigated by the telephone company, it always comes from an unidentified source, from a disconnected wire, or from premises which are known to have been destroyed by fire. Sometimes central denies that the number has been called at all.

The second clue is the appearance in the vicinity of the deed of a menacing shrouded figure, never clearly seen, but always lurking, a shadow among shadows, near the scene of the crime. In each episode we think that we have identified the figure, only to find that our identification is a mistake. When the first episodes were run, one after the other, in the Universal projection room, every member of the company had a different explanation to offer of this mysterious figure, and every one of the explanations proved to be wrong.

But the greatest novelty of all, is the manner in which the murder is committed. The third clue in each case is the mark of a human thumb over the heart of the victim, sometimes on the bare flesh, sometimes ground deeply into the clothing. John Shirley, the criminologist (played by Ben Wilson), and his advisor, Doctor Renolds (played by Joseph Girard), identify this as the Japanese death punch, the "Sen Si Yao," a development of jiu-jitsu(or Japanese wrestling, in its very highest form, a pressure strong enough to stop the action of the heart, applied by the thumb upon the exact spot in which it will be effective. Not every student of jiu-jitsu learns the "Sen Si Yao," for not every student gains the exact knowledge of anatomy necessary to find and identify the small area in which the pressure of the thumb will be fatal. Great experience is necessary in order to find the right spot unerringly, for a fraction of an inch to the right or to the left, too high or too low, will render the pressure ineffective, and the attack must be without warning in order to give the victim no chance to shift his position and avoid the contact at the fatal point. A moment's pressure induces temporary suspension of the action of the heart, but if it is continued for the requisite number of seconds, the heart action is paralyzed, and death results—a death which, to all but the initiated, leaves no trace of the manner in which it was inflicted.

In this unique manner, and surrounded by the baffling circumstances of the disconnected wire and the muffled figure, and traced each time to the operation of the "Sen Si Yao," three men have already met their death, each time in the company of the same chorus girl (played by Neva Gerber), before Captain Cronin, head of the detective bureau (played by Howard Crampton) decides that he requires the assistance of some one with more scientific knowledge, and more imagination than the ordinary official of the machinery of justice possesses. John Shirley, a student of criminology, is asked to investigate the mystery, and he enlists the cooperation of his friend, the scientist Doctor Renolds. All their knowledge, their science, and their precautions are in vain, however. The mocking voice warns Shirley each time, gives the name of the victim and the hour of the crime, and Shirley, though he takes extraordinary pains to protect the threatened man, is circumvented in every case by the evil force which seems supernatural in its powers.

EPISODE No. 9 of the big serial "The Purple Mask," is called "A Strange Discovery." The last chapter brought the Queen of the Apaches and the detective, Phil Kelly, to America on the same boat. In this, Pat is found, surrounded by a devoted band of shrouded men who do her bidding, engaged in the same sort of Robin Hood tactics, with which she was occupied on the other side of the ocean.

While crossing the Atlantic, Pat had sent by wireless an order for the American Apaches to meet at her house on the morning Kelly had called to redeem the stolen pearls. Her mysterious disappearance from the drawing-room where Kelly had expected to find her, was accounted for by her attendance upon the Apache meeting in a room, reached from the drawing-room by a secret passage.

Pat informed the members of her gang that she had been retained by Robert Jackson, wealthy manufacturer of high speed motors, to ferret out a plot against his commercial welfare that seemed to exist among his employees. She delegated six of her men to find employment at the factory, and, having disguised herself as a man, Pat also became one of the workmen. Numerous exciting incidents resulted.

Mary MacLean, niece of Robert Jackson, is heiress to his fortune and Wallace Drew is trying to gain her good graces with her prospective wealth in mind. Pat becomes suspicious of Jack Elliott, superintendent of the factory, and advises Jackson to disappear, leaving the impression he has sailed for Europe.

Subsequently a cable is received that Jackson has died in London. Through previous arrangement the reading of the will is accomplished, and when Jack Elliott finds that the entire Jackson estate and fortune has been left to Mary MacLean, he becomes resentful. In the hope of finding some way to break the will or cast doubt upon Jackson's death, Elliott engages Detective Kelly. Finally it is established that Jackson did not die, and with the possibility of Miss MacLean being kept out of her fortune for an indefinite number of years, Drew joins forces with Elliott and becomes antagonistic to the Jackson interest.

Miss MacLean has entered a car, equipped with Jackson motors, in the Speedway Race for the Golden Cup. Drew and Elliott determine to put the car out of commission, hoping thus to deny the Jackson motors the advertising they would secure in the event of Miss MacLean's car winning. Pat discovers evidence of their conspiracy and determines to thwart them.

Convinced that she must first dispose of Kelly, the girl decoys him to her home and when he enters the house to investigate, traps him in an iron-walled compartment in the cellar, which has been built for the purposes the Apaches might have for it, and

"The Great Torpedo Secret"

HERBERT RAWLINSON in a three-reel Gold Seal Comedy - Drama, written by E. B. Lewis and produced by Stuart Paton. The tale of a young munitions manufacturer and two Women's Peace Societies.

CAST.

Billy Olmstead	Herbert Rawlinson
Henry Olmstead	Howard Crampton
Marion	Neva Gerber
Jap Valet	Frank Tokanaga
Mrs. Jas. Rutherford	Mrs. Crampton
Mrs. Warren	Frances Mayon
Marion's Aunt	Adele Woods

JUST the sort of a comedy-drama which suits Herbert Rawlinson has been made for him by E. B. Lewis, and produced by Stuart Paton, who was the director of the famous Special Feature "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which is now packing them in at the Broadway Theatre, New York. Rawlinson has the role of a young man-about-town, who is driven into the business of manufacturing munitions, when his uncle is hounded into a pretended suicide, by the persistency of two rival Women's Peace Societies. The ladies then proceed to make things warm for the young head of the plant, but, with the assistance of his Japanese valet, he manages to circumvent them. Pretty Neva Gerber, who is supporting Ben Wilson in the new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," also under the direction of Stuart Paton, is Rawlinson's leading lady in this excellent and amusing three-reeler. Here is the story:

Billy Olmstead hears that his uncle has been blown up with a bomb. His Jap valet tells him that Mrs. James Rutherford, president of the Society for Universal Peace, and Mrs. Rebecca Warren, president of the Anti-War League, insist upon seeing him. The two women and their respective followers are in the parlor, glaring at one another. Billy refuses to meet them, and when they presume to enter his room he hides in the curtains of the shower-bath and threatens to come out if they do not leave the room. In desperation, he climbs out of a window and hastens from the house.

Henry Olmstead, his uncle, is the head of the great War Munitions Plant. He had disinherited Billy a year before on account of his frivolous life. The peace societies are trying to make Olmstead's factories stop manufacturing munitions.

Billy is accosted by two men who take him to a house, where he is surprised to meet his uncle. He tells his nephew that he couldn't stand the women any longer, so pretended to die. He tells Billy that if he will control the plant for six months, he will give him a large sum of money so that he and Marion Winters may be married. Billy consents.

Marion's aunt, thinking Billy the sole heir of his wealthy uncle, phones to offer her condolences and hurries to the house with Marion.

Billy starts to manage the plant, but understands absolutely nothing about it. When a faker appears with a wonderful new explosive, Billy pays him fifty thousand dollars for his invention. He also buys another invention from an old man and pays him a hundred thousand dollars for his blue-print. The men of the plant are horrified and his uncle comes to the conclusion that his nephew is a fool and that he must get him away from the plant before it has ruined him completely. He decides to ask Marion's assistance. They plan that she shall pretend to be kidnapped.

Meanwhile the peace ladies have discovered that the new invention has been bought by Billy Olmstead and they order two men to steal the plans. But Billy, thinking the invention useless, makes them a present of it. Soon afterward he learns that the government is willing to pay one million dollars for the invention.

Marion's aunt, becoming terribly upset over her niece's non-appearance, phones Billy. He hastens to his uncle's house and forces his way into the room in which the girl is hiding. Henry Olmstead explains the situation. Marion immediately informs her aunt where she is, and the latter tells the girl that Mrs. Warren and Mrs. Rutherford have been phoning to have her come to their celebration.

The Anti-War League and the Society for Universal Peace are celebrating together, because of gaining the possession of the invention of the "Magnetic Governor." Only Marion's presence is lacking, so that they can gloat over their prize before her eyes "to take her down a peg or two." When the girl arrives, they are stunned to see her deliberately hand the blue-print to Billy Olmstead, who with his uncle has been standing in the doorway unnoticed by the women. They all rush at him, but Henry Olmstead stops them, saying, "I am Henry Olmstead . . . but not at your service." As the two men and Marion leave the house, the women slump weakly into their chairs.

BEING THE ADVENTURES OF YORKE NORROY
DIPLOMATIC AGENT

GEORGE BRONSON HOWARD

KINGSLEY BENEDICT

By MARJORIE HOWARD

THERE seem to be a few abnormal people among the motion picture public, who declare that they don't care for serials. Possibly the mental effort necessary to remember the identity of the leading players from one week to another, is too great for them; possibly the suspense which every Universal serial works up from one episode to the next is too much of a strain on their overtaxed nerves. But the Universal, with its usual resourcefulness, has discovered a way to include even this limited class of patrons, and at the same time to please the rest of the people with the continued story, or the adventures of a screen character, which they so much enjoy.

On March 9th the first of a series of two-reel pictures, written by no less a personage than George Bronson Howard, the famous son of a famous father, and directed by him in person at Universal City, will be released. The series will bear the promising and inspiring general title of "The Perils of the Secret Service," and each story will be a separate adventure, with a plot complete in itself, and a change of cast, with the exception of two characters. The first one is entitled "The Last Cigarette," and besides serving to introduce the leading character, Yorke Norroy, the diplomatic agent whose exciting professional experiences make up the series, it will be found to be an enthralling story in itself, with a surprise finish which is really something new in pictures.

Several years ago, when George Bronson Howard was younger than he is now, he wrote the stories called "Yorke Norroy, Diplomatic Agent," in hopes that the money he received for them might help to boil a pot, which at that particular time showed no inclination of boiling by itself. The stories were published in a popular magazine, and were an immense and immediate success. They were brought out in book form, have been through many editions, and are still in demand. These are the stories which Howard sold to the Universal Film Company for use on the screen. There was at first no intention of his being his own producer for the tales. He had never directed a motion picture film, and the series was too important to be entrusted to an amateur. Howard, however, in the meantime had visited Universal City, and became fascinated by what he saw there. The desire to produce pictures became an obsession with him. He asked the favor of being allowed to direct the first story in the series as an experiment, and went to work with the greatest enthusiasm. When the two reels were completed and shown to the authorities, there was no question of chosing a director for the rest of them. Not a trace of the amateur was to be seen in his work, and there were touches in the production which raised it right out of the ordinary run of pictures, while the main theme was developed in logical progression.

Of course, George Bronson Howard knows the theatre as few authors know it. He has written several successful plays, and collaborated in a score of productions. His work for the theatre covers every variety of performance, from a Winter Garden Show ("The Passing Show of 1911," of which he was the author) to such plays as "The Red Light of Mars," philosophical studies, sparkling with wit, and full of subtle ridicule of modern conditions. But besides the playwriting end, he is familiar with the labor of active production as well, and all of this experience enables him, with no previous picture training, to direct his own stories in the most satisfactory fashion.

George Bronson Howard, Jr.

There are only two characters which run through the series. The most important of these is the name part, Yorke Norroy, whose spicy and unusual adventures, while in the secret employ of the United States Government as a very special sort of diplomat, form the different episodes of the series. The other character is his "left hand," his confidant and assistant, Huntley Carson, who accompanies him to the out-of-the-way corners of the globe to which his secret missions take him. The leading role, which is a creation as distinct and individual as that of Sherlock Holmes himself, is in the hands of Kingsley Benedict, the young Universal actor, who will be remembered for many well-studied performances on the screen. A late success of his was the role of the heroic bugler, in the Bluebird photoplay "The Bugler of Algiers," for which he was loaned to the Bluebird organization, and in which his work received enthusiastic praise. A late program release was a very clever Imp drama, called "Black Evidence, in which he was featured.

Benedict is particularly well fitted to play the role of the diplomatic agent who is conversant with the affairs of two continents, for he is a cosmopolitan himself. He was born in this country—in Buffalo to be exact—a little over thirty years ago, and he has traveled extensively, making himself at home in all countries. He had no less than seventeen years experience on the legitimate stage before he joined the Universal Film Company, his first and only engagement in pictures. He has played under the banner of some of the best-known producers of the country, including Charles Frohman, Klaw and Erlanger, etc. An interesting phase of the character of Yorke Norroy, is the author's insistence that his hero had the appearance of being merely a man of the world, a social favorite, with a soul which did not aspire above the ambition to be the best-dressed man in his set, and a delightful entertainer of pretty women. This exterior concealed the man himself, the keen intelligence and wonderful resourcefulness, the knowledge of men and women, and the proven courage, which made Yorke Norroy the trusted agent of his government in all cases demanding unusual cleverness and inviolable secrecy. This picture which Bronson Howard has drawn of his hero, might almost be a description of Benedict himself. Of about medium height, slightly built, with gray eyes, light brown hair, always beautifully dressed, and wearing his clothes with an air of distinction, Benedict gives in his appearance no indication of being an expert horseman, a wonderful swordsman, and an all-around athlete. He is fully competent to depict the traveled adventurer, conversant with the manners and customs of various European capitals, for he knows them all by personal experience. Yorke Norroy is particular in his dress and personal appearance almost to the point of foppishness. Kingsley Benedict is noted for the adoption of original, not to say daring sartorial ideas. He was the first man on the West Coast to adopt the Continental fashion of wearing a cape with evening dress, for example. In the second adventure of the series, called "The Clash of Steel," he has an opportunity to display his prowess as a fencer, an accomplishment which is rare enough in these days.

DELIGHTFUL Bluebird Photoplay, written by Ben Cohn, and produced by William Worthington, with Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon in the leads, in which every one plots against every one else.

IN this delightful Bluebird photoplay, which was written by Ben Cohn and produced by William Worthington, every one plots against every one else, some with good motives, some with bad. It is a comedy of cross-purposes, and imposters, which comes in the end to a most satisfactory conclusion, with the heroine in the arms of the hero, even though he wears handcuffs on his wrists. It is full of those charming touches of humor which mark a Worthington comedy, and affords Farnum and Miss Vernon just the sort of roles which suit them best. Here is the complicated plot.

Monty Gray has just arrived from China, where he has spent ten years of his life building railroads and where he has learned to abhor the very look of a Chinaman. Entering an hotel, he meets Wilbur Mason, a former college chum, but is grieved to learn that Wilbur is leaving town that day. While chatting, Monty instantly falls victim to the beauty of a girl's face, which is framed in a picture on the dresser. Wilbur tells him it is his cousin, Constance Lanning, and warns his friend that there is not a ghost of a chance for him, as her mother has the "Title Bug" and scorns any ordinary American. But upon Monty's entreaty to help him, Wilbur writes a letter of introduction to the Lannings. Monty surreptitiously steals the picture of the girl, which he hides inside his coat.

After a sleepless night of scheming, Monty finally decides to masquerade as an English lord, taking the name of Lord Winston Radleigh, which he had seen mentioned in a newspaper. He hires James, an English valet, who coaches him in the art of wearing the monocle and in aristocratic manners. He inserts Lord Winston Radleigh in place of his own name in the letter of introduction and sets out on his quest.

At the Lannings, Constance is perched in a tree and is daring the men to come up and put on her slippers, declaring that a kiss shall be the reward to the brave knight who comes to her aid. She is slipperless, for she has thrown one of them at the Duke of Cannister, her mother's pet suitor, and the other at her father, who has been peacefully sleeping nearby. The men stand like stones before the threatening look of her mother, while her father can scarcely suppress his great amusement.

Hearing her words, Monty, without a moment's hesitation, promptly climbs the tree, replaces the slippers, and claims his reward, while the girl, smitten with love at first sight, willingly submits to his embrace and ardently returns his kiss. But, seeing the monocle which dangles from Monty's coat, she is disgusted to find that he is also a foreigner, and runs away before he can catch her.

Mrs. Lanning becomes radiantly pleasant when she reads the letter introducing Lord Winston Radleigh. She insists that Monty join the house party.

That evening the Duke of Cannister proposes to Constance, but gains only ridicule for his pains. Becoming furious, he taunts her with being in love with Lord Radleigh. Monty then appears and proposes to her. She tells him she will give him his answer in the morning.

Very early Monty is called out of bed by a message, and soon is on his way to the H. O. Ranch, some distance from the house, for he has received a note written by Constance saying that she is held prisoner and begging him, if he really loves her, to hasten to her rescue.

In the meantime, the Duke of Cannister has received a mysterious message which causes him to leave for town very suddenly. The same morning, all the guests discover that they have been robbed during the night, and because of Monty's disappearance, suspicion naturally falls on him. The picture of Constance is found in his suitcase and is supposed to have been stolen; the auto has been taken from the garage, for his escape; the message received by Monty is suspected to have come from an accomplice, and when the detectives arrive they inform the Lannings that Lord Radleigh is in reality one of the cleverest crooks in the business, who has taken a titled name in order to gain admittance to wealthy homes.

When Wilbur unexpectedly arrives, he is confronted with the letter and immediately denies knowing anything of such a person as Lord Winston Radleigh. He becomes greatly alarmed, for he thinks that Monty has probably been murdered by the villain. Hearing that Monty had started toward the H. O. Ranch, they rush madly in the direction. They have discovered that Constance has also disappeared and believe she has been kidnapped.

Meanwhile, Monty is met at the ranch by several cowboys, with whom he fights, for he sees Constance seated in a chair with a revolver pointed at her head. Finally, after struggling

Ruth Denounces Capital Punishment

STAR of Bluebird Photoplay, "The Saintly Sinner," converted by sensations in playing convicted heroine.

The scene which preceeds the killing of "White" by "Jane Lee" in "The Saintly Sinners."

AFTER playing "'Jane Lee,'" says Ruth Stonehouse, little star of the Bluebird photoplay, "The Saintly Sinner," "I have become a greater opponent than ever of the legalized murder which we call by the dignified name of capital punishment.

"Consider the case of the girl in this play. She is forced into crime by circumstances which are stronger than she is. Her final killing of White, if we consider the motive of her act, can hardly be called a crime. Yet, under the law, she is guilty of murder and must pay with her life, unless pardoned by the Governor. What earthly good would it do society for her to give her life for that of a villain like White?

"When I recall my sensations in playing the scene in which I am strapped to the electric chair, though I knew all the time that I was perfectly safe in the studio, and that the whole thing was arranged for the camera, it makes me want to go out and do something to prevent any of my fellow-beings from suffering so barbarously in earnest, no matter what he may have done. And think of the responsibility of denying time for repentance to any poor soul. If you hear of the Ruth Stonehouse movement for the Abolition of Capital Punishment, do not be surprised. It will be due to my playing of Jane Lee in 'The Saintly Sinner.'"

Thirteen is Dorothy Davenport's Luckiest Number

DOROTHY DAVENPORT will return to Red Feather pictures as the star of the next release, which is called "The Girl and the Crisis." This picture was written by William V. Mong, who has done so many good things for the program, and produced by him with a fine cast of Universal players.

Dorothy Davenport, as all the world knows, is Mrs. Wallace Reid in private life, and she is one of the small number of persons who consider the figure thirteen the most maligned numeral in the world. She declares that she can prove that the influence of this number is beneficent, not malignant.

"In the first place," she says, "I was born on March 13, and you are not going to make me pretend that I consider myself unlucky! I married Wallace Reid on October 13, 1913, and that was not unfortunate, either. We celebrated our anniversary with a dinner this year, for which we invited eleven guests, so that there should be just thirteen at table. Some one counted, as some one always does, but we begged them not to be alarmed. It was a very nice party, if we did have it on Friday, the thirteenth, and it came to an end at one o'clock which is thirteen in many countries.

"Now you're Governor," said Poole. "Do your duty."

Universal Discovers Psychoscenario Writer

Edgar Cayce Sends Spirit Five Reel Scenario for Violet Mersereau to her order at Churchill's Restaurant

By PETER PEPPER

WE'VE heard a lot about messages being conveyed by spirits from the other world to hypnotists, psychoists, psycho-analysists and all the other ists, but all of them were outdone, outclassed and outwitted the other evening when the Universal Film Manufacturing Company introduced to the world the first and only psychoscenarioist. His name is Edgar Cayce and he sent a psychoscenario, four hundred and fifty words long, from Selma, Alabama, twelve hundred and eighty miles away, to Room No. 1 in Churchill's, where Violet Mersereau, that dainty little Bluebird star, was sitting nervous and fidgety, surrounded by thirty newspaper men and trade journal representatives, awaiting the plot.

Violet Mersereau.

If the Universal accepts this scenario, it will be the first written by a pschoscenariowriter, for, never since the beginning of filmdom has a penner of plots attempted to do what Mr. Cayce did last Thursday evening.

It all started something like this: On December 13 last, President Carl Laemmle received a mysterious letter from one Edwin Williamson, who in addition to acting as freight agent for the Southern Railway at Selma, fills in his spare hours by acting as spiritual advisor, or spiritual business manager of Mr. Cayce. Just imagine what could be done if he could persuade his employer to apply the mental stuff to the transportation of all freight for the Southern Railway! Or, for example, imagine what the British government would give to employ Cayce to go into these hypnotic sleeps and direct the course of their ships and German submarines!

In this letter, Williamson said that he had a personal friend who was possessed of "an unusual gift, power, or whatever it might be called." This friend was in the habit of going into an hypnotic sleep, from self-suggestion or otherwise, and then he conversed with the party whom he went to sleep to. Mr. Williamson stated that he had diagnosed many diseases that have baffled physicians and had located lost articles, and performed many other wonderful feats.

"If you are interested, and will write me, naming a date and the hour, allowing for the difference in time, which is one hour, stating the name of the party whom you have in mind to take the lead in a photoplay, and tell me the street and house number where the party will be, I think I can surprise you."

Mr. Laemmle was so much impressed with the possibilities that he turned over the correspondence to the publicity department and instructed that the fellow be given an opportunity of showing what he could do.

Accordingly, it was decided to hold the test at Churchill's and that Violet Mersereau, with a staff of newspaper men and trade journalists be on hand to await the results.

The ceremonies were in charge of Nat Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal, who explained to the gathering what it was all about, aided by speeches on psychology, etc., by Paul Gulick, Eustace Hale Ball, who is the author of the Universal's forthcoming serial, "The Voice on the Wire," and Dr. William E. Young, who is an authority on the subject of hypnotism, mental telepathy, self-suggestion and psycho-analysis.

A table was placed in the centre of the room and on it was laid a piece of paper, describing the sort of play Violet Mersereau would like for her next vehicle. This was at exactly 8:30 and the paper remained there for fitfy minutes—the time required for the test. And all the time it was there Edgar Cayce was suggesting himself to sleep down there in tropical Selma.

During the interval the spirits were greatly aiding the committee, so that by the time the scenario arrived, they were in an excellent frame of mind to receive the results of the test. Peter Milne, of the Motion Picture News; Benny Grimm, Moving Picture World; Frederick Schrader, Variety; Arthur Ungar, New York Clipper; John Reddy, New York Telegraph; Ben Davis, New York Tribune, amused themselves while waiting for the psychoscenario by singing a symphony, written by Joe Burrowes, on the spur of the moment, to Violet Mersereau, and which ran something like this:

Dear Violet Mersereau,
You've won our hearts, you know—
Star of the Universal,
A picture queen without rehearsal;
With your very charming face,
Your wondrous smile and grace,
You've won a nation's hearts
With your many leading parts,
Dear Violet Mersereau,
You're getting all the "dough."

At 2:35 Friday morning the psychoscenario arrived. It proved to be just the sort of a play that Violet asked for, previous to the beginning of the test. Mr. Cayce calls it "Through the Subliminal," and it is a five-reeler. Miss Mersereau has turned it over to John Brownell, the Bluebird scenario editor at Fort Lee Studio, with the recommendation that it be prepared for her so that she can start on it as her next picture.

THE mistake of a young wife, who, under the delusion that her husband has ceased to love her, almost falls into the hands of a leader of a gang of thieves, is the theme of this Imp two-reel drama, written by Harry B. Hagenah and produced by John McDermott. The name of Mae Bush is new to the Universal program, but will be found to belong to a very pretty young actress, who sustains the part of the wife, while she is supported by three of the Universal actors whose work is already well known. An unusually good plot is developed as follows:

Fanchette, Mrs. Rayburg, whose husband is district attorney and a very busy man, cannot understand his seeming neglect and accepts the attentions of Mr. Rhodes.

The city has been overrun by a band of clever crooks and Mr. Byron, head of the detective bureau, and Mr. Rayburg have many conferences on the subject. Byron reports that his men are closing in upon the gang leaders and hope to apprehend them within a short time.

Mrs. Rayburg is angry because her husband will not take her to tea when she asks him, and in a fit of pique tells Rhodes that she will elope with him, promising to meet him at the apartment house where he lives. On this very night, Rayburg invites Byron and some friends home for dinner.

Mrs. Rayburg goes to meet Rhodes, who presents her with a wonderful necklace which has just been given to him by one of the crooks whom he employs. Byron and his men are on the trail and finally come to the house a short time after Mrs. Rayburg has entered. The crook hides behind the curtain. Byron arrests Mrs. Rayburg and Rhodes, and phones for the patrol. He informs Rayburg, who has not missed his wife, that he has caught the leader. The crook pounces upon Byron, and in the fight Mrs. Rayburg escapes and returns home.

The police take the two men into custody, and then Byron goes on to keep his dinner engagement. To their mutual surprise Byron and Mrs. Rayburg meet each other, the woman frantically signaling to the detective for silence. When Byron takes her into dinner she begs him not to disclose her secret as she has now learned her lesson.

NEVER AN EVE—IN PUBLIC.

"VIOLET MERSEREAU — fifteen years ago," announced Director Edwin Stevens at the Bluebird Studio in Fort Lee the other afternoon, proudly pointing to a little red and white bundle which emitted the most unearthly screams and which resembled nothing quite so much as a little savage in its birthday frock.

"I positively, absolutely, unconditionally refuse to be so labeled," exclaimed wrathfully the usually serene Violet, deserting her "conservatory," consisting of a single geranium which she takes from her old home to her new in the five-reel Bluebird feature play "Susan's Gentlemen," the early scenes of which were being made in the Fort Lee Studio.

"But Vi," patiently began Director Stevens, "you were that in the photoplay—fifteen years ago. You were left by your mother, found by some one else——"

"But you said me, not Susie, of the photoplay," objected Miss Mersereau, staunchly standing her ground in her rags of the urchin.

"Well, in real life fifteen years ago —you were——" began timidly Director Stevens.

"Always a perfect lady," said Vi, "and never an Eve in public."

Violet's next Bluebird is called "The Boy Girl," and will be released on March 5th.

Washington Society to See "Eagle's Wings"

Mrs. Wm. Cumming Story.

MRS. WM. CUMMING STORY, of New York City, President-General of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the most distinguished and the largest organization of patriotic women in the world, has issued invitations as head of the national society, to President Wilson, his cabinet and members of Congress, to view the timely Bluebird constructive patriotism feature "The Eagle's Wings," which will be shown under the auspices of the D. A. R. in their million dollar marble temple in Washington, D. C., on the night of February 21. About 1500 members of Washington society have accepted invitations.

In New York City the chapters of the D. A. R. co-operating with the Empire State Society, Sons of the American Revolution, are arranging for an early showing at the Biltmore to raise funds for patriotic work in the present crisis.

The value of "The Eagle's Wings" as a concrete expression of what industrial mobilization means to this country in time of war has been recognized by Mrs. Story. In a special message directed to the 95,000 members of the 1,500 chapters in the United States, the President-General said:

"My Dear Fellow-Members:

"We must at once give to our country such service as we can render, and to best serve, we must organize and unite our forces.

"Shortly I will send you a plan of registration and service that I believe will lead to efficiency, in the individual, and great concerted power to carry on the work of preparedness. You may wish to raise funds for the many forms of work in which you will, I am sure, wish to participate.

"The photoplay, 'The Eagle's Wings,' which is described in the enclosed, will show how great the power of industrial preparedness is, and patriotically and educationally it has great value. It will also serve as a means whereby funds may be raised for your great work. I have requested Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., to draw up their plans for production which will meet the conditions of every locality.

"(Signed) DAISY ALLEN STORY,
"President-General N. S. D. A. R."

By this message "The Eagle's Wings" gains the support of 95,000 loyal women of America who are to co-operate with the exhibitors in 1,500 separate communities of the country. Educators, churchmen, society leads as well as those persons taking a less prominent part in public affairs are enlisted in seeing that every man, woman and child who reveres Old Glory has an opportunity to view "The Eagle's Wings" and learn the lesson of constructive patriotism.

Get This Sheet From Animated Weekly

EVERY week for the past year the Animted Weekly has been sending out with its weekly news reel a very attractive advertising sheet with six or more cuts on it, to give people an idea of the scenes which are contained in the current Weekly. The accompanying illustration is a great reduction of this sheet, but gives the proportion and subject matter wonderfully well. The size is that of a regular one-sheet, and the particular advantage of the service is that it costs exhibitors nothing. It may be obtained by any exhibitor by dropping a line to his nearest exchange, or to the Universal Animated Weekly at 1600 Broadway. If you are not getting one of these sheets don't wait. Kathleen Hatfield is Miss Preparedness

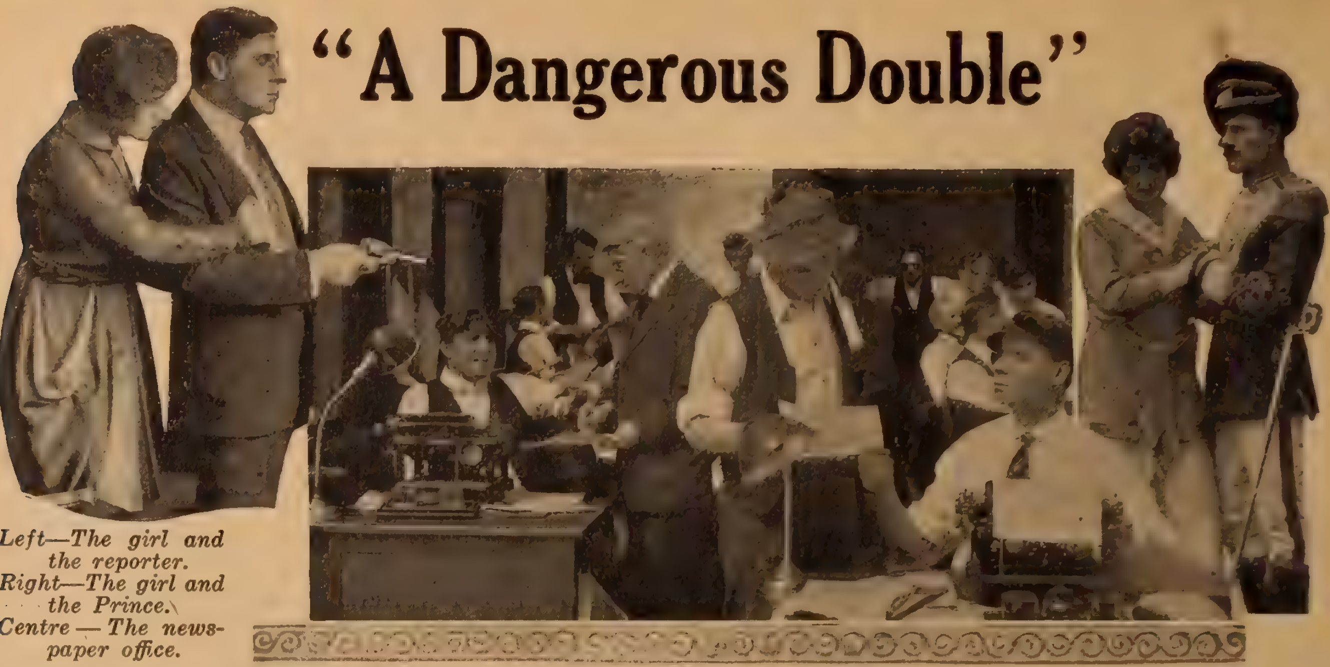
OF 200 pretty entries, Miss Kathleen Hatfield, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Hatfield, of Astoria, L. I., was Friday night declared to be the very prettiest and was appropriately named "Miss Preparedness" in a gaily decorated box at the Broadway Theatre, where the spotlight, for a brief time, danced upon her, and where J. J. Lodge, managing "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," submarining successfully into its eighth week there, introduced her to the large and enthusiastic audience. A half hour later she led the grand "preparedness" march at Madison Square Garden, which wound up the Hardware Men's Convention.

Dainty, blond and graceful, Miss Hatfield makes an ideal "Miss Preparedness." She will be starred in Universal patriotic and industrial releases, under the auspices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the Patriotic Publicity Committee. Especial scenarios are being prepared for the young woman's use. She will soon begin work in the Leonia Studio at Fort Lee.

Miss Doris Payne, of Bridgeport, Conn., proved "the second" prettiest maiden, and shared honors with "Miss Preparedness."

"A Dangerous Double"



Left—The girl and the reporter. Right—The girl and the Prince. Centre—The newspaper office.

THE remarkable resemblance between two men in opposite walks of life, and the complications which ensue when the one, a Prince of a small European principality, is mistaken for the other, a clever young newspaper man, is the central theme of this interesting Imp drama. The story was written by Harry Dittmar and the production was made by Robert F. Hill, with Sidney Bracey and Sydell Dowling in the leads. Both men play important roles in the life of a young girl, Marjorie Norwood, who has been educated in this country, but is in reality the daughter of a Balkan king. The story, with this promising cast of characters is carried out in an exciting series of incidents, as follows:

In the reportorial rooms of a busy metropolitan daily, Stuart Warren, a cub reporter, reads in a newspaper that Marjorie Norwood, one of the popular graduates of Vassar, is reported to be betrothed to Prince Eric of Maurania. On examining the map, he ascertains that Maurania is a small European principality, and rushes out of the office in the hope of securing a good story.

Warren finds Marjorie is closely guarded, but gains admission. Owing to a striking resemblance, Marjorie takes him for her fiance, but asks him why he is masquerading without his mustache.

Unaware that she takes him for the Prince, Warren requests an interview. Thereupon, Marjorie denounces him as an impostor, and he is ignominously ejected.

Several foreign-looking individuals pounce upon Warren and force him into an auto, which speeds to a mansion on the outskirts of the city. There he is ushered into the presence of an assemblage. Their leader addresses Warren as "Your Highness," and tells him that they regret being compelled to take forcible measures.

They then request Warren to sign a letter which reads: "My Queen, I am ill. It is important that you come to me. Accompany the bearer." Warren refuses, and makes his escape. The conspirators engage a lady of vampire proclivities, to embroil the Prince.

Meanwhile, Warren makes another attempt to reach Marjorie, and, finding the door of her apartment unguarded, he persuades her to give him an interview. She tells him that the dying king of Maurania is surrounded by conspirators, who only await his death to declare a republic. The aged monarch could only trust a Prince named Eric, and despatched him to America to marry her and then return to ascend the throne. Ever since they have been persecuted. Marjorie doesn't tell him, however, that she herself is the King's daughter.

At the conspirators' headquarters, we see the Prince very much befuddled by wine. The conspirators succeed in inducing him to sign the decoy letter. Marjorie receives the letter, and goes at once to join Eric. The conspirators, however, fail to force her to abdicate her rights to the throne of Maurania. Warren, fearing for her safety, rushes in an automobile to her assistance.

The conspirators prevail on the Prince to feign death, in order to assist them in carrying out their plans. They carry his supposed corpse into the room where they are holding Marjorie a captive, and tell her that further opposition on her part will lead to a similar fate. Marjorie is about to sign her abdication when Warren breaks into the room, and holds up the conspirators. Warren is compelled to shoot a guard in self-defense. The chauffeur outside hears the shot, and rushes off for police assistance. The police arrive, and after a vigorous fight, the conspirators are clubbed into submission, while Marjorie and Warren make their escape in the automobile. Later we see Warren on board a steamer bidding a sentimental farewell to Marjorie.

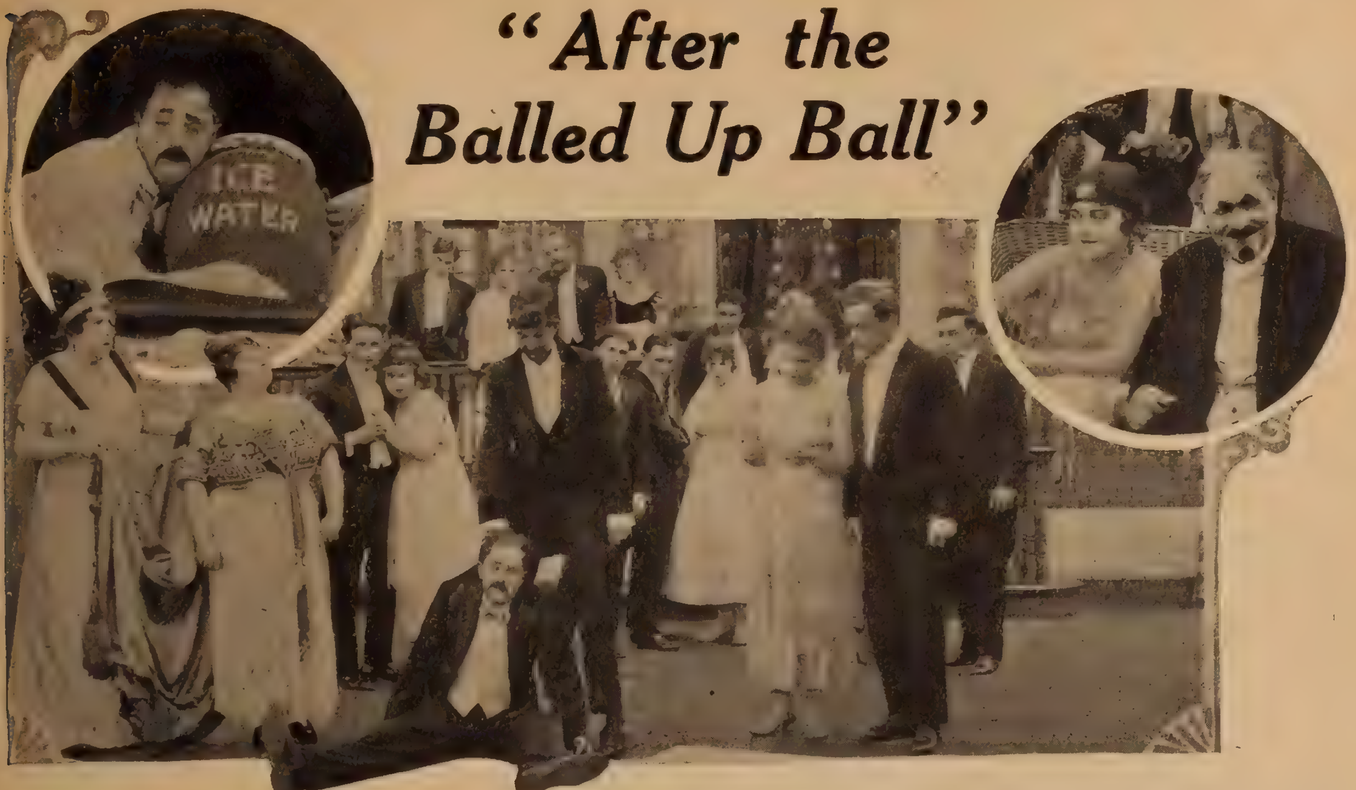
"After the Balled Up Ball"



PHIL DUNHAM in a typical L-Ko foolishness, supported by lovely Lucille Hutton, in a pair of hand-painted stockings which will cause a gasp in the most blase audience, and Merta Sterling, one of the "greatest" actresses on the screen, make an L-Ko release which is bound to be a laugh-getter even in war-time. Here is something like the story:

L—KO KOMEDY in Two Reels, featuring Phil Dunham with Lucille Hutton and Merta Sterling, in a typical fantasy of foolishness.

CAST.

The Ball Guest	Phil Dunham
The Lovely Lady	Lucille Hutton
The Fat Lady	Merta Sterling
Lucille's Husband	Charles Inslee

Lucille persuades her husband that she must go to Mrs. Highlife's ball, even though he does not want to go. She says that she can easily go with the people who live across the hall, and at last he consents. Phil decides to go, too. He gets into his antiquated dress-suit, and takes a flask in his tail pocket to refresh himself from time to time.

The fat lady dresses up in her very best gown and goes to the ball, too. Phil gets thirsty from dancing, and finding the punch-bowl, he adds something from his flask to give it a little more flavor. Then he drinks it to the last dregs.

The fat lady is crossing the hall. Phil bumps into her, falls and lands on her train. He rides around on it, and it is finally torn off. All the guests are very much shocked, and the hostess brings the fat lady her cloak. She is much offended, and goes home. Lucille's husband relents after she has gone, and turns up at the ball. He is jealous of the attentions which his wife receives. As Mrs. Fat Lady is on her way home, a policeman tries to arrest her for not being properly dressed, and so she discovers that half of her gown is missing.

BIG U DRAMA in Two Reels. The story of two men and one woman and a deed of heroism, for which the wrong man gets credit.

CAST.

John King	Wallace Reid
Ethel Warren	Pauline Bush
Anson Pryce	John Burns

A CIVIL WAR story built upon the theme of two men and one woman, and her choice of the wrong man, is released as a Big U drama under the title of "The Man Who Saved the Day." King's deed threatens to bring glory and the girl to the wrong man, but justice triumphs in the end.

Ethel Warren is the prettiest girl in the town and there are many suitors for her hand. She cannot decide between two of them, Anson Pryce, a lawyer, and John King, a journalist. She seems to care for both of them.

John has had an accident and lost the use of an arm. War is declared, and both men hasten to volunteer. Anson is accepted at once, but John is rejected on account of his arm. Anson is lauded as a hero by the neighbors, and Ethel is impressed by his prowess in volunteering. She does not know that John has been rejected for physical reasons, and thinks that he has failed to offer his services to his country. Anson is called at once, and has no time to visit Ethel. He writes her a letter in which he says good-by and mentions the fact that John will not be with him in the regi-

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

EVERY one has at some time in his life, risked his all to obtain the coveted prize. A stunt that takes advantage of this fact, and that can be put over very cheaply may be used profitably to bring in BIG business on 'THE MAN WHO TOOK A CHANCE."

In conjunction with your local newspaper arrange to hold a contest—giving three prizes for the three best stories describing the most thrilling incidents in the lives of the contestants. Go to your local newspaper manager and tell him that you will donate the prizes and give his newspaper publicity on your screen if he will co-operate with you in holding the contest. The stories he receives as the result of the contest will give the editor new sidelights on a large number of people in town and he will be glad to work hand in hand with you. Announce the contest by means of the following circular and have the newspaper run similar copy:

WITH THE EXHIBITORS

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

WINNIPEG, Man.—The motion Picture Exhibitors of the city of Winnipeg held a meeting recently in the offices of the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, in regard to forming an exhibitor's association.

The following officers were elected: Mr. Hyde, Manager of the Crescent Theatre, President; Mr. Kershaw, Manager of Wonderland Theatre, Vice-President; Mr. Jones, Manager of Columbia Theatre, Treasurer; Mr. Wilson, Manager of Lyceum Theatre, Secretary.

It has been decided that the name of the association be "The Provincial Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association," and the following fees have been decided upon. All theatres with a seating capacity of over 500, $1 per month; all theatres with a seating capacity under 500, 50 cents a month; all theatres in the Province outside of Winnipeg, 50 a month.

Mr. Geo. Semper of Brandon was also present at the meeting.

It is rumored in this city that the Government is going to try and put into effect a bill which will mean the censoring of all newspaper ads; all posters must be censored and charged for at the rate of 2½ cents per sheet, but the worst of all is, that there is talk of a bill going through which will give the Government power to recall any film showing in any theatre providing a petition for its withdrawal is signed by 25 people.

Exhibitors in the province of Manitoba figure that they will be of more benefit to the Motion Picture industry in this district if they have their own organization; there was some talk of the exchangemen going, but this has not been definitely settled upon.

MONTREAL, Que.—After Sunday night, January 28th, two of Montreal leading Moving Picture theatres will be closed, namely the St. Denis Theatre and the London. During the last six months the St. Denis Theatre has lost over fifty thousand dollars ($50,000), while the London Theatre has been sold and a stock company has been formed to rebuild this theatre in time to have same open for the Fall business.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Princess Theatre in Truro booked a return engagement on the "Campbells Are Coming" for Monday and Tuesday of this week, and they reported excellent business on Monday night, playing to capacity houses.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—The Royal Theatre, New Westminster has changed hands. M. F. L. Kerr, Manager of the Edison Theatre, has taken this over. He has closed the house for a short period for repairs and intends to open it again soon.

For the first time in the history of films in these parts, the Universal Co., at Vancouver, have received an order for films by wireless. All telegraph wires were down between Vancouver and Prince Rupert, and, as the Westholme Opera House decided the last minute regarding several features, they were compelled to send a wireless with reference to them.

Mr. Gronau, of Montreal, advises that the Commette Theatre, at Cote, St. Paul, and the Bijou Theatre, at Verdun, will close on Sunday night. He also advises that Paquin Bros., of the Eden Theatre, Hull, Que., were interested visitors at the Universal office this week.

VANCOUVER.—Mr. Levine of Vancouver reports:

The children of the Orphan Asylum of Vancouver and Westminster were entertained at the Colonial Theatre by a movie performance before the regular show. Mr. Quagliotti of the Colonal donated the use of his theatre, and the Universal officers here gave the use of some children's films. The young folks seemed to enjoy Alice Howell's L-Ko comedy more than anything else. Each child was given a bag of candy as they went out after the performance.

Mr. Walkley of local office of Universal Film Co. is around with his chest out. Mrs. Walkley presented him with a bouncing eight-pound baby boy. Both mother and child are doing well. Mr. Walkley advises that he intends to put his son on the road immediately, as he sees the field is open for good men.

Mr. E. J. Timms of Langley Prairie, B. C., was a visitor in town last week. Mr. Timms is building a new theatre and advises that everything is going along nicely. He will open with Universal service.

The Opera House, Kamloops, has changed hands. Mr. A. D. MacMartin is the new lessee and manager. Mr. MacMartin is an old theatrical man and a well-known newspaper cartoonist. He will use Bluebird, Red Feather Features and the Universal Serial. Reports that business is good in Kamloops.

CAREY'S DOG NOW ACTOR.

HARRY CAREY, well-known Western actor of Universal City, keeps a collection of mongrels at the Universal ranch which assists in depleting his weekly salary check. One of the strays he named Ptomaine, and Carey says this dog is "in bad" with the rest of the canines being "up stage" since she was requisitioned to play a leading dog part for two days.

"If Ptomaine proves to be a good actress probably she will be able to support herself and one or two other pups," declared Carey as he rolled a fresh cigarette.

Written by W. Warren Schoene.
Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Ralph	Ralph McComas
Eileen	Eileen Sedgwick
Tramp No. 1	Milton Sims
Tramp No. 2	Jack Conolly

Ralph is disgusted and discouraged when he adds up the bills for the month. Eileen is also disgusted and thinks Ralph a miserly sort of husband.

Ralph reads about the South Sea Islanders and their economical living. He tells Eileen he is going to copy them and she finally consents to try the plan.

The next day the two are located in a tent. He goes to catch some fish and falls into the cold water. He comes back to the tent, half-frozen, and finds Eileen trying to light the fire. She says she is sick and he makes his wife adorn herself in grass clothes, while he goes out to hunt.

Seeing a turkey, he shoots an arrow at it, but is chased by a farmer, who is feeding a flock of the same kind of birds. They have a fight and Ralph finally is forced to pay the man for the bird.

Two tramps have seen the roll of bills displayed by Ralph; they slug him and take the money. Eileen invites them into the tent, and urges them to clothe themselves in the grass.

Ralph comes home. The sheriff arrives and is shocked to see people in such an attire. Eileen informs her husband that the book says the women of the South Sea Islands were privileged to have as many husbands as they desired. The sheriff takes the tramps prisoners.

"A DAY IN THE LIFE OF A DOG."

Powers Animated Cartoon Split Reel.

"LOST IN THE STREETS OF PARIS."

Rex Drama.

King, an American, is separated from his wife. Later a child is born unknown to him. Years pass. We find him a successful stock manipulator on the Paris stock exchange. The wife, with her child, is visiting in France. The child is lost in one of the public parks. She is kidnapped by a child-stealer, who, in turn, sells her to an unscrupulous Fagin, who forces the child into the streets as a beggar. She is found by her father, who, unaware of her identity, gives her a home and becomes greatly attached to her.

Later, the mother finds her child playing in the gardens of her husband. She attempts to take the child away with her immediately, but the child insists that her mother first see her benefactor. The man and wife come face to face, and are reconciled.

"THE FIREMAN'S BRIDE."

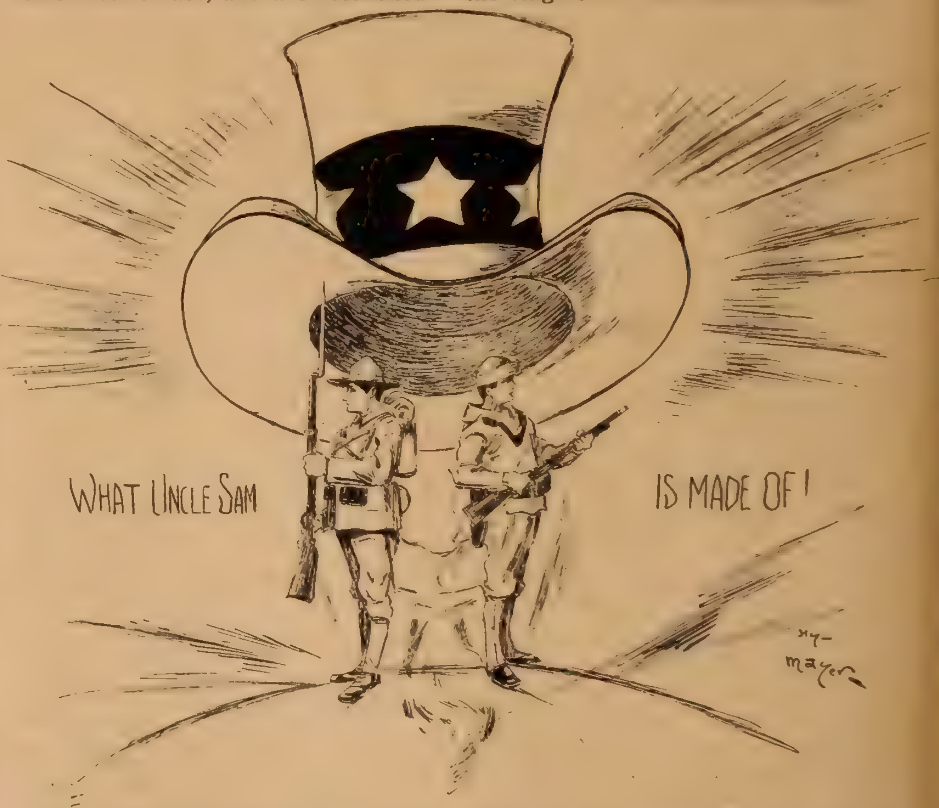
Victor Comedy.

With Jane Gail and Matt Moore.

Jane is terribly stage-struck, and her ambition causes her to scorn Moore, an honest young fireman, who has been appointed to duty in a vaudeville theatre. He secures her an opportunity on amateur night, and grimly watches her reception by a hooting, yelling gallery.

Jane's Ophelia causes the gallery to pelt her with vegetables, so Moore dashes to the stage, and by beating one young rowdy and throwing the stageman with the "hook" into the alley, he gives Jane an opportunity to proceed. Jane leaves and hides in her dressing-room in tears.

Fire breaks out on the stage, and a panic is averted by the fireman. He finds Jane when all means of escape are cut off. Wrapping the girl up, he manages to reach the roof. Cured by a double lesson, Jane renounces the stage to be the fireman's bride.



Expressive and timely cartoon by Hy. Mayer, drawn for the Universal Animated Weekly. When shown at the Rialto Theatre, New York, it was the signal for a remarkable burst of applause. The picture is an evolution from Uncle Sam's face.

CAST.

Husband	Eddie Lyons
Artist	Lee Moran
Wife	Edith Roberts

It was Eddie's birthday, but he had forgotten all about it. His wife Edith had planned a surprise for him and made every effort to keep it a secret.

Lee was an artist and was painting a picture for Edith for her husband's birthday. Eddie notices the smiles of the two, and becomes suspicious.

She asks Lee to help her hang the picture, and the artist loses his balance and falls on Edith, causing her nose to bleed. She immediately faints and Lee recalls an old remedy—to place a piece of cold metal on the sufferer's neck. He gets the door key, but in his flurry drops it down her back. Eddie arrives, finds the door locked and looks through the key-hole. With his own key he opens the door and rushes at Lee.

He chases the artist with a cutlass, through the whole house, over beds and the roof, and down skylights and fire-escapes, Lee is hidden in a trunk by Edith. Eddie begins to pack his clothes to leave the house, and Lee is discovered.

At last the painting is brought forth as evidence of her innocence, and Eddie, deeply humiliated, begs her to forgive him.

Rosie is a masculine individual, the owner of the M. T. Ranch. Her niece, Barbara, comes to visit her, and she warns her cowpunchers to keep away from the girl. But they will not obey her. Even Bill, the cook, falls a victim. In anger, Rosie pays them all off. The Mexican sees this, and resolves to steal her roll. He ties her in a chair, and builds a fire that will soon reach her. Bill is cleaning his ancient horse pistol. He hears a noise, and entering, holds up the Mexican and rescues Rosie. The result is a double wedding between Milt and Barbara, and Rosie and Bill.

"THE KEEPER OF THE GATE."

Victor Drama.

Story by E. Magnus Ingleton.
Produced by Douglas Gerrard.

CAST.

Fra Bennoni	Douglas Gerrard
Floretta	Ruth Clifford

Fra Bennoni is the keeper of the gate of a large monastery, whose monks give food daily to the poor who come to the door begging. One day the Fra finds a rose on the gate and places it on the Virgin's shrine.

One night, while he is standing guard at the gate, he hears the music of the street carnival. Unable longer to withstand its lure, he leaves the gate and hurries toward the village where he is received with open arms. The revelers think he is one of themselves disguised as a monk. All night he watches the dances and makes merry with Floretta, who is especially kind to him.

In the morning, the realization comes of what he has done. Hurrying back to the monastery, conscience-stricken, Fra Bennoni is surprised to find a monk at the gate. As he looks closer he sees that it is The Christus who has taken his place. The Fra, penitent and ashamed, kneels in humble adoration before The Christus, who vanishes as the monks pass by on their way to the day's work.

"HEROES OF THE PLAINS."

Big U Drama.

A man and wife, with their little daughter, Doris, are crossing the plains in a prairie schooner. They are attacked by Indians, and one of them, Blue Mountain, being wounded, climbs into their wagon. They nurse him and he and Doris become friends. He gives her a necklace, and returns to his tribe. She wanders away and is found by Lone Eagle, the chief, who recognizes the necklace. He takes her to camp, and she is brought up among them.

Twelve years pass; Blue Mountain wants Doris to marry White Hawk, but she is in love with Jack, the adopted son of her own parents, who live, unknown to her, on a near-by ranch. White Hawk is killed in a fight with Jack. The Indians, under Blue Bountain, attack the ranch and are defeated. The chief is killed, but before he dies he recognizes his old friends, and tells them that Doris is their daughter.

Produced by Ruth Stonehouse.

CAST.

Mary Ann	Ruth Stonehouse
Mrs. Kelly	Lydia Yeamans Titus

Mary Ann is standing near a milk station and sees a poor woman turned away as all the milk is gone. She borrows a nickel from a friendly cop and gives it to the woman. She gets a "big idea."

With the help of two boy pals, the small girl builds a shed in a vacant lot and puts a sign on it which reads: "Mary Ann Free Milk Station, No. 1." The following morning, slipping from the house while her mother is still asleep, the child takes the bottle of milk on her own doorstep and then follows the milkman, and steals every bottle of milk he delivers. Then she returns to the shed.

Mary Ann gives a bottle of milk to a colored woman. All the neighbors wonder what Mary Ann's game is.

They miss their milk and soon a crowd has gathered. The negress comes along and tells them about the new milk station in the vacant lot. Furious, the crowd rushes to the shed. Mary Ann picks up two bottles of milk and looks formidable.

The cop, noticing the crowd in the vacant lot, goes to see what the trouble may be. Mary Ann confesses to having taken the milk and the cop tells Mary Ann, with mock severity, that she must take the milk back to the places from which she took it. Sadly she goes the rounds.

He tries in every way to get to the front, and at last succeeds in being sent as a war correspondent. One day his heroism is instrumental in saving the Union army from defeat. In writing the story for his paper, he gives the credit for his brave deed to Anson, for Ethel's sake, so that she may be proud of her lover.

After the return of the regiment, at the end of the war, Anson is received as a hero by his town. Ethel worships his courage, and is engaged to him. Anson at last finds it impossible to accept any longer the praise which he has not earned. He confesses that it was John and not himself who saved the regiment from disaster. John is then declared the real hero, and marries Ethel.

"THAT FASCINATING RAGTIME."

FRANK TOGANAKA, a young Japanese who has been a member of the Universal forces for the past two years, is nothing, if not versatile. Comedy or tragedy roles are the same to him. He does what he is called upon to do, no matter what the role he portrays.

The young son of Nippon encountered his first difficulty recently when the Gold Seal picture, The Great Torpedo Secret," in which Herbert Rawlinson plays the feature role, he found he would have to dance to syncopated music. Immediately he set out for Rawlinson's dressing-room and appealed to him to teach him "how to rag." He could not have asked for a more adept instructor, for the mayor of Universal City is noted in the film colony for his terpsichorean accomplishments. So Frank learned quickly, and later surprised the director by the excellent manner in which he gave the required exhibition of "ragging" when the scenes were made. As proof that the Orient has come to the Occident, one of Tokanaga's friends reported to Rawlinson a few days ago that the young Japanese has turned instructor himself.

NEVA GERBER HAS NICE DRESSING-ROOM.

NEVA GERBER, playing opposite Herbert Rawlinson in "The Great Torpedo Secret," is the envy of all her fellow Universalites because of the fact that she has the most attractive dressing room on the lot.

The room is tinted pale blue, several handsome rugs cover the floor, two pretty statuettes adorn her dresser and several paintings which have been presented to Miss Gerber by admirers hang upon the walls.

A Japanese table, which recently was given to her by a naval officer, stands in the centre of her dressing-room and upon it is a dainty tea set decorated in blue and white, and on cold afternoons after the day's work is done the petite actress has a number of her co-workers visit her for a little tea party.

celebrated David, is another actor who has felt the "Wanderlust," He was born in Brooklyn, but educated in England, and has had vaudeville experience in Great Britain, Russia, Germany, South Africa and the United States. These two men sustain the continued interest from one episode of the series to the next, while the rest of the cast changes completely as the different adventures take place in many different countries all over the world. The series is full of new ideas, and appeals to the most varied public. One adventure will be semi-scientific, based upon the search for the secret of some new discovery or invention; the next will be pure romance, with a beautiful princess in the power of villains, rescued in the most exciting fashion by the dauntless American. Then will come a detective story, in which Norroy plays the part of sleuth; then a political tangle, which he will be asked to straighten out for the government; while the next may concern itself with the intricacies of "big business." The only things which may be guaranteed from one chapter to the other, are the personality of the leading character, and the absolute absence of all sameness and monotony.

The first adventure is called "The Last Cigarette," and is released under the Imp brand, on Friday, March 9th. It takes place in an unidentified European capital, possibly in Russia, and concerns the relentless vengeance carried out by the foreign secret service, first upon one of their own men who has failed in his mission, and then upon the American, Yorke Norroy, who caused the man to fail in the first place. Norroy gets into a horribly tight place, but extricates himself by the cleverest sort of a trick, a ruse which is something absolutely new in pictures. In the second episode, released in the week of March 12, and called "The Clash of Steel," the scene changes to a village in France, while the story concerns the persecution of a beautiful princess of an unidentified principality, probably Balkan, by her dissolute husband, who is seeking a pretext for divorce. She is rescued by Norroy with the assistance of Carson, in the true manner of a squire of dames, by the resistless might of his good sword-arm.

with about a dozen men and riding furiously after two of them who are trying to carry her away, he at last succeeds in shooting the men, and again holds Constance in his arms.

When they return to the ranch, Monty is greatly astonished to see the same cowboys eating a large breakfast. Constance confesses that this is her father's ranch, and that she had arranged this drama to test his courage. Monty finds that his revolver was loaded with blank cartridges.

He is about to tell her his story, and gets only as far as to say, "I am an imposter," when the county constable arrives and, accusing Monty of everything imaginable, places handcuffs on him. Constance feels sure Monty is really a crook, for he has said he was an imposter.

The Lannings dash in and demand to know what has become of Montgomery Gray, but refuse to believe Monty when he assures them he himself is the man wanted. Then Wilbur rushes into the scene and embraces his friend, while the others stare in open-mouthed amazement. Wilbur brings a message from the station agent which reads that the crook has been arrested as he was boarding a train. He was using the name of Duke of Cannister, and the jewels and other valubles stolen from the Lanning home were found on him.

Monty then explains, and Mrs. Lanning changes her mind concerning titles.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

THERE are certainly good times coming for those wise Exhibitors who have the stunt habit.

The Universal Program is so packed with good things these days that there is abundant opportunity for stunts that will put your house strictly in the lead.

Not only have you plenty of material on the regular Universal Program, but the special releases offer box office attractions that cannot be boosted too hard. For instance:

"The Voice on the Wire," a serial that is going to establish a new standard as a money-getter. The most remarkable mystery drama ever filmed. Think of the telephone stunts you can pull off for a serial with a name like that—"The Voice on the Wire."

Then there is "The Perils of the Secret Service," with the famous international detective—Yorke Norroy—from the wonderful stories by George Bronson Howard, the celebrated novelist, and directed by him.

For the Exhibitor who thinks he doesn't care to run serials here is an opportunity to get them coming for eight straight weeks—each two-reel story complete in itself. Watch this magazine for stunts for both of these big features.

One thing more. The Universal Screen Magazine is now being released every week. This in response to an overwhelming popular demand from fans, Exhibitors and Exchange men. If you run this marvelous one-reeler just once, you will book it every week. Try it one day, and you will understand its popularity. You will find it well worth while to work out some special stunts for the Universal Screen Magazine, because once the fans see it, they'll pack your doors. It will fit in with a program show, or a feature performance. It will fit anywhere, and put over any entertainment you have booked.

Remember these three big opportunities and grab them before your competitor beats you to it.

FIRST, for a general idea, to aid in the putting over of any of the pictures which you may wish to emphasize by extra advertising. This suggestion is particularly appropriate for the exhibitor in a small town, whose relations with the merchants of his locality are friendly. Enlist the co-operation of your local art dealer, and get him to work with you in the intelligent advertising of a picture which you are showing, in a manner which will benefit both of you. For example, you are showing a western feature, we'll say for sake of argument, Harry Carey in "The Drifter," released March 10, or Jack Ford in "The Tornado," released on March 3d. Get the art dealer to fill his window with drawings by Frederick Remington, which all boys and young men like in their rooms. If he will do so, he may carry an announcement of the picture that you are showing, while you return the compliment by a poster or a slide telling your patrons that a splendid exhibition of just such scenes as are shown in the picture———— is to be seen at————'s. Or let us say that you are running an educational, with pictures of China, like the Dorsey for March 4th. Then the art dealer would put Chinese porcelain, or baskets, with Chinese prints, and wall hangings in his window. Your feature may have a European setting, Paris, perhaps. Then reproductions of paintings showing the principal sights in that capital, or of the famous paintings in the Louvre, the great museum of Paris, would make a fine window display. You can readily see the mutual benefit in this idea, and if your art dealer is a wide-awake individual, you should have no difficulty in making him see it, too.

THE Gold Seal for February 27, is a very charming story called "Mary From America," in which a young girl, apparently poor and friendless, arrives in England for the reading of the will of a very rich man, to whom she is related. All the relatives of the dead man are gathered together in expectation of benefiting by his death, and they turn a cold shoulder to the plainly dressed little stranger who arrives in a country cart. The tables are turned in the end, and their turning makes the story. You might advertise in the following way: Hire a country-looking cart, drawn by a raw-boned horse, and have the wheels encrusted with mud as if the conveyance had been driven through the country roads. In the cart have a poorly dressed girl, with a shawl over her head. She should be as pretty a girl as you can find. She is seated on her dilapidated trunk, and the wagon, which is driven by a farmer, with typical country clothes, a broad-brimmed hat and a corn cob pipe, bears big signs, "On our way to the ———— Theatre. Follow us."

THE L-KO for February 28th, is a corker and is called "Spike's Bizzy Bike." It features Dan Russell as the hero of a six-day bicycle race. His adventures as he trains for the great event are enough to make even a cracked-lip sufferer laugh. If you want to make an effective lobby display for this screaming comedy, fit it up as a trainer's establishment, have a fat man in gym costume and bathrobe going through comical stunts. If the weather will permit, send him, wrapped in a bathrobe with a pointed, tasseled cap on his head, through the streets on his wheel, which should bear an appropriate announcement.

Two Pages of Letters From

What they think about the great Univer Specialties Comedies and Dramas a Universal Serials -- "Liberty" and "T louder than anything else for the great

LIBERTY CONVERTED THEM.

THE town of Mattoon, Ill., according to the Universal Film and Supply Company of St. Louis, got "sore" on serials, and of the three houses in that town not one would book a serial. Finally the exchange succeeded in booking "Liberty" in the Bijou Theatre, and after giving them every possible advertising aid, the following letter was received at the Exchange:

Universal Film & Supply Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.:

Gentlemen — Yesterday I started "Liberty" for the second time. The first time, owing to weather conditions, it did not get a very good beginning, but this time sure did make it go big. Played to 2,340 people, matinee and night, and now look forward to big business during the succeeding weeks. Have had a great deal of praise for picture, and no fault.

An old Indian scout who lives here, says the picture is true to life, as he has been all over that part of the country, and it could not be more real than the picture. I also want to thank you for the part your Mr. Goldbaum took in making same success, and assuring you of my appreciation of same, I remain,

B. E. THOMAS,
Mattoon, Ill. Bijou Theatre.

CAN LAUGH AT THEM.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City:

Dear Sir—It has been some time since I wrote you anything in regard to the Universal service, as I have mentioned to you in a previous letter. I have been using Universal pictures ever since the Universal company was organized, and have watched the service improve until to-day it is one of the very best services on the market for the small exhibitor as well as the large exhibitors. The regular program of one, two and three-reelers is the program that will carry any exhibitor through and get the people and hold them, with the serial on the program like "Liberty." Your competitors can bombard you with their so-called features in five reels, and you can laugh at them and say to them, "Go to it, boys," for I have found there is more in a two or three-reel Universal regular program feature than there is in the high-priced features of five or more reels, released by other concerns.

BENEVOLENCE.

The Universal Film Co.,
New York City:

Dear Sirs—The School Board of the Religious School of Tremont Temple, desires to thank you most heartily for your generosity in according the children of our Sunday-school the delightful treat of the highly instructive and amusing picture loaned by you, and exhibited at the Tremont Theatre, 1946 Webster Avenue (Samuel H. Trigger, proprietor), Sunday morning.

Acts of this kind are the noblest forms of benevolence and are deserving of the highest praise and commendation, which I herewith extend to you in unstinted measure. May all your efforts be crowned with success.

B. H. ARNOLD,
Secretary School board of Religious School of Tremont Temple.
New York.

WANTS IT AGAIN.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa:

Gentlemen—Ran "Liberty No. 19" to-night. Broke all records. If "The Purple Mask" comes anywhere near hitting the mark as "Liberty" has done—well, it will have to go some.

R. R. PERKINS,
Proprietor Ozark Theatre.
Burlington, Iowa.

P. S.—Would there be a chance to get "Liberty" and run it all in ten days? It would be the biggest clean-up ever. If you had an extra copy, many exhibitors would be glad to do it, and would clean up for that week. Please advise.

CRAZY ABOUT POLO.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa:

Dear Sirs—"Liberty" has been a winner for us, as Eddie Polo is starred in it, he having won favor in Boone through his work in "The Broken Coin." The people are sure crazy over Eddie Polo here. "Liberty" is full of thrills and that is what our patrons like.

Yours very sincerely,
BROWN & ANDERSON,
Boone, Iowa. Princess Theatre.

INTEREST AWAKENING.

Universal Film Exchange, Chicago:

Dear Sirs—My patrons, as well as myself, were greatly pleased with the show last night. I had the biggest business I have had for months. I can see the interest awakening rapidly, and the common expression is, "The show was fine." My business was practically ruined by other film companies and I would not again put up with other service under any circumstances.

I feel very grateful to you for the interest you are taking in me and feel with your hearty co-operation I can again restore the business to what it should be.

Thanking you for past favors, I beg to remain yours very truly,

L. K. JACKSON,
Lyric Theatre, Odell, Ill.

HAS SOME PEP.

Laemmle Film Service,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen—In regard to your serial entitled "Liberty," will say that I am doing splendid business with it, and it sure has some pep to it. My patrons say it is the best serial I have run, and the most interesting. So far I cannot speak well enough for the picture, and those acting in it.

Hoping it will keep coming as it has been, I am, respectfully yours,

H. W. CUMMINGS,
Rex Theatre, Chisolm, Minn.

JUST THE THING.

Film Supply Company,
Portland, Ore.

Dear Sir—Today I am running the Eleventh Episode of the serial "Liberty." I am having such unusually good attendance on it that I feel like writing to tell you of same. On "Liberty" nights my 600 seats are not nearly enough to accommodate the crowds, and that's going some in a suburb four miles from the business center of Portland. It is just the thing to grip the pulse of the public which is so much interested in the affairs on our Mexican border.

New York City.

Dear Sir:—Your letter inquiring about the Universal weekly service and serials at hand. In reply, will say that, in my opinion, the Universal service, which is used at the Plaza and in other playhouses formerly managed by me in the last seven or eight years, has proven that Universal service stands the test above others, especially your comedies, which are great, and serials such as "Liberty," the most tremendous serial and among the greatest in the United States.

There is on let up. Each episode is gaining more and more patronage. I am one of the many hundreds of exhibitors, I suppose, who would ask to extend "Liberty" for a longer period than twenty episodes, as it is without doubt the best timely serial with lots of thrilling and daring action, and with drawing power for the most refined patrons. I also want to express my sincere approval of your business methods and uniform courtesy which have enabled me to give my patrons the very best at all time, and I have found that your honest business practices have proven to be of great value.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) JAC. AMSTERDAM.

BEST IN LONG TIME.

Laemmle Film Service,
Omaha, Neb.:

Gentlemen—I want to say that "The Isle of Life" is the best feature I have shown for a long time. Yes, I want a feature for Thursday—"If My Country Should Call"—if you have an open booking on same, accompanied by a good comedy. Don't fail me.

Yours truly,
P. H. HOPPEN.

BEST ALL-AROUND SERIAL.

Universal Film Exchange, Inc.,
Charlotte, N. C.:

Dear Sirs—Please be advised that "Liberty" is positively the best all-around serial that we have ever exhibited. Eddie Polo and Marie Walcamp are certainly great. Our patrons are delighted with their work, and the box-office receipts prove it. We break previous records with almost every episode. We have now shown the ninth, and if we continue to increase on it in the future, as in the past, we won't be able to accommodate half that come, as we are now overflowing every day we exhibit the same.

Trusting that you may follow "Liberty" with another serial as good, and with best wishes, we are,

Very truly yours,
J. B. CRAVER,
Mgr. Broadway Theatre.
Charlotte, N. C.

HELP TO BUSINESS.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa:

Gentlemen—"Liberty" is a great help to our business, as it always brings about double the crowd that a common show would, and we are always sure of good business that night, if it storms or not. I think we will gladly welcome another serial when this one is over.

Yours very truly,
M. P. ANGELL,
Orpheum Theatre.
Ottumwa, Iowa.

L-KOS MONEY GETTERS.

1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Gentlemen—There are no words that will explain the quality of the L-KO Comedies, and as money getters they have no equal. This might be placing matters somewhat strong, but the opinion is based from an unbiased standpoint. Yours truly,

GEM AMUSEMENT Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

CRAZY ABOUT WESTERNS.

Laemmle Film Service,
Omaha, Neb.:

Gentlemen—I certainly appreciate your sending me a first-run picture, but would have preferred the other picture, as a Western picture is the only thing that will get them on Saturdays. People over here are crazy about Western stuff, and I want all of it I can get. I don't care if it is old, just so it is in good enough condition to run. I want you to send me out at once a set of emergencies, as I have none in the house. I am enclosing contracts for "The Purple Mask." If it is as good a drawing-card as "Liberty" it will be all O. K. I have done more business with "Liberty" every episode, and only wish it was longer. So do my patrons, as they are crazy about it. Here's for success for "The Purple Mask."

Yours, Universally,
E. N. EPLEY,
New Edison Theatre.
Hastings, Neb.

MOST POPULAR SERIAL.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City:

Gentlemen—In the city of Calgary "Liberty" is more popular than any serial ever shown here.

Yours very truly,
CANADIAN UNIVERSAL FILM CO., LTD.
Calgary, Can.

BEST OF ITS KIND.

Universal Film Service,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen—In yesterday's program I had Alice Howell in "Alice in Society," and I want to pass my appreciation for the same. My patrons thought it the best they had seen of its kind. For myself I consider it the best high class, clean-cut comedy I have ever received, and send my highest compliments to the L-KO Company. Respectfully yours,

LOUIS KERASOTES,
Savoy Theatre,
Springfield, Ill.

"LIBERTY" WENT FINE.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa:

Gentlemen—"Liberty" is going fine with me, and stuff along the line of "Liberty" always goes good with me; also comedies. Book me for your next serial. Very truly yours,

H. C. WITTMANN.
Muscatine, Iowa.

BLUEBIRD

Bluebird I confess
That I love your story
You bring happiness
With your melody
Tell me, is it true
Or an allegory
Bluebird, can you bring back to me
The treasure trove the perfect love
The days that used to be.
The tenderness of each caress
My happiness to me?

Chorus:

Bluebird carry my happiness back to me,
Bluebird you've heard my call
Won't you answer to my pleading
Fly high into the sky o'er the land o'er the sea
Bluebird, go, bring back my happiness
Bring back my sweetheart to me.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Girl and the Crisis." With Dorothy Davenport, Chas. Perley and Wm. V. Mong. Directed by Wm. V. Mong. Fifty-seventh Red Feather production. Released February 26. If you want to show your patrons a picture that is right up to the minute in action; staged with a lavish hand; with the swiftest action, biggest scenes and gripping situations, book this wonderful Red Feather that Director Mong has produced with more real punches than you ordinarily find outside of a multi-reel serial. The play is one of politics. Mong is the Lieuteant-Governor fighting a bunch of grafters who have the Governor on their side. The lieutenant remarks that if he were Governor he would do his duty; and Poole, a friend, shoots the Governor, remarking, "Now, your Governor, do your duty." Poole is tried and convicted of murder and sentenced to the chair. Through his rash act the Lieutenant has become Governor, and as such he is asked to pardon Poole. That is just one of the tremendous situations that make this one of the notable Red Feathers of the season. A strange but fascinating love theme runs through this play, and it will certainly pack 'em in. Boost this and boost hard.

"Mary From America." With Ruth Clifford. By Elizabeth R. Carpenter. Directed by Douglas Gerrard. Three-reel Gold Seal Society Surprise Drama. Released February 27. Here is one bully picture. One of the kind that is full of surprises; delicious comedy bits; times when the tearsand the smiles come together. It has to do with an old man's will. His relatives gather at his house after his death, and the will is read. His money is left to "Lady Jessica," and the hungry heirs are told to wait her coming. In the meantime Mary comes from America and all the relatives are happily engaged in kocking her for fair. All but Douglas, who knows a nice girl when he sees her. Who Mary is and how the estate is settled, to say nothing of a beautiful love story, round out one of the most unusual three-reel pictures ever released.

"The Rented Man." With Claire McDowell and Francis Marion. Story by Annie Donnell. Two-reel Rex Human Interest Drama. Released March 1. It so happens that the Blue Ribbon Features are all unusual this week, so you will have to forgive me if I continue to use that much abused word. Francis' father and mother are estranged, and the little boy lives a very lonely life. Near his big and handsome home is a little girl whose father is a poor working man, but the little boy envies the little girl because she goes to meet her father every night, and he doesn't even know where his father is. So he makes the acquaintance of a man, whom he induces to play as his father, and he pays the man so much a week to bring him candy. The absorbing story, full of the tenderest human touches, gradually reveals just who the rented man is, and the climax will have your audiences wild with joy.

"The Tornado." With Jack Ford. Written and produced by Jack Ford. Two-reel 101 Bison Western Drama. Released March 3. This is a human tornado and Jack is it. There is a fight between Jack and three bandits that beats anything in the fighting line this reviewer has seen, lo, these many months. There is some dare-devil riding and some stunts that make you fairly gasp. Jack rounds up a bunch of desperadoes, but because he is Irish and loves Nature's weapons, he refuses to use a gun and cleans out the gang and gets the girl, with no automatic or other fighting implement. A real red-blooded Western that will prove more than popular. You can boost this hard.

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY

Every world event of importance is first flashed on the screen by the Animated Weekly, because U. A. W. cameramen cover the world. The tremendous organization of the Universal, the largest film organization in the world, alone makes this possible. To show your patrons this popular form of entertainment AT ITS BEST—show them the Universal Animated Weekly.

On the Regular UNIVERSAL PROGRAM – or Can Be Booked Separately

If you are showing the regular Universal Program the Weekly is included in the twenty-nine reels every week. If you are booking an "open" program or running a feature house, the Weekly is the specialty you need to strengthen your show and to pull the crowds on that "dull day" that all Exhibitors dread. Write your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars, or UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY, 1600 Broadway, New York.

If you could only peek into the booths of the great majority of up-to date Theatres you would find Motiographs at work,—

As you will note by the very recent installation at the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. There is a reason for the many installations. It is perfection in projection combined with small initial cost.

The BLUEBIRD mail used to be filled with knocks. Not because BLUEBIRD Photoplays were not good. Every one had to admit they were the finest productions to be had. But because the deluded Exhibitors thought the BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing" meant that no attention would be paid to the acting or the direction. NOW—Exhibitors and patrons alike have found that they see more capable actors in BLUEBIRD Photoplays, and a higher average of excellence than in all other features combined. NOW—the people are demanding BLUEBIRDS. You can collect on this by communicating with your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

Where Would

(No. 165. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

WHAT would happen to YOU if the Universal should decide to go out of business tomorrow?

Where on earth would you get films half way equal to the quality we are giving you without paying more money than you could afford?

Would you be at the mercy of others, and how much mercy would you get?

What frightful prices would you be paying for service this very minute, or any minute during the past few years, if the Universal had not been here to act as a bulwark of safety for you?

If the Universal should suddenly quit tomorrow, what company can you think of that has ever shown enough enterprise to assume the leadership in our place?

What company can you call to mind that has ever shown one-half or one-tenth as much desire, ambition or ability to keep pumping new thoughts and new plans and ideas for improvement into the moving picture business?

What company has half the power of the Universal, and when has the Universal ever abused its tremendous power?

You Get Off?

What company has been half so quick to jump to the front every time there was a fight to be made for the rights of any branch of the industry?

Name even one other company which kept its head during the feature stampede and kept on making program pictures of high class—the very backbone of the picture business!

Tooting our own horn? Sure! You've derived so much peace of mind from the knowledge that the Universal is always on the job that some of you have become accustomed to it. And when we become accustomed to a good thing we often fail to appreciate it. The best way to appreciate it is to ask yourself the question, "What could I do without it?"

If you haven't been using Universal pictures lately, isn't it about time for you to call at the nearest Universal exchange and find out what is going on?

Violet's New Leading Man

WHEN Violet Mersereau appeared in "The Honor of Mary Blake," her first Bluebird under the direction of Edwin Stevens, she had the support of a new leading man, who won such success as the young farmer who dared fall in love with the "play actress," that he was signed up to appear with the little Bluebird star in future productions. Their second picture, "The Boy-Girl," will be released this week, and the reviews have already been very complimentary to the work of Sidney Mason, in the role of Bob Ridgeway.

Mr. Mason has had good training for pictures. He is a Jersey boy, in the first place, and New Jersey rivals California as a picture state, as we all know. So he was fortunate in a birthplace. He played in amateur theatricals while he was still a boy, and joined a repertoire company, touring the New England states, as soon as he had been given a diploma. He had a season of the "unhand-me-villain-she-hissed" sort of thing under A. H. Woods, and then stock experience in Norfolk, Virginia. Later he came under the banner of Cohan and Harris, and made a great hit by his playing of "Blackie Daw," in the original "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" company. No, he doesn't play the saxophone.

At the close of this season he joined the 34th Street Manhattan Stock Company, and in the next he played in "Stop Thief." Then he left the "legit" for a while, to support Marguerite Clark in "Seven Sisters." A jump into vaudeville occupied a year, and then came another picture, "The Builder of Bridges," with Aubrey Smith.

Pictures looked pretty good to Mason, so he signed up for a year with Gaumont to play with Marguerite Courtot as co-star. Their permanence appealed to him, in contrast to the changes and chances of the stage. Also his personal appearance is exactly suited to the type of role which he is called upon to play for the films, and, most important of all, he "screens" well. He is just thirty years old, though he does not look it, and only excessive frankness, very rare in an actor, leads him to confess that he was born in 1886. He has dark-brown hair with a natural wave in it, brown eyes, and is five feet eleven and one-half inches in height. One of the regrets of his life is that his patriotic vow to emulate George Washington in everything won't allow him to write himself "six feet tall."

Sidney Mason, Bluebird leading man.

From Extra to Leads in a Month

ROBERTA WILSON is a daughter of the sunny South, and she looks the part. She was born in Birmingham, Ala., and she is the girl who rose, in less than one month, from the humble position of "extra girl" to leading roles in Universal City productions. Her sister is responsible for her debut in the films. She had the good fortune to be proclaimed the prettiest girl in the State, and taken to Universal City with the Beauties, over a year ago. Roberta tagged along after her, and when Lois was offered a permanent engagement she begged for the least little scrap of a bit in the picture in which her older sister was appearing.

She looked so pretty when she begged, that the most determined Charity Organization—Anti-Pauperization personage would have found it impossible to refuse alms in spite of cast-iron principles, if she had begged of him in the streets. And no picture director ever had such inconvenient things as cast-iron principles.

She turned out to be just like the thin end of the wedge, of proverbial memory. Once in, it was impossible to get her out again, and she kept widening and widening her "sphere of influence" as it were, until the powers that be out there, suddenly awoke to the fact that they had another leading lady on their hands, and books. She has done a great many important things, such as starring in Red Feathers, like "Barriers of Society" and "The Heritage of Hate." Her latest picture is a charming Rex drama, on this week's program, in which she has the role of an abnormally wealthy girl, who picks up a tramp in her motor car, takes him home with her, orders him to bathe and dress, and then invites him to marry her, presenting him with $100,000 besides.

AFTER THREE WEEKS DRILL.

THAT wonderful progress towards preparedness, and the making of sailors, can be made in three weeks if the recruits are all in earnest, is demonstrated conclusively in Animated Weekly No. 61. The naval "rookies" at Lake Bluff, Illinois, demonstrated in recent maneuvres what can be accomplished even in so short a time by intensive training. We see them on the parade ground, already marching almost like veterans. They salute the flag, and then are ready for the sham battle. Sailors in the trenches have proved their worth in the European war, and those of the United States are not behind them. We see the firing of three-inch guns by the men who have had just three weeks experience in the handling of artillery. That wonders can be accomplished if the men give their hearts and minds to it is the lesson on the naval recruits at Lake Bluff.

MOTHERS CLAMOR FOR FOOD.

CARRYING their half-starved babies, the women of the lower East Side of New York City called upon Mayor Mitchel, to beg him to use his influence in lowering the prohibitive prices of food in the city. The Animated Weekly man was on hand to film the crowd of tired, anxious-looking women for Weekly No. 61. "Our babies need milk," was their cry, while the bystanders advised them against rioting in order to gain their ends. The committee of women who were admitted to the Mayor received pledges of his aid in their behalf. A table showing the recent increase of prices in staples, such as onions, potatoes and cabbage, is shown upon the screen as the most graphic illustration of the plight of the poor of the East Side districts.

FLED FROM VILLA.

REFUGEES driven from their homes by fear of Villa, and forced to take refuge at the camp where Uncle Sam is keeping watch near Columbus form interesting scenes of Animated Weekly No. 61. They seem to have a pretty good time, too, once they arrive, judging from the views obtained by the cameraman. And they do not seem to have been posed especially for the lens, either. Wonderful views were obtained from an army aeroplane by the operator, of the return of Pershing's expedition from Mexico. We see the column as it looked from about half a mile up in the air. Then afterwards we fly with the cameraman over the encampment, looking down upon it from the heights, in a real bird's-eye view.

REMEMBER THE MAINE.

ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 61 shows the veterans at the Soldiers' Home, Sawtelle, California, unveiling the Memorial Tablet which has been erected there in memory of the destruction of the U. S. battleship Maine. The tablet is made of one of the armor plates of the destroyed man-of-war, and is inscribed with a suitable inscription. Some of the men now living in peace in the home saw service during the Spanish-American war and they took a particular interest in the placing of the tablet. A patriotic address was delivered by Captain William T. Helms to the old soldiers, and their civilian visitors, who were present on the occasion.

"The Boy-Girl"

THE second of the Bluebird photoplays produced at the Universal's Eastern plant, with Violet Mersereau as the star and Edwin Stevens as the director, is released in the week of March 5th, under the title of "The Boy-Girl." In it Miss Mersereau has the appealing role of the young daughter of a famous turfman, who is so disappointed at not having a son, that he dresses his only child in masculine garb, gives her the run of his stables, teaches her to ride and shoot, and has her educated by a tutor instead of a governess. Sidney Mason, who did such good work in the former Mersereau-Stevens picture, supports the little star in this, as Bob Ridgeway, the son of a neighbor, who succeeds in convincing "Jack" that it is a good thing to be a girl after all.

The course of their love runs any way but smoothly, however, for there are complications galore. Contrary to most love stories, which finish with the wedding of the hero and heroine, this one continues well into their married life. The very unusual circumstances in which they are married, prevent their understanding each other, and keep them artificially apart. But at the end they come together again, to our great satisfaction, and the film closes with one of those charming touches of which Mr. Stevens seems to have a monopoly.

Bob and his sister.

Sidney Mason makes a manly Bob Ridgeway, and Tina Marshall is very effective as the sister Catherine, who is infatuated with the unworthy artist. Miss Mersereau has lavish opportunity for her talents in a more than usually colorful ingenue role. She wears her boy's clothes with bewitching grace, tumbles head over heels, shocks her staid and proper aunts, teases her tutor, fascinates her old father, foils the villain by a wonderful display of "horsewomanship," plays basketball at boarding school, and indulges in a thousand and one pretty tricks, before the problems of existence change her from a fascinating tom-boy into a true, loving woman and wife. An outline of the story gives very little idea of the good things so generously offered by the photoplay. John C. Brownell is the author.

Jacqueline Channing, her name affectionately shortened to "Jack," is the daughter of King Channing, a prosperous turfman. Jack's mother died when the girl was born. King Channing had most desired a boy when Jack arrived, and he accordingly raised his daughter as a boy. She was the apple of her father's eye, and greatly popular with Channing's intimates. Thus she had grown to be sixteen, always dressing in boy's clothes.

The boy reads the lips of the conspirators.

While rambling through the woods one afternoon she met Bob Ridgeway, son of Channing's aristocratic neighbors, and there was an acquaintance formed that was destined to be the ruling force in Jack's life. Shortly after this incident, King Channing suddenly died. His will bequeathed his fortune to Jack, to be held in trust, with her two maiden aunts as guardians of the girl, until she should be of legal age or should marry.

Life with Jack's maiden aunts is almost unbearable for the spoiled child. They finally decide that she shall be sent to boarding school, and for a time, in her new surroundings (being now properly dressed in girl's clothes) Jack is contented. But the restraint finally palls upon her and she runs away from school, determined to make her own living. She finds board and lodging with a woman who has as another paying guest a girl who has just left a position in the office of Ridgeway & Son. Jack is advised immediately to apply for the position. This she does and is given employment.

The affairs of Ridgeway & Son have been going from bad to worse. Finally they are nearly at the point of disaster, when matters take an unexpected turn. There is a valuable piece of mining property they can secure at a great bargain. Bob Ridgeway goes West, and secures from the owner of the property his promise to sell at a definite figure, but Bob cannot secure an option. The secrets of Ridgeway & Son have been "leaking" through the contemptible conduct of a chief clerk who sells to a rival firm the information he cunningly contrives to secure.

That Ridgeway & Son want to buy the copper property becomes known to their business rivals, and the Ridgeways must act quickly if they wish to swing the deal. But the Ridgeways are lacking in funds. Jack Channing has a plan, and proposes it to Bob. They shall immediately marry and draw enough of Jack's fortune to pay for the property. The proposal is so daring that it fairly takes away Bob's breath, but he has loved the girl from the day he met her in the woods, and she has likewise loved him.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay starring Violet Mersereau in a role in which she wears masculine garb. Written by John C. Brownell and produced by Edwin Stevens.

Bob and Jack marry, but when it comes to going West with the money to close the deal, the elder Ridgeway is so ill and nervously broken down that Bob cannot leave him. So Jack makes the trip and by daring riding and fast work beats the Ridgeway rivals to the property and secures the deed. When Jack returns home, the elder Ridgeway is restored to health, largely a result of Jack's cleverness in saving the firm from bankruptcy.

A complication in the affairs of Jack and Bob appears to mar their happiness. Catherine, Bob's sister, is infatuated with an artist of shady reputation, and so far loses her self-respect that she consents to meet him alone at his apartment. He picks up a living by selling secrets which he hears in society to a disreputable news sheet. Jack learns of Catherine's rashness, and goes to the studio to protect her. Bob finds a note which the artist has written to his sister, and thinks that it was meant for his wife. In great anger he also goes to the studio, finds his wife, and jumps to the conclusion that she has come to see the artist. Jack, in reality, has protected Catherine, and allowed her to make her escape. Furiously angry, Bob seizes a whip and beats the artist. It is some time before his confidence in his wife is restored, but the ending leaves them very happy by the confession of Catherine.

Weeks has arrived too late.

ZOE RAE DISCUSSES MARRIAGE.

A FEW days ago little six-year-old Zoe Rae, talented Universal actress, playing with Director Mong in the Rex Feature, "The Grudge," told her father that when she married she did not want a man who drank, smoked or swore, and finished this by an inquiry as how to know if he has these habits. Her father informed her that by the time she was of a marriageable age she would understand these things. The child persisted, and finally her father said, "Well, you could smell it on his breath." Zoe looked at him in wonderment and asked, "How do you suppose I could smell swear words?"

Another Wonderfu Opportunity

ANOTHER novelty from Universal, another chance to "clean up," and one which our competitors are hastening to imitate. Next week's Red Feather will be a combination affair—a three-reeler with Cleo Madison, Roberta Wilson and Molly Malone, and a two-reel Western with Neal Hart and the famous cowboys. The first is a real five thousand foot story boiled down to three thousand, and the second would have been produced by any one else in at least three reels and possibly even five. Eight reels of first-class entertainment in the compass of five thousand feet is a pretty big proposition, especially with half a dozen stars and a whole company of featured players. All this is bunched together as a "feature" which deserves the name if any picture in the world ever did. Read all about this wonderful opportunity on page 27.

Ben Wilson and Close-Ups

Secret of the Excellence of Those in "The Voice on the Wire" Is That Ben Works in Them Without Make Up of Any Kind.

Ben Wilson has to have telephone on stage in "Voice on the Wire."

THIS is a scene from the filming of the new Universal serial, "The Voice on the Wire," and shows the cameraman getting ready to film a close-up of Ben Wilson, listening to the fatal warning over a property telephone. He has to do it, you know, every few minutes, throughout the episodes of the big picture, in his character of John Shirley, the criminologist, who is called in by the police officials when the series of crimes, all committed in the same mysterious manner, baffles their experience.

Wilson is one of the few actors who work without a make-up, and so close-ups of his countenance are more than usually successful. It is certainly disillusioning, to say the least of it, when one sees the beaded eyelashes, reddened lips, and darkened eyebrows and lids of a screen hero, magnified till his face is about ten feet high. They are bad enough in a woman's visage, but quite impossible in a man's. Many screen players, however, are convinced that they look better when their eyes, at close range, suggest a fistic encounter, and their lips look as if they had just been indulging in copious helpings of huckleberry pie. It has been suggested that the necessary close-ups, which rightly used, make a picture so interesting, should be taken at a time when the player's make-up had been adapted especially for them. The first director who insists upon this, is going to be personally unpopular, but his pictures will benefit greatly.

The role of John Shirley is the best that Wilson has had in a long time, and is sure to add to his great popularity. But he declares that he has had to do so much telephoning in the making of it that the very sound of the bell makes him nervous.

Every one connected with the serial is rather "jumpy," for the plot is so sensational.

"The Eagle's Wings" Rouses Washington

D. A. R. and Government Officials See the Bluebird Special Industrial Preparedness Feature at Never-to-be-Forgotten Meetings.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 24th.—(Special to the Moving Picture Weekly.)

THE morning papers display prominently the review of "The Eagle's Wings," the Bluebird special industrial preparedness release which is just now occupying the attention of patriotic societies and thoughtful people to a remarkable degree. The picture was shown last night in the auditorium of the Memorial Continental Hall, under the auspices of the National Association, Daughters of the American Revolution, before a brilliant assemblage of Washington society. Among those present were Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Secretary of War Baker, Secretary of State Lansing, Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, and a great many Congressmen, Justices of the Supreme Court, and Administration officials. Sustained applause frequently punctuated the telling points made by Rufus Steele's brilliant appeal for adequate industrial preparedness as illustrated on the screen, and it was evident that "The Eagle's Wings" had made a profound impression in exactly the place where it will do the most good.

The rush for tickets had been so great that the room was crowded to overflowing, and many who had signified the desire to come were unable to obtain cards of admission.

Mrs. William Cumming Story, National President General of the D. A. R., presided, and introduced the speaker of the evening, Representative August P. Gardner, of Massachusetts, who gave a brilliant oration, driving home the message conveyed by "The Eagle's Wings." In their stories this morning the papers paid an unusual amount of attention to this first showing of the Bluebird special in Washington. The Washington Post, under a two-column head, says in part:

"The motion picture, 'The Eagle's Wings,' proved an eloquent plea for preparedness, first in showing a Congressman's conversion to preparedness, and second in the novel views of the plants of the country turning out guns and munitions for defense. The menace in the proposed national referendum on war was pointed out by August P. Gardner before the Daughters of the American Revolution, when he declared that if a vote is taken when patriotism is at a low ebb we would go to war hating ourselves, while if we voted for peace we would have to submit to everything in the future."

The Washington Star said: "So interested did public officials and members of patriotic organizations become in the preparedness meeting under the auspices of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, in the auditorium last night, that cards of admission were at a premium, the members of Congress, in particular, having been so unanimous in their acceptance of invitations, that the great bulk of cards of admission was soon exhausted."

The success of the Bluebird picture before this special audience in the national capital but duplicates the impression which the photoplay has made wherever it has been shown throughout the length and breadth of our country. Great applause has marked telling passages in all communities, and there have been no dissenting "peace at any price" voices raised in protest.

"DESPERATION"

Katherine spends her time with Furness, who still loves her.

Centre—She begs her husband to leave his work. Right — John throws them together.

THIS Gold Seal Three-Reel Drama has an interesting history. It was written in the first place by the well known author, E. Temple Thurston, and published under the title of "The Evolution of Katherine." The play doctors saw in it good dramatic possibilities, and it was adapted for the legitimate stage and played on Broadway by Ethel Barrymore. Then in course of time it became a photoplay, under the direction of Maurice Elvey, with Elizabeth Risdon, now playing in a New York production, at the head of the cast. The theme of the picture is one of the most dramatic which it is posible to conceive. The heroine is injured in an automobile accident, and the injury threatens to have fatal results. The doctors inform her husband that she has only two years to live. She overhears and her problem is then to crowd as much as possible into the two years.

Katherine Crichton marries the scientist, John Staffurth, a very busy man. The young wife soon finds she has plenty of time to kill, and she welcomes the visits of the friend of her girlhood, Richard Furness. John is only too glad for the young man to "amuse" her, and is quite distressed when Furness is called abroad. Katherine knows that her continued friendship with a man who is still passionately in love with her is scarcely wise. She corresponds with him, however, and Furness treasures her letters.

A slight injury she has received in an accident has serious developments. Specialists are called in, and though they reassure their patient, they tell her husband privately that the worst is to be feared and that his wife has at the most only two years to live. John determines that she shall never know the truth.

But Katherine does know, for she has been suspicious of the doctors and has listened at the door. Now she resents John's lack of faith in her pluck and will not let him know she has overheard the terrible verdict.

So when Furness returns from abroad, more in love with her than ever, she gives herself up to the pleasure of his company, into which her unsuspecting husband persists in throwing her. She does not, however, like the idea that her letters have been kept, and Furness promises to give them back to her if she will come to the opera with him. And now John's blindness nearly brings about a supreme tragedy. At 11:30 that night he is to know if he has succeeded or failed in his experiments, and in his absorption he does not see that the woman he is working to save, is being driven to the brink of the precipice.

At a crucial moment in Furness' flat, Katherine draws back. A trifle has saved her; but once again malignant fate interposes and arranges that John shall have his door barred against his wife just when she most needs him. Contrasting Furness' warm adoration with her husbands indifference, Katherine hastily writes a last fatal letter of surrender.

The letter is never opened. On the morrow when John, tardily enlightened, is forcing Furness to give up the packet of letters, including the one whose seal has not yet been broken, Katherine is hearing from her doctor that her husband has discovered a cure for her and that there is a lifetime of health in front of her.

When John comes in, radiant over the good news, his wife shrinks from him, for she knows of his visit to Furness. She has no thought but for the letters. When she finds that the packet is complete, that the last mad one has not been opened, either by Furness or by her husband, she is overwhelmed with emotion. Brokenly, she gives the letter to John, but he tears it to pieces unread and holds out his arms to his wife.

for days atferwards. The set was a complete wreck, and the clothing of the actors torn to shreds before the director gave the signal, "Earthquake!" which brought the whole scene tumbling about their ears.

The contrast between these riotous scenes and the calm of the following day upon the Presidio, where the thousands fled from flames and falling wreckage, is wonderfully reproduced in the picture. Hundreds of people were employed in the making of this scene, and the individual groups of refugees were as carefully studied by the director as if each group were composed of principal players. They are deserving of close attention, but pass almost unnoticed in our interest in the reunion of Lola and the derelict whom her interference has saved.

A brief outline of the main threads of the story runs in this way:

When Oliver Curwell disowned his son Roger because the boy declined to abandon art and go into business with his father, Roger fell into dissolute habits, going gradually from bad to worse until he was a human derelict wandering around the streets of San Francisco. In his art-student days a girl of the name of Olga had shown selfish interest in him, believing he would inherit his father's millions, but when Roger was cast off by his father the girl abandoned her pretense of affection.

One evening Roger wanders into "Sailor's Rest," a saloon and dance hall run by "Hell" Morgan. That very day Morgan had hung behind his bar a work of "art" which the bleary-eyed Roger gan resented this remark, and had pretty well beaten up young Curwell when Lola Morgan, the apple of "Hell" Morgan's eye, rushed to the scene and saved Roger's life by her interference. Morgan's daughter continued to befriend Roger and prevailed, finally, upon her father to give young Curwell the job of playing the piano for the "spielers" in the dance hall.

Eventually Roger started to paint a portrait of Lola, and love finally entered their hearts. To all this Sleter, a tough politician, objected, for the reason that he coveted Morgan's daughter and wanted to be "her man." Thus matters rest when Olga, from the artist's quarter, leads a party of friends to "Sailor's Rest" on a slumming tour. There she recognizes Roger at the piano and sends for him—her interest having been recreated by the fact that she had read in the newspapers of the sudden death of Oliver Curwell, who had willed his millions to his son.

Roger joins Olga's party, and the old days are so vividly recalled that he forgets his love for Lola Morgan, and makes affectionate advances which Olga designingly reciprocates. Lola sees the incident, goes to the "box party" of slummers and takes physical toll of both Roger and Olga. As a result of the incident, Roger leaves "Sailor's Rest" and Lola, in jealous retaliation, resigns herself to the overjoyed Sleter.

But when Sleter attempts to collect his reward, Lola rebels and strenuously resists his advances. The tumult of [illegible] furniture, in Lola's dashes upstairs, and in an encounter with Sleter is shot and fatally wounded. Lola manages to drive Sleter from her room and escapes, dragging her father down a fire escape.

Hardly have they reached the ground when the terrors of San Francisco earthquake and fire break loose. "Sailor's Rest" tumbles in a burning heap. Helping her father as best she can, Lola finally reaches the Presidio, where refugees are assembling from all over the city. Her ather is near death and she makes im as comfortable as circumstances ill permit and seeks a doctor in the owd.

Roger has been drawn back to Sailor's Rest" by his love for Lola, nd when he finds the place a mass ruins, he likewise wends his way the Presidio. THIS Red Feather Photoplay written by J. G. Alexander and produced by Charles Swickard, is based upon the old Hindoo law of "Suttee," by which the wives of an Indian dignitary were condemned to die when he died, by being burnt tonished to see Indore, who has escaped and made her way to him. He consents to take her away with him. He then drinks from the poisoned wine, and falls dead. Indore lifts the glass to her lips to die with him, but it is snatched from her hand by the native, who carries her back to his prince. She is reduced to slavery in the harem as punishment. Duane fulfills his promise and takes the child of Indore and his friend to England with him, to be brought up as his father's niece.

Years pass, and Agatha has developed into a beautiful woman. She is reading a message from Duane with a heavy heart, for it says that he is on his way home with his bride, Florence, to join his father on his journey to India, where he had recently been appointed English resident at a native court.

En route to India they meet the Grand Duke Alexis, a suave diplomat with a knowledge of women. He has known Florence in the past, and there seems to be a strong feeling between the two.

Florence has become jealous of Agatha. Alexis, perceiving this, forces her to think that her husband loves the Indian girl. She yields to his attentions and easily justifies her actions.

Arrived in India, Alexis surreptitiously informs Agatha that her mother is not dead as she had been told, and that she might see her if she would meet him at midnight. Eagerly the girl consents and promises to keep the arrangement a secret.

Guided by a native to the palace, Agatha confronts the prince and anxiously asks for her mother, but he cunningly parries her question. Looking at her with his evil, lustful smile, the man draws near and she, comprehending his meaning, retreats in terror until she is crouching by a divan. Struggling fiercely, the girl finally utters a scream of horror as he slowly overpowers her.

Indore, in a room nearby, engaged in fanning one of the harem wives, hears the scream and slips quietly into the other room, steals the dagger of the guard sleeping at the door, and stabs the prince. Fatally wounded, he gradually crumples to the floor, and Indore, with mother instinct, recognizes her child and clasps her close in her arms. Thus the guard finds them and the dead man.

Jang Sahib, the hunchback advisor of the prince, rushes into the room when he hears the guard's frightened shriek, and orders the native to spread the news that their prince has been murdered by an English infidel. Soon there is a great riot of natives and many white men's lives are lost before the people are subdued.

Captain Duane, alarmed at the disappearance of Agatha and discovering that she has gone to the palace, hastens at full speed in that direction with a few horsemen. But Jang Sahib tells Duane that Agatha has not honored them with her presence. The soldier is forced to leave, and enters the mob of mad natives and fights his way desperately with his sabre through the human mass.

Indore steals the guard's knife.

Agatha is accused by Jang Sahib of the Prince's murder.

Meanwhile, Florence, convinced by Alexis of her husband's infidelity, has left on a steamer with him, leaving a note for Duane. With this shock, together with the disappearance of Agatha, of whom they have never heard a word, both the captain and his father are broken down with grief.

While crossing the great Indian desert in Jang Sahib's caravan, Indore, embracing Agatha for the last time, jumps from the camel over the cliff as they are passing. She is later picked up, almost dead, by some traders. She has lost her memory of the past.

Arrived at the Walled City of the desert, Jang Sahib compels Agatha to marry him. But on the wedding-day the Indian blood in the girl suddenly gains the upper hand. She grasps the hunchback by the throat and slowly chokes him to death.

Duane, crushed by despair, has grown to shun the haunts of white men. He wanders into a native dive, patronized by beggars and all sorts of evil characters. Sitting at a table, he is startled by the sight of a dancing girl, who is just finishing her Oriental dance in the centre of the room. In open-mouthed wonder, he staggers to her and, in spite of the curses of the people, leads her out. It is Indore whom he mistakes for Agatha.

She does not even remember her child's name, but when left alone in a bedroom at Duane's home, she is

BISON Two-Reel Drama, written and adapted for the screen by Edna Schley and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, with Harry Carey starred in his favorite role of "Cheyenne Harry," supported by Claire Du Bray.

CAST.

"Cheyenne" Harry	Harry Carey
Dora Mason	Claire Du Bray

HARRY CAREY returns to his favorite screen character which he calls "Cheyenne Harry," the "good badman" of Western days that are no more. This picture was written for him by Edna Schley, and directed by Fred A. Kelsey, who has been so successful in reproducing the real Western atmosphere on the screen. Claire Du Bray plays the role of a girl upon whom fate has been too hard. Cheyenne saves her while she is masquerading as a boy, and then her wit saves him when she confesses to being a woman. Here is the story:

Dora Mason, dressed in boy's garb, has just lost her last nugget playing the roulette wheel, and "Cheyenne" Harry, never guessing her to be a girl, notices that something serious is wrong. Unconsciously sympathizing with her, he tells her to wait outside the saloon for him and begins to play the game. Suddenly he shoots out the lights, grabs the stakes and the banker's pile and dashes for the door. But failing to see the girl, he rushes to his horse and rides down the road.

At dawn the following day, Harry is resting from his strenuous riding, for he has eluded his pursuers. Suddenly hearing a noise, he calls "Halt," but the figure continuing to run, he fires. Dora falls, and he, recognizing her scream as a woman's, is horrified. He runs down from his hiding-place to carry her into shelter. She tries to be brave, but is very much frightened at the sight of her own blood. He places her on his horse and takes her to a deserted shack, where he binds her wound and attempts to soothe her as well as he can. She tells him she was left alone when her father, a miner, died, and has dressed as a boy, for it was easier than being a girl in the desert. Realizing the seriousness of her injury, he leaves her to ride to the town, in spite of her efforts to stop him from taking such a risk with his life.

Entering the saloon, he forces the bartender to give him a bottle of whisky and then grabs the man's apron and dashes away. He speeds back to the shack, well aware that he is being followed by the cowboys who have been warned by the saloon roustabout.

Instructing the girl to stick a pole with the apron tied to it out the window as soon as he has had time to escape, "Cheyenne" reluctantly bids her good-by.

The cowboys starting to fire at the shack see the flag of truce and cautiously enter the building. There they find the girl who pretends to faint and, immediately conquered by her winsomeness, they forget they are hunting a criminal and carry her carefully back to the town. "Cheyenne" sees the men leaving with Dora and smiles rather wistfully at her cleverness.

"THE LAST CIGARETTE"

THIS is the beginning of the much heralded new series, which is being produced by George Bronson Howard from his own stories called "Yorke Norroy, Diplomatic Agent," published originally in the "Popular Magazine" and then in book form. The scenario for this first adventure, which is called "The Last Cigarette," was prepared by Luther Reed, but the picture was directed by Mr. Howard in person. Kingsley Benedict is starred in the role of the special agent of the U. S. Government, and has the best chance of his career in the series, of which he makes the most. The cast will change for every episode of the series, with the exception of Jay Belasco, who has the role of the confidant and assistant of Norroy. The high promise of this first adventure will be amply fulfilled in the subsequent ones.

FIRST adventure of the new series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," written and produced by George Bronson Howard. Scenario by Luther Reed. Starring Kingsley Benedict.

CAST.

Yorke Norroy	Kingsley Benedict
Carson Huntley, his "left hand"	Jay Belasco
Minna Ober	Vola Smith
Her father, a murderer	Malcolm Blevins
Saxonian Chief	Clyde Benson

In the Bergenschloss, the centre of Saxonia's secret service, the heads of the service are in consultation over the fate of one of their men who has failed in his mission to a South American republic, on account of the watchfulness of Yorke Norroy, a diplomatic agent, and the cleverest man in the American secret service, who poses as a mere man of fashion. The Saxonian chiefs declare that he has lived long enough, and lay plans for his destruction. Minna Ober, whose father has committed murder and been sentenced to death, comes to them to plead for clemency for him. The chief sends for the man, and offers him a chance for his life, if he will dispose of Yorke Norroy. Ober accepts the commission gratefully, and prepares his plans for the trapping of the American.

It is the evening of the reception of the Saxonian embassy in Washington, some time later. The papers have given publicity to the mysterious escape of Max Ober, and Huntley Carson, the friend and confidant of Yorke Norroy, who is known as his "left hand," warns Norroy that Ober is after him. They attend the reception together, and recognize Ober in the crowd. Carson is worried, but Norroy is imperturbable. He is apparently absorbed in a flirtation with a charming stranger, who in reality is Minna Ober. Her father is counting upon her to lure Norroy to an empty house, where preparations have been made for his reception. Minna is successful in interesting Norroy, and accepts his escort to her home. She takes him to the house, where Ober and his men are waiting for her. Norroy is roughly pushed into the room and falls. He rises, and brushes off his clothes, annoyed by the dust upon them, and oblivious of the threatening looks of the men.

Ober informs him that unless he discloses the secret history of his defeat of their plans in the South American republic, he will be put to death instantly. He insists upon Norroy's sitting down at the table and writing out the story of the transaction in detail. Norroy complies, but asks permission to smoke a cigarette. He takes out his case and sees in its polished surface, that Ober gives directions to his men to shoot him when he has finished writing. He lights a cigarette, and smokes it in the intervals of writing the story which they demand. He lays the cigarette on the edge of the table and proceeds. At the critical instant the cigarette explodes, and Norroy makes his escape. When the smoke of the explosion has cleared away, Ober and his daughter read on the paper "Tell your chief that Yorke Norroy sends Max Ober back to the Bergenschloss to pay the penalty."

Getting Inside of the Screen Magazine

Scenes above show how Frankfurters are made.

Below a Hawaiian damsel

FOR some reason or other, an "inside story" always finds willing ears. Whether the "inside story" has to do with a political intrigue in Hindoostan or the high cost of asparagus tips in Timbuctoo matters not. The mere fact that there's an element of secrecy proves the magnet to mere man.

So, this is an "inside story." It is prompted by half a hundred queries from patrons of the Universal Screen Magazine, urging the producers of that new educational feature to enlighten them as to just how it is compiled.

These seekers for information pertinently observe that such varied subjects are embodied in the periodical in films that dozens of cameramen must be employed in the work. They are correct in the assumption. Dozens of cameramen are continually on the lookout for subjects of sufficient merit to warrant use in the Universal Screen Magazine, and their "home stations" include every town of any size in the world.

To be exact, there are more than 190 motion picture photographers on the Universal Screen Magazine's staff, and each one of them has contributed, at one time or another, to either the Screen Magazine or the Animated Weekly. The risks they run to obtain their film is a story of itself. Volumes could be written of the intrepid "movie" photographer.

The Screen Magazine is made up each week with all the care, if not more, that is exercised by the editor of a standard publication. Probably thirty or forty subjects are received by express or parcel post, and these must be gone over by competent critics. The timely and most interesting subjects are selected, and, after further editing finally find their way into the Universal Screen Magazine.

Usually five or six subjects comprise the edition, but the number is by no means fixed and is increased or decreased, according to the importance of the "stories" involved.

It is quite unusual to find more than one subject from one locality in one issue of the Magazine, the policy of its editors being to give representation to as many sections of the country as is possible. Screen Magazine No. 9, scheduled for release on March 9, is a striking example of this system.

This issue embodies the following subjects:

BEE CULTURE, demonstrated by Dr. Edward F. Bigelow, at his Connecticut apiaries.

HARVESTING ICE, in the upper reaches of the Hudson River.

HOW FRANKFURTERS ARE MADE. A motion picture of the activities in a Brooklyn, N. Y., sausage factory.

PERPETUATING DEWEY'S IMAGE. Ulric S. Dunbar, noted sculptor, making the death mask of hero admiral. Washington, D. C.

ANIMATED SCULPTURE by Willie Hopkins. California.

The frankfurter subject was filmed with the co-operation of inspectors assigned by the New York Department of Health. These officials are producing splendid results in their rigid supervision of the manufacture and sale of food products in the greatest city in the world. And their work is excellently shown in this picture.

The Bee Culture film was made at the suggestion of Mr. Perry of the Boy Scouts of America, who very kindly suggested to the editor of the Screen Magazine that Mr. Bigelow's apiaries would make an excellent subject. They did. At the same time an interesting Boy Scout picture was taken which was shown in the Animated Weekly. Willy Hopkins' animated sculpture is a department unique in the extreme. In the present subject he has evolved a beautiful Hawaiian maiden as shown in the central illustration, from a hard boiled egg. His peculiar method of handling clay on his modeling board before the camera has made one of the biggest hits thus far shown on the screen.

Novel Red Feather Double Bill

Universal Releases a Five-Reel Show Consisting of Two Distinct Pictures With Eight Widely Advertised Stars.

THE Red Feather for the week of March fifth introduces a real novelty in motion pictures. It is an innovation in film land, which is the invention of the Universal Film Company, the organization which is always there with something new. Instead of a five-reel feature with one plot, and one set of characters, there will be released two features, one in three reels, and the other in two. These two pictures will be advertised on the same poster, and treated in all respects as if they were one.

The result of this scheme for a double bill is that at least eight reels of splendid film entertainment, with all the padding cut out, are presented within the compass of a five-reeler. Several stars of international reputation, and a score of featured players will appear in these five reels. The two stories themselves, while equal to each other in interest, are so utterly different in subject and treatment that it is safe to say so much solid enjoyment has never been packed into five thousand feet of film before.

Every day the protests of the motion picture fan against the unconscionable padding of a short picture, the ruthless stretching of a slender plot to make it fit the arbitrary length of five reels, rise louder and louder and more insistently. Yet many an exhibitor still feels that he must cater to the desire of his patrons for a so-called "feature film." Here is a brand new way out of the difficulty. Either of these stories contains matter enough for five thousand feet footage. The first one, in particular, is such a splendid piece of work, such a logically built plot, that it would have been the easiest thing in the world to add two reels of detail to it, and bring it to the required length all by itself. The second contains a real surprise in the last few feet, with action and thrills enough to make a couple of ordinary "Westerns."

The three-reeler is called "The Girl Who Lost," and no less than three screen beauties appear in its cast. Cleo Madison, one of the most popular actresses of the films, has the role of an actress, who plays a vampire part, off the stage, in order to be revenged upon the man who has wronged her little sister. She sets to work to ruin the son of this man, and it is her tragedy that her own heart becomes involved in the process. The little sister is played by charming Robert Wilson, who has a stellar role all to herself on this week's program, in "The Amazing Adventure," and whose sudden rise to fame is told on another page of this issue. The fiancee of the young man, who is almost ruined by Cleo in her desperate scheme of revenge, is enacted by pretty Molly Malone. Three more varied, and more lovely types of womanhood have certainly never appeared before in the same photoplay.

Besides the three actresses, there are Jack Nelson, who plays the role of the young man, Daniel Leighton, as the father, and Lydia Yeamans Titus, in the small part of the landlady. Surely this is an unusual cast for a three-reel photoplay, and the details of settings, direction, costume, etc., will be found fully as remarkable.

Cleo Madison and Roberta Wilson in "The Girl Who Lost."

Neal Hart in "Border Wolves."

The second part of the double bill is called by the promising title of "Border Wolves," and the picture lives up to the promise of its name in every respect. Neal Hart, who has been appearing with great regularity on the program lately, is the featured player, Joe Rickson, who will be remembered for some of the most daring work ever performed for the camera, is the villain.

Neal Hart is in charge of the principal role, and as he has spent his life doing in earnest just the sort of thing that he now does in mimicry for the camera, he puts over this part with a naturalness that makes it impossible to think that he is acting at all.

The Universal heads feel sure that this new plan of a double bill will meet with the approval of both exhibitors and public. Dissatisfaction with the padded feature has been growing so rapidly that something must be done to check it. Yet the habit of the "Five-reeler" is strong, and though it is an undeniable fact that the supply of stories which really demand five thousand feet of film to tell them properly, is anything but equal to the demand for them, the exhibitor likes to advertise the showing of the so-called "feature." Here is a solution of the problem, and a way out of the difficulty which meets all requirements, and yet furnishes pictures of natural length. It is to be tried out in the week of March 12, and if it meets with the expected success from exhibitors and public, it will be repeated, and the days of the padded, dragged-out five-reel picture with the two-reel plot will be numbered.

"The Amazing Adventure"

REX Two-Reel Drama, written by Eleanor M. Ingram, published in "The Red Book," adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates, and produced by Burton George, with Roberta Wilson in the lead. A picture with a really novel plot.

CAST.

Eleanor Ferrol	Roberta Wilson
Maid	Miss Gillette
Geoffrey Harland	Charles Perley
Detective	Hayward Mack

Eleanor explains to the tramp that this is his home.

A MOTION picture with a distinctly novel plot is "The Amazing Adventure," which was written originally by Eleanor M. Ingram, published in "The Red Book," adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates, and produced by Burton George. Roberta Wilson and Charles Perley played the leads for him in a two-reeler which holds the interest from start to finish. Here is the story.

Because of her fabulous wealth, Eleanor Ferrol is beseiged by suitors, but she will have none of them. One day a detective in her employ comes to her home and gives her some information which she seems to regard highly. She orders her motor and makes a trip through the park. She approaches a shabbily dressed man, Geoffrey Harland, and suggests that he waive an introduction and dine with her. He does so, wonderingly.

After dinner she proposes that he marry her and to this he consents, still wondering and half protesting. That night she makes him promise that he will never speak of their marriage. They start on a honeymoon. Harland is soon in love with her and tries to solve the "why" of it all, but cannot seem to arrive at any solution.

One day he sees her talking to a man at a hotel, but she disclaims knowing any one at the hotel. This angers him. He accuses the man later of knowing his wife, but he also disclaims any knowledge of the wife. The man is the detective who had been in the employ of Eleanor some time previous to the marriage.

She feigns illness and goes to her room followed by the now angry Harland. Then she confesses that she has loved him since the time when as a small child he had saved her life during one of his prospecting trips. She tells him that she had employed the detective to follow him continuously, and so it all ends happily as he is now deeply in love with her.

NO MORE "WATER STUFF" FOR CRAMPTON, WHO CAN'T SWIM.

A FEW days ago Howard Crampton, who plays Capt. Cronin in the new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," was cast for a part which would require him to swim in the Pacific Ocean, a few miles from the Universal City studios. He promptly declined and gave as an explanation the following:

Crampton played the part of "Captain Harding" in the Universal production, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," the marine portion of which was filmed in the Bahamas. In one scene of the big film play Crampton was supposed to swim from a boat to the shore, although he cannot swim a stroke. Finally the director arranged for a rope to be tied around the actor's body, and which was to be held taut so as to keep him on the surface of the water. Everything was going beautifully, when suddenly a big wave came along and tore the actor loose from the rope and he was dashed upon a corral reef. This scene is shown in the picture.

The next thing the director saw was "Captain Harding" running up and down the reef with his hands and arms in the air and shouting wildly, "Never again! Never again!" And he has kept his word.

MEXICAN STARTS BULL FIGHT.

IN the production of "The Gates of Doom," the coming Red Feather, a large number of Mexicans in the garb of Hindoos were used at Universal City for one of the big street scenes. In addition, many animals were in evidence to give the correct atmosphere to the scene. A young bull was tied to a post and on the other side of the street, during the luncheon hour, the Mexicans were enjoying music from a mandolin and guitar. Suddenly one young native spied the bull. His sporting instincts were immediately aroused and he saw visions of becoming a matador.

A red shawl was taken from the shoulders of one of the women and across the street the Mexican hastened. There he flaunted the shawl at the bull which made two or three lunges at him when the director came along and hurried the man away.

"FATTY'S FEATURE FILLUM"

L—KO Burlesque of the movies themselves in two reels, directed by Fatty Voss, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone.

CAST.

Egbert	Fatty Voss
Blanch	Gladys Roach
Desmond	Richard Smith

Fatty is the featured actor of a motion picture company. He is dining in a restaurant when he sees a party of girls watching him, and decides to give them a treat. He sends them a card, on which is written, "I am featured at the Bazoo." Then he goes grandly out, trusting them to follow, which they do. He takes up a prominent position at the box office of the theatre, and watches the nickels as they go in.

First on the screen is the "Cuckoo Weekly," with battle scenes "Nowhere in France," and the launching of the Dreadnothing, guaranteed to do 470 knots per—haps, in which the bottle of champagne crashes through the hull when it is broken against it. Then come the latest styles from "Vug," which close the weekly. Then comes the great feature film, "Sunshine and Shadows." Egbert calls on his sweetheart, Blanche, little dreaming that a vulture is following in his wake. Desmond the villain has seen the maiden and is scheming to possess her. He goes to work to get hold of the mortgage on her home, in true villainous fashion, and then force her father to give him the girl, or he will take away their home. Egbert is outmanoeuvred at every turn, and the villain seizes the girl. So he goes to the side of the stream to commit his shriveled carcass to the waters.

The villain's cigarette sets fire to the house just at the critical moment, and the smoke is blown to Fatty. He suspects the trouble, and rushes to her assistance. He rescues her just in time. As the picture runs its exciting course, Fatty is seated in the audience between the two charmers of the restaurant, and explains the fine points to them, leading the applause at all the thrilling places.

"The Man of Mystery

IMP Two-Reel Drama, directed by King Baggot, who also plays the leading role. An unusual detective story of twin brothers.

Two policemen, standing on a street corner, observe a man acting strangely. When they attempt to question him they discover he is apparently suffering from amnesia. They take him to the station house and question him. He is unable to respond with an intelligent answer. Then a physician is called in, and he declares that the man, presumably a sailor, judging from his dress, is under the influence of an opiate.

The man is dressed like a sailor, but his hands are very soft, and his skin is of an odd sort of tan. The fellow keeps brushing his hand over his lips. When King, the detective, is called in, he says that the man had a mustache a short while ago. King discloses one complication after another. He also believes that there is a crime back of the strange man's

By W. A. BACH.

OTTAWA, Ont.—The first moving picture railway car that ever traveled about Canada will commence a tour of the Government railway system in support of the safety first campaign. Hon. Frank Cochrane has authorized the fitting up of a car for the exhibition of moving pictures dealing with the dangers of taking unnecessary chances in the performance of railway duties, and the film will be shown to the employees over the entire Government System. The car will be in charge of Safety Engineer J. E. Long, and will spend a week at each of the terminals and divisional points. It is announced that as a result of the safety first campaign there has been a considerable decrease in the number of both employees and passengers killed. The number of fatalities dropped from 19 in 1915 to 8 in 1916.

MONTREAL, Que.—The officers and members of the Canadian Motion Picture Association held a successful dinner at the Windsor Hotel on Thursday evening. There was a large attendance of "movie" men, interested in all branches of the industry, and the dinner was a big success. The dinner was the first of a series to be held during the winter months.

The Arthur Drapeau Circuit of Quebec City, of which Mr. J. Bedard is the general manager, announces that the new Princess Theatre in Riviere de Loup will soon be ready for a grand opening. They will be able to seat seven hundred people, as the theatre is 48x126 ft., and contains eight boxes and one balcony. There is a fully-equipped stage so that they may present the latest musical comedies. He has two new 6B Power Machines, and they are building the front of marble stand glass. When finished, it will be one of the most beautiful houses in the province.

The Midway Theatre turned away hundreds of people with the Bluebird production "The Mysterious Mrs. M." and have already asked for a return date on this marvelous feature. This pictures features Mary MacLaren.

The Universal Hockey Team representing the Montreal Office, played a tie game with the St. Denis Theatre last Thursday, Feb. 8, at the Victoria Rink.

The Exchangemen's Association of Montreal held an informal get-together banquet at the Windsor Hotel on February 23d.

The Canadian Universal Film Co., of Montreal, report that from all prospects "The Voice on the Wire," the new searial, is sure to be a wonderful success and that it will outdo any other serial which has been shown in that territory.

The Lux Palace of this city has reopened under the management of Mr. Fufiange, a well-known exhibitor in the Quebec Territory. Universal service will be the feature of his widely advertised program.

The Connaught Theatre, one of the most beautiful picture houses of this city, is under the new management of genial Johnny Smythe whose smile and a square deal to all motto, is the means of a steady welcome to all the Exchangemen. Mr. Smythe has selected the Universal program as the most ideal and popular for his house and has contracted for the first run of Red Feather Features.

TORONTO, Ont.—The Strand Theatre of Toronto signed up a contract with the Bluebird Photoplays under Mr. McKenny of the Toronto office to supply them with Bluebird features regularly during the coming months.

Mr. E. A. Langley, formerly General Sales Manager of the Pathe Film Co. in Canada, and latterly with the Canadian Auto Sales as General Organizer, has joined the Universal force to take charge of the Vancouver office in Canada. Mr. Langley is a business man of the new efficiency type with a splendid record and there is no doubt that his new appointment will meet with great success.

Regent Theatre of Ottawa instituted a new idea by having a Bluebird Week, starting February 19th, using "The Man Who Took a Chance," with Franklyn Farnum, and "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," starring Mary MacLaren. According to latest advices received from this house, the idea has been most successful.

Blind Man	John Cook

Gale is a leading suffragette and is addressing a meeting when she catches sight of an advertisement in which a marriage broker advertises his "Insurance Against Spinsterhood." The terms are five dollars down and five dollars a week until $1,000 has been paid. The meeting breaks up in disorder. Bill is the broker, and he is in love with his secretary Lillian. Gale breaks in upon them, and pays her thousand down in one lump. Bill has to find a husband for her. He goes out and offers a dollar to each man he sees, a cripple, a fruit vendor, a blind man. All however, after one look at Gale, refuse. Bill is in despair. Gale calls a policeman and says that Bill has taken her money and failed to provide her with a husband. The policeman says that he must live up to the terms of the contract, and he is standing up to be married to Gale, when Lillian rushes in and claims him. All this time a mysterious character has been watching outside the door, continually changing his disguise. Now he comes in and Gale recognizes Milt, her long-lost husband. She demands the money back from Bill, but he says that he has provided a man for her after all.

CAST.

Marshall Gibbons	T. D. Crittenden
Silas Hawkins	Fred Montague
Good-for-Nothing Gallagher	William V. Mong
Sliver	Rex Rosselli
Marcia Young	Roberta Wilson
Howard Gray	Paul Byron

Gibbons, an author, is sitting on the porch of a country hotel. He says that there is a story in everything, and the landlord disagrees. He says there is no story in the funeral of Good-For-Nothing Gallagher, which is passing. Silas Hawkins says he is mistaken and tells the story.

Gallagher loved Marcia Young, but she refused him, so he took to drink. She accepted Howard Gray, who had organized a town militia company. He would not have Gallagher, as he said his was no "Coxey's army." They were celebrating the Fourth of July, when an alarm came that the convicts in the prison had broken out of jail. Gray declared that it would be suicide to fight such desperate men, but Gallagher knocks him down, takes his uniform and leads the boys to fight the convicts. He is killed by the treachery of their leader, after they have surrendered. Marcia turned against Gray when she saw his yellow streak appear. As Gallagher is brought back, she bursts into tears as she realizes that she has accepted the wrong man. That is the story in the funeral of Gallagher.

"THE MYSTERIOUS CITY."

Powers Dorsey Educational Split Reel.

Imperial Peking is the mysterious city, which was photographed by Doctor Dorsey, first showing a panoramic view, and later details, such as the main gate, the National Museum, formerly the Imperial Palace, with some of the Chinese curios inside it, the Summer Palace, with the famous Porcelain Pagoda, erected for a Mongolian prince.

"A SOLDIER'S DREAM."

Big U Drama.

John, an army lieutenant, is in love with the general's daughter. They are stationed at a remote post on the frontier. William dreams one night that with the assistance of the girl he places mines all around the fort. Then he dreams that the Indians attack the fort and that by pressing a button he sets off the mines, which blow the savages to pieces. When the fort is really threatened with attack, John tells the general of his plan. The officer is impressed and rewards him with the hand of his daughter.

"THE HUMAN FLAME."

Laemmle Drama.

With Roberta Leonard and Margarita Fischer.

Bob is a fisherman, and because of his terrible temper is known as the "Human Flame." He leaves his native town, and arriving at another, he falls in love with Margaret, the village beauty. One day, when he has been drinking, he falls over a cliff and is badly hurt. He is taken to the house of Margaret, who nurses him back to health. He reforms under her influence and marries her.

Scenario by Maie B. Havey.
Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Nurse	Eileen Sedgwick
Fred	Eugene Walsh
Dr. Hurts	Ralph McComas
Doctor's wife	Margaret Whistler

Eileen Little, the prettiest nurse in Dr. Hurts' sanitarium, is seen coming from the hospital one day, by Fred Biggers, a rich young man. Smitten with love at first sight, Fred immediately goes to the hospital, but the door is slammed in his face. He hires the driver of a jitney bus to run over him. He is carried into the hospital, where Eileen is ordered to attend him.

Dr. Hurts is in love with Eileen himself, and soon becomes jealous of Fred. Fred commences to groan and the doctor orders an immediate operation. A specialist is summoned and Eileen and Fred are locked in the sick-room to prevent their escape.

Fred is rolled on a wheeled table, into the operating-room. Dr. Hurts enters with a most satisfied expression. Fred then places the doctor on the operating table and pours all the different anesthetics within reach over him. Fred informs the specialist that the patient is prepared for the operation, while he and Eileen jump into a taxi.

Detective Potts	Lee Moran
Eddie	Eddie Lyons
Olga	Edith Roberts
Russian Ambassador	Harry Nolan

The Russian Ambassador receives a message of warning that there will be an attempt on his life. His daughter Olga advises him to consult the famous Detective Potts. He sends for Potts, who is about to bestow a diploma on his pupil Eddie. They both go to the Ambassador's house. On the way they see a suspicious package dropped into a barrel, and take it for a bomb. The Ambassador has disguised himself. Eddie puts on a Russian disguise and Potts takes him for the anarchist. He follows him. Olga is terrified by the appearance of three men who insist upon seeing her father. He enters in his disguise and she does not know him. He snatches it off, just as Eddie and Potts enter, too. They recognize each other, and, peeping through the curtains, see the Ambassador about to raise a bottle to his lips. They rush in, only to learn that the three men have called to get the Ambassador's opinion of a substitute for Russian vodka. In Eddie's bundle is found a pair of woman's stockings.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

Issue No. 9.

Issue No. 9 of the Universal Screen Magazine begins with views of Doctor Edward F. Bigelow, the noted bee culturist who instructs Boy Scout Masters in the art of handling bees with security. The doctor has never been stung, though he has handled millions of bees.

Cutting ice on the upper reaches of the Hudson River for storage is the next subject. The third shows the making of frankfurters and sausages, under the rules of inspection of the New York Board of Health.

Casting the death mask of Admiral Dewey is then shown. The sculptor Ulric S. J. Dunbar, who made the masks of McKinley, Garfield and Grant, and many other famous men, is seen working on the mold, filling the cast with plaster of paris, and breaking the mold when it has hardened. A few minutes with Willie Hopkins and his animated sculpture close the reel.

"MR. FULLER PEP—HIS DAY OF REST."

Powers Animated Comedy Cartoon
Split Reel.

Mrs. Fuller Pep asks her husband to take mother-in-law for a ride in her wheeled chair. She has not walked a step in twenty years. Fuller decides to show her some real speed. The chair gets away from him and he is worried, but reassured when he finds she has not even wakened. He leaves her in the path of a Fierce Sparrow of eight cylinders, but the car leaves her chair unharmed. The chair runs into a sewer, and mother-in-law discovers that she can walk after all and chases Fuller to his home.

Billy and the wife, stranded in Thinville, decide to open a beauty parlor for thin women. He poses Sylvia as a wonderful example of before and after taking. He learns through a beauty column in the newspaper that watermelon seeds are a great fattener. He buys a large supply of melons and tacks up his beauty doctor sign.

A husband and wife in Thinville get notice that an eccentric uncle in his will has left orders to give the couple the wife's weight in gold. She decides to take the treatment of Billy. A young girl is engaged to a Turkish Prince, but when he sees how thin she is he refuses. She also takes the treatment.

After a few weeks both the thin women are thinner and poor Sylvia is fatter than ever. The husband of the thin woman, the father of the thin girl and the Turkish Prince all go to bring vengeance on Billy. A battle with the watermelons ensues and results in Billy and Sylvia taking passage for other parts.

her and the little woman, shabbily dressed, says she will come again with her husband.

Soon afterward, Genevieve meets Will and accepts his invitation to dinner. The following day, she is delighted to receive a note from him urging her to accompany him again. She has listened to his recital of how his wife henpecks him and nags at him from morning until night, and has the sincerest sympathy for "big, generous Will," as she still thinks him.

Martha enters the store with Will. Genevieve is horrified to think that this timid woman is Will's wife. She insists that Martha buy a $150 gown. Will is afraid to refuse.

Genevieve suggests to Jerry that he rent a larger store and that they go into business together and for life.

condition. By observation of the man, King is convinced that he is not a sailor, but a man of refined habits, that the tan skin was produced by a stain and that tattoo marks have been painted upon him.

Depough, a prosperous broker, has a twin brother, a sailor who has been the black sheep of the family. There was a clerk in Depough's office who had been discharged for dishonesty. Returning from sea and learning of the brother's good fortune, the twin joins with the clerk in conspiring to rob the broker by changing identities. They were to get the broker out of the way, then have the sailor impersonate him.

Doped cigars put the broker in a state of coma. Then the clerk with the aid of the sailor, took the insensible man to the latter's room where the metamorphosis was performed. They then turned the drugged man loose on the street and from a distant doorway observed the police take him away.

The sailor, dressed in his brother's clothes, went to the brokerage office where he and the ex-clerk cashed large checks. They were just about to leave when apprehended by King. The broker's sweetheart is told about what has happened and is brought to the office where, by her soothing presence, he regains control of his faculties. King retires, happy in the thought of another good work done.

Reynolds Films Story of the Sea

"MUTINY," the next Bluebird Photoplay, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, is the third Bluebird to be booked for a week's run at the Rialto Theatre, one of the largest motion picture houses in the world, which stands at the corner of Forty-second Street and Broadway, New York City. Myrtle Gonzalez, George Hernandez, and Val Paul have the leading roles in the production, many scenes of which were filmed on board a bark, on which the company took up their residence for some time.

Lynn Reynolds is a young director who has as little to do with an indoor studio as possible. He believes that one of the chief missions of the motion picture is to bring the freshness and beauty of the great world of outdoors, to those whose lives are passed within the narrow confines of city stars. All his Bluebird pictures have been made amid surroundings of natural grandeur or beauty. "The Girl of Lost Lake," for example, took the spectator to one of the most beautiful bodies of water in California, famous for its lovely lakes. "The End of the Rainbow" was filmed at Hume, in the centre of the Sequoias, the oldest living things on the face of the earth. The felling of one of these giants of the forest was an incident cleverly related to the plot. "God's Crucible" was pictured in the Grand Canyon of Arizona, one of the scenic glories of the world.

In "Mutiny" the director has tried to put some of the wildness, the limitless spaces, the irresistible power of old ocean on the screen, and he has succeeded to a remarkable degree. There are exciting incidents galore in the story, staged as it is upon a sailing vessel of the old type. There is a terrific fight between the hero and the brutal mate; a tremendous storm at sea, a shipwreck, and the rescue of the heroine during the progress of the tempest. Besides all these sensational features there is a love story of more than usual appeal, and a happy ending which will send spectators from the theatre feeling the satisfaction that comes from seing justice meeted out as it should be in all true romances.

Besides the three principals, several players who have already made their mark in Bluebird photoplays by excellent characterizations, have remarkably strong roles in this sea story. Jack Curtis is the overbearing old father of the heroine, who carries his daughter away by force for a voyage on his ship, when he finds that she has defied his wishes for her marriage to his mate. E. J. Brady, who will be remembered by all who saw "God's Crucible" for his splendid interpretation of the role of the valet, has the part of the hunchback cook on board the vessel, who succeeds in protecting the heroine from the advances of the mate, favored by her father. The earlier scenes are filled with those inimitable touches which mark a Reynolds' picture, for this young director has the "picture sense" developed to an amazing degree. He makes the camera say things to us which would be lost on the legitimate stage, which would be impossible of presentation through any other medium. He has studied the possibilities of the film as few others have done, and the happy result of his researches is lavishly displayed in his productions.

INTERMOUNTAIN LETTER

By EDWARD ARMSTRONG.

OUT of 32 Motion Picture Theatres in Denver, Universal is now represented in 26 houses, a new house being added last week, namely, The Isis Theatre, who have booked two-reel L-Ko comedies. This places the full Universal program in one block, as Mr. Haagen of the Iris Theatre has first run of the entire Universal program with the exception of the two-reel L-Kos.

The new Webber Theatre, one of the largest and finest suburban houses in the city of Denver, will open February 1, with the Bluebird feature, "The Bugler of Algiers." They will use a full Universal program and the regular Bluebird releases.

At the present time a total of 14 houses in the city of Denver are using "The Purple Mask" serial. Each week the number increases.

MR. GEORGE MAYNE, manager, advises that Mr. Wm. Swanson has decided to mave Bluebirds from the Strand to the American Theatre. The latter seats 3,000, is one of the finest in the West, and Bluebirds have earned their advancement to their new home through popular demand in the Mormon City.

Mr. Mehesy of the Mehesy Theatre, first-run Universal house, states that he broke all records wth "Liberty," and has about decided to run this serial over again.

MINNEAPOLIS NEWS.

A FEW days ago an appreciative exhibitor by the name of A. E. Dubeau, Sauk Center, Minn., entertained the entire staff of the Universal Film Co., Minneapolis, at a luncheon. Mr. Dubeau claims that it is the Universal program that made him successful and he wanted to show his appreciation to the boys and girls by giving them a treat, which surely was appreciated.

The luncheon took place at the Vendome Hotel, and through these columns the staff of the company desires to express their thanks to Mr. Dubeau, who is considered a dandy good fellow and a mighty successful exhibitor.

NEW "FILM-FLAM" GAME ALLEGED BY POLICE.

"MOVING picture director from New York, organizing new picture company in Toronto, wants clever individuals—amateurs—to work in pictures immediately."

An investigation by the police of the above advertisement, which appeared in an evening paper last week, resulted yesterday in the arrest of one R. E. Taylor of Chicago, alias T. R. E. Woodward, of New York, on a charge of fraud. Detectives Levitt and Taylor arrested the man yesterday.

What They Think of the Universal Program

FROM LOSS TO A PROFIT.

Universal Film Exchange, Inc.,
Charlotte, N. C.

Gentlemen—I beg to thank you for the hearty co-operation extended me and shall be more than glad to avail myself of the excellent ideas presented by you.

In the past six months my business has taken on such a healthy growth that I find it necessary to increase the capacity of my house; and this I attribute solely to the Universal Program and the Red Feather productions, which I have been running exclusively. The hearty co-operation and help rendered me by the Charlotte office combined with the superiority of the productions have enabled me to build up my business from a loss to a profit paying basis, and I will be glad to have you refer any skeptical exhibitor to me.

Thanking you all for the personal interest you have taken in me and my theatre, and wishing you and the Universal the best success, I beg to remain, Yours very truly,

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS.

Mr. Carl Laemmle,
President Universal Film Co.

Dear Sir—Kindly allow me to express my ideas about the Universal Program.

The Universal program is superior to all others for its refinement, artistic beauty, and superb scenery.

The Broadway and Red Feather features are very fine.

About the serials, "Lucille Love," "The Broken Coin" and "Peg o' the Ring," featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, were enjoyed immensely. These serials were very fine.

Both Mr. Ford and Miss Cunard, I am very fond of, because I admire them most ardently.

Now, "Liberty" featuring Miss Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo, is witnessed with care, devotion and with heart-interest. The Scenic is where the Universal Program is shown. The management of this theatre wishes to state that this "Liberty" serial is the best ever produced. "Liberty" ends February 14th, on the same night "The Purple Mask," featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, begins.

Very sincerely yours,
WENDELL PHILLIPS JACKSON.

THE BEST THERE IS.

Laemmle Film Service,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen—Just a few lines of appreciation to you for the way you have treated me this wek. After having to cancel an extra feature which I had booked for Monday and Tuesday, I called you up at the last minute and asked you to help me out, which you did in grand style. I want to thank you for the feature you sent me, "The Barriers of Society," and must say it is one of the best pictures I have had in a long time. The first day I ran it was Monday, and during the exciting scenes of the picture I thought my patrons would tear the house down. The consequences were they all passed out of the theatre with a big smile of satisfaction on their faces and last night (Tuesday) I had the biggest Tuesday night's business in the history of the house. Now I think this proves conclusively that the Universal service is the "Best what am." I hope this will please you to know that I am enjoying a good business, and again thanking you for your excellent service, I am,

Yours very truly,

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

AN Exhibitor wrote the Editor the other day that he had no trouble "putting 'em over," even without doing a lot of stunts.

Mebbe so. Mebbe so.

But if he isn't the exception that proves the rule then why aren't all Exhibitors riding around in their Buzz-Arrow limousines; and why does any Exhibitor ever have to shut up shop?—answer me that, Mr. Lucky Exhibitor.

The facts are, as we have frequently remarked, these stunts are intended for Exhibitors who NEED the stimulus of novel advertising, because of the high cost of newspaper space, of their location, or for any one of a dozen very good reasons not necessary to mention.

That they do get business for this class of Exhibitors we know, or we would not continue this page week after week. And at that we are honest in our belief that these stunts will help ANY EXHIBITOR OF ANY THEATRE, NO MATTER WHERE HE IS LOCATED.

If a circus did not post your town in advance; did not advertise in the papers; did not have a street parade or use any other form of advance publicity, how many people would know it was in town, and how many people would travel out to the lot or crowd into the big top?

These stunts are an inexpensive form of advertising, and every sucessful showman knows—THAT ADVERTISING PAYS.

THE week of March 12 is noteworthy for two reasons. One is the new idea in feature plays, the Red Feather Double Bill, which combines a three-reeler of stage life, and a two-reel Western in five reels of the most concentrated entertainment ever offered in that length of film before. The other is the release of the first episode of the new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which is emphatically the best yet. Both of these events deserve special advertising. The following stunt, which we frankly confess to be borrowed, would be a sure-fire way of drawing attention to the double attraction. Run a slide after each show for several days before that upon which you propose to show the double Red Feather. On the slide have nothing but "Watch the way the wind blows on such and such a date." On that date send up several toy balloons, with passes to the showing of the Red Feather attached to them. Let the children know by means of posters that any one finding one of the passes will be admitted to the show, and you will have them chasing the balloons all over the town to see where they land. Attach red feathers to them also to make the stunt still more effective.

THE campaign book for the new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," is just crammed with suggestions for putting over the serial, which certainly needs only a small shove to start itself. But here is just one more for the showing of the first episode. It is called "The Oriental Death Punch." Announce through slides, run the day before, that you will admit free of charge to the first episode of the serial the first ten people who come and whisper to the cashier the magic syllables, "Sen Si Yao" (that is the Japanese for "Oriental Death Punch.") Also announce that you will give a prize of two admissions, or one admission, just as you prefer, to the serial, to the first person who can tell you the meaning of the Japanese words.

DON'T forget the second adventure of the series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," called "The Clash of Steel," which is released as an Imp on March 16. There is a tremendous duel fought with rapiers, between Kingsley Benedict and L. C. Shumway. Put a man in fencing dress, black trousers (they ought to be knee-length, but that is an unimportant point), a padded protector with a red heart over the heart, a fencing mask, gauntlet on his right hand and a foil in his hand. Have him stand in the lobby, and, if he is dextrous at that sort of thing, he may lunge with the foil at a mark on the wall. But he will be very effective just standing under an announcement of the adventure.

YOU really must not miss the opportunity for a stunt offered by the Joker for March 17. Gale Henry poses for a travelling artist as "December Afternoon," and she certainly looks the part. The picture is called "Art Aches," and it will produce side-aches from laughter. Get a reproduction of the famous painting, "September Morn" if you can, and show it in the lobby with a portrait of Gale Henry beside it, and just add that she is posing as "December Afternoon" in the comedy which is running inside your house at that moment.

Gestures of the Conductor

By M. WINKLER

THE technical equipment and duties of the conductor may be summarized as follows:

What a good touch is to a pianist, that expressive and alert gesture is to a conductor. Given the right rhythm and feeling in the conductor's mind he must be able to translate it quickly and exactly into gesture. The quicker the response of hand to brain the better thereby will be a man's qualification as a conductor.

It is hardly necessary here to insist on the tremendous effect that expressive and appropriate gestures can have on orchestra playing, not only from a more ideal point of view, but also in such comparatively mechanical matters as keeping a steady rhythm—starting and finishing accurately. But to make such gestures expressive it is necessary for the conductor, like the instrumentalist, to attain certain qualities of arm and wrist. The wrist must be loose and supple, the baton should be held lightly, somewhat after the manner of a violin bow. The normal position of the baton should not be too low, otherwise it will not be seen, and not too high, otherwise it will be impossible to make that slight preliminary upward motion which is so necessary to secure a good attack on a downbeat. As a general rule no more strokes should be used than are absolutely necessary to mark the time; for instance, no bar should be beaten in three strokes that can be beaten in one, no bar should be beaten in four strokes that can be beaten in two. And it is one of the signs of a great conductor that he is able to conduct a piece, for example, in slow 12-8 time, using four strokes only to the bar, without hurrying the tempo. It may also be said that where there is no movement in music there should be no movement of the baton. Thus a bar containing nothing but a fermata should never be beaten out, but the beats counted mentally. In the same way, when the orchestra holds on a chord during a recitative, the bars should not be beaten out, and even when beats are necessary they should be only just indicated, otherwise the orchestra will be unnecessarily hurried and excited. Again, when beating the stroke should be made quickly and firmly, and the stick should then be held firm and motionless; it should not be gradually moved across the space to be traversed.

BLUEBIRD FEATURES PROVE VERY POPULAR.

WITH the showing of "Love's Lariat" at the Crystal Monday evening the success of the Bluebird films in Wayne was assured. This was the third Bluebird feature, and it drew a much larger crowd than either of the other two.

These pictures have the merit of being full of action, but not overdone. "Love's Lariat," a five-reel cowboy film, minus the overworked "shoot 'em and drag 'em out" theme, has an abundance of funny situations. The whole-hearted cowboy, summoned to the city by reason of having inherited his uncle's fortune, invites six of his pals to accompany him. Their saddles and their lariats are their only baggage. Entertained in the luxurious home of the cowboy's cousin, they disregard every convention and break every rule of etiquette until the play ends with the six friends, desperate over the thought of their leader marrying an Eastern girl, wailing in chorus "Oh, h——, he's ruined!"

Another unique feature of the Bluebird films is that all the lines and borders are printed in blue, a pleasing relief from the usual black and white. These scenarios, wholesome and well executed, deserve the generous patronage they are receiving.

(From Wayne Herald of January 27.)

ON WITH THE BLUEBIRD.

The Bluebird films appeal to everybody. They are the latest creation of the Universal Company, which has such a wonderful equipment at Universal City in California. Carl Laemmle, president of the company, is a wonder for new ideas. He conceived the Bluebird films, which were first released in the East only a year ago.

Four representative Bluebird films have been shown in Wayne and in all our personal inquiries we have not heard a single complaint or adverse criticism. Everybody is enthusiastic about them. This week the dramatic story, "The End of the Rainbow," was staged. Mr. Nielson, manager of the Crystal Theatre of Wayne, has been trying ever since New Year's Day to get "Naked Hearts," a film based on Tennyson's poem "Maud." Watch for the announcement of the date on this play, for you will be sorry if you miss it.

Still another Bluebird film about which Mr. Nielson is ultra-enthusiastic is "The Right to Be Happy," taken from Dickens' "Christmas Carol." Mr. Nielson is expecting this film for February 14th. This would be an especially appropriate play for a theatre party for the children.

Since none of the Bluebirds have been on deck much over a year, the interior settings are strictly up-to-date. The scenic effects are natural, the gowns are in style. If you haven't yet seen a Bluebird, go next Wednesday night by all means and watch all these features closely. You will be surprised with what nicety and accuracy the smallest details have been arranged. Even the lettering and the borders are different from ordinary films. The soft blue inks used are pleasing to the eye, and the quaint little scenes around the borders of these placards are always in harmony with the theme of the story.

"BLACK ORCHIDS" MASTERLY.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen—We want to congratulate you on "Black Orchids," and we are very glad to say that the picture pleased everybody that saw it. While the theme was not just to our personal liking, yet the beauty of the photography and masterly handling of the detail in this picture places it along with the best pictures we have ever shown, and we trust that all future Bluebirds will not fall below the standard of "Black Orchids." In such case we know that Bluebirds will be more than popular with us.

Thanking you for past favors, we remain, Very truly yours,
C. A. BEGHTOL,
The Brach Theatre,

ACTORS ARE STARS.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—It had been my desire for some time to write to you, to tell you how much we enjoy and appreciate your Bluebird plays. We have always found them interesting and artistic. There is something that remains after it is over, something to think of and to speak about.

It has gotten so with us now that it is enough to know that it is a Bluebird, no matter what the name of the play is, or who the actors are, we are certain that it will prove interesting and fine—in fact, they are A-No. 1.

We have seen a number of your plays more than once and we would gladly go and see them again.

Your actors are all stars. You seem to select the right persons for the right parts. I could cite many cases.

IN SIOUX CITY. TOO.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen—We feel that our success with "The Sign of the Poppy" is deserving of comment. People leaving the theatre, many of them, stopped to tell us that it was one of the best pictures we have ever exhibited. We failed to find any one who had adverse criticism to offer.

If the quality and persistent punch of the Bluebird program continues, the complete success of the productions in Sioux City is beyond question.

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir—I am in receipt of your letter of December 28th re cancellation of service, and in reply beg to say I have not cancelled your service, nor do I intend to do so.

Unite in Praising Bluebird Films in its Editorial columns its initial presentation at Other Letters from Exhi- have Films which will money for them.

I gave notice of termination of contract because under the uncertain conditions existing here as to business and the uncertainty as to just what change I might make in a business way, I did not wish to be bound as to time on service with deposit or guarantee up with companies.

I wish to state that all of our business transactions with your Kansas City office have been of the most pleasant kind and the force in your branch office with which we deal have extended us every courtesy, kindness and consideration possible. Their attention to our requests have been commendable. We have not one complaint to make regarding shipment of any order given. This I cannot say is true of our business with other companies.

I have met personally your manager, Mr. Emrick, and I cannot speak too highly of my consideration of him as a gentleman or his ability in giving patrons of your company first-class service.

If I can make proper terms I expect to use your service two days a week, beginning next week. Your pictures are satisfactory.

Gentlemen—Am writing in regard to "Behind the Lines." Please inform me just when I will get this picture and I sure will boost it to the end. And say now, old boy, when are you going to send me "The End of the Rainbow"? Please hurry this up as a great many people here saw it in Omaha and are anxious to have it here. Now rush things and oblige,

NO, THAT'S NOT SO BAD.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen — We played "Secret Love" against "The Birth of a Nation" last Friday, and took $27.50.

I don't think that was so bad considering the fact that "The Birth of a Nation" was billed like a circus, and in a small town everybody generally takes in the greatest attraction, but the fun of it was that the people here told them they had not a great deal on the local picture show, and nothing at all on the projection, and the regular run of pictures, and the orchestra excepted, they would rather give 10 cents to see our Friday night shows than 50 cents for the whole "Birth of a Nation" show. Yours very truly,

F. C. LARGEN,
Mgr. Lyric Theatre.
Creighton, Neb.

WANTS "LOVE'S LARIAT" AGAIN.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Say, old pal, when can you give me Harry D. Carey in 'Love's Lariat'?—the one I had last Friday? The people have asked me to run it over again. Can you give it to me next Monday or Tuesday? Please advise when I can get it. That was the best Bluebird picture I ever had. That's what they all say.

Yours truly,
Correctionville, Iowa. C. HONS.

"THREE GODFATHERS" PLEASED

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Say, Curls, we had a dandy crowd on "The Three Godfathers," and it sure pleased. The "vulgar" parts that that exhibitor spoke of rather amused the people, and those who spoke to said that if any one saw anything smutty in that picture, it was all in their head, for they could not see wherein the author had intended it as such.

Don't forget those big photos of Mary MacLaren and other stars. We mean those you said the exchange were giving away. And send up that "hickey" of Grace Cunard that you wanted me to give to the cripple lad. I forgot to get it.

Very truly yours,
HOPKINS & LARSON.

BIGGEST LITTLE PICTURE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—"Shoes" is the biggest little picture I ever looked at. When I say little, I mean that people are prone to judge a picture by quantity rather than by quality. A picture that abounds in smashes, big fight scenes, automobile wrecks and sensational situations to make its appeal is more apt to be called a big picture than another that makes its success by true artistic merit and dramatic force.

"Shoes" has no sensationalism, it is just a screen portrayal of truth and conditions that every man and woman that has lived in the world knows exists. It teaches a great lesson against vice, but it does it in a manner from sensationalism and suggestion.

"Shoes" drives its moral home—teaches its lesson in a clear and forceful manner that leaves an indelible impression on the mind.

That is why I say "Shoes" is the biggest little picture I ever saw. It is big because it is so full of little things that are big.

Yours, truly,
(Signed) M. J. FISHER,
Manager Colonial Theatre.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

Red Feather Double Bill Novelty Release of March 12. "The Girl Who Lost." Directed by George Cochrane. Three-reel Society and Stage Drama, with Cleo Madison, Roberta Wilson, Molly Malone and Jack Nelson . . and . . "Border Wolves." Written and directed by Geo. Marshall. Two-Reel Unusual Western Texas Ranger Drama, with Neal Hart, Joe Rickson, L. M. Wells, Janet Eastman and the cowboys. I wish to refer you to pages 8 and 27 for more about these two wonderful pictures, and with your kind permission I will devote the weekly space to a brief dissertation on how lucky you are to get such a novelty on the Red Feather Release date. In the first place the "Girl Who Lost" picture not only includes your stars in their own right, but it is so big and unusual that it could easily have been made a five-reel feature. That it is presented in only three reels simply means that it is packed with punches and swift action. The two-reeler is beyond all question the most remarkable Western ever put out. There is a genuine heart-interest story; there is the scouting and detective work of the Texas Rangers; there are daring stunts and feats of riding that will have your audiences on the edge of their seats. If you don't book this and boost it hard I shall be greatly disappointed in your judgment as to what constitutes a box-office attraction. What I mean by a b. o. a. is one that will stand a lot of boosting—that will get the crowds—AND THE MONEY in clean net PROFIT. Thank you.

"Some Specimens." With Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts. One-reel Nestor Comedy Riot. Directed by Louis Chaudet. Released Marsh 12. If you are using Universal Program Service and book the night's program you will be getting this roaring farce-comedy along with the double bill reviewed above, and it should prove the biggest night you have played in a long while. You need no introduction to the Nestor stars and you know how popular they are. Here is an opportunity to give your people the good stuff and get theirs in return.

"Where Glory Waits." With Allan Holubar and Roberta Wilson. Two-reel Laemmle Heroic Drama. Directed by Allan Holubar. Released March 14. He is a very modern young ruler, is Allan, and at college he is one of the boys; an all-around athlete, not averse to a good time ,a pretty face and figure or other good things of this life. So when the state counsellors come to him and tell him that it is time for him to get on the job he sighs and thinks life's a pretty tough proposition after all. He is dreaming of happy days, and one in particular in which a sweet girl had a share, and walks out through the woods on his estate, when he comes upon a pretty girl chopping wood. Not knowing who he is she asks him to help her. They talk and he learns her story. With a different view of life and responsibilities he returns to his duties, where he marries the right girl and lives happily for four months ever after. With the punch that A. Holubar, Esq., gets into his pictures, this is a corker.

"Roped In." With Neal Hart. Written and directed by George Marshall. Two-reel 101 Bison Western Smiles and Pathos Drama. Released March 17. When the new boss arrived at the ranch the boys discovered she was a woman. After leading them a hard life for a few weeks they decide one of them will have to marry the lady (who is neither young nor pretty), so they can have the kind of boss they are used to. They work the deal all right, and like the boys your audiences will get a lot of fun out of it—then comes the surprise punch—and there is a suspicion of moisture around the eyes, and you gulp a little and just kind of feel good all over. A very unusual two-reeler.

Gentlemen:- Attention Mr. O. F. Spahr, Mgr.

I can frankly and truthfully state that the Motiographs we are using in our plant are giving very good satisfaction.

We are using Motiographs exclusively in all of our screen inspection work and we have had innumerable compliments from our customers upon the clear steady pictures we present.

You doubtless know that in selecting the equipment of our laboratory-studio, we spared neither time nor money in getting the very best regardless of price, so that our selection of Motiograph may, indeed, be considered a compliment to you.

Wishing you every success, we are

Very truly yours,

Mr. W. E. Drummond, Mgr., of the Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn., says:

"You are certainly to be congratulated on furnishing such a machine as the Motiograph at a less price than your competitors. If exhibitors will buy Motiographs when they are in need of machines they will not only save money, but get machines that are equal, if not superior, to any other machine on the market."

Mr. F. H. Richardson, the Projection expert, says:

"The Motiograph is now a machine which I can conscientiously recommend to the serious consideration of motion picture theatre managers who are contemplating the purchase of new projection apparatus."

TO YOU WHO ARE ABOUT READY TO BUY A PROJECTOR IT WILL BE WELL FOR YOU TO INVESTIGATE THE

BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.)

A picture so big—so unusual—that even judged by the ultra critical BLUEBIRD Exchange men according to the high BLUEBIRD standard—it was pronounced one of the greatest pictures ever produced anywhere.

In spite of the fact that, after weeks of advertising, valuable State Rights on this remarkable picture had been sold—THE MONEY WAS RETURNED—NEGOTIATIONS FOR FURTHER SALE WERE WITHDRAWN—and BLUEBIRD Exchange Managers prepared to release it as a BLUEBIRD Special—not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program of releases.

BLUEBIRD Considers This Its Most Important Announcement

Now that it is a BLUEBIRD, we do not hesitate to say that it is the finest BLUEBIRD ever released. "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" is based on a big story; time—the great San Francisco disaster; place—the famous Barbary Coast resorts of that wonderfully cosmopolitan city. Without fear of contradiction we pronounce this picture one of the three greatest box-office attractions on the market today. Book through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

Regular Service

(No. 167. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

TIME, the greatest and most impartial of judges, is now rendering its verdict.

Reports of conditions the country over indicate that the exhibitor is rediscovering the need for VARIETY in his shows. In other words, the light is at last dawning upon those showmen who two years ago were stampeded into adopting the feature policy.

For two solid years I have preached the gospel of regular service. For two years I have maintained that the regular service show is the ONLY show that contains the variety demanded by photoplay patrons. Convinced that the regular service program would eventually be the salvation, as it was the foundation, of this business, we have not hesitated to spend money as though we controlled the U. S. Mint in driving the doctrines of this gospel home.

Stroll through the busy sections of any large city and you will find that exhibitors located in these sections have taken steps to put variety into their shows. True, they're doing it in a clumsy, extravagant and blind sort of way, but the important fact is that they ARE DOING IT!

Here's HOW and WHY!

Admitting that the ordinary feature show no longer gets the business, these exhibitors are endeavoring to remedy conditions by adding ANOTHER five-reeler to their present show. They confess that one of the reasons the ordinary feature show has fallen down is that the poor quality of the five-reeler frequently ruins the evening's entertainment. The extra feature is added to furnish the necessary variety and to minimize the risk of sending patrons away dissatisfied.

Just think of presenting the ruinous and extravagant 12 or 14-reel show when the result striven for can be obtained with the ordinary, every-day regular service show!

Think of the folly of filling the fan up to the neck with motion pictures and giving him photoplay indigestion, when you can SHARPEN his appetite by presenting a program of 1- 2- and 3-reelers!

It has taken two years for the exhibitor to see that I spoke the truth when I told him feature shows and dissatisfied patrons went hand-in-hand.

It will require much less time for him to break away from his new wasteful policy and return to the popular, profitable regular service show.

He's GOT to do it because it is one of the two courses left open to him——

REGULAR SERVICE OR BUST! ! !

"This is the Voice On the Wire"

BEN WILSON, THE STAR.

IF this cryptic phrase is spoken over your phone in the next few days, don't ring off impatiently, under the impression that your caller is stark staring crazy. He isn't—he's just joined a new order of Benevolent Boosters, and he's living up to his oath of initiation. That's all.

Probably you have noticed the same fateful phrase in the newspapers, standing quite unsupported and unexplained in its native incomprehensibility. (That is one of the longest words in the English language, by the way.) It isn't the secret means of communication between members of a band of international spies. It is not part of the propaganda of any one of the belligerents. It is just the same old B. B.'s "carrying on," as our friends, the British Tommies, say, with their good work for the benefit of all loyal exhibitors and theatre managers who know on which side their bread is buttered.

Of course, if you are in a great hurry, you may be just a bit peeved, if, when you pick up the receiver in response to an insistent ting-a-ling, an unidentified person replies, "This is the Voice on the Wire" in answer to your impatient "Hello!" Maybe you will just reverse the syllables of your greeting, and hang up. Don't; because he'll just call you again. Get back your equanimity by calling some one else and getting the new one off on him. And realize why you are doing it.

"The Voice on the Wire" is the title of the new mystery serial, you know, which starts this week, and which the Universal officials, who have seen it, pronounce to be the best yet. The mystery is impenetrable, and as for the title, it is simply crammed with advertising possibilities. They have pretty good publicity notions in the Universal, as you have learned already, and the mysterious answer over the telephone, following the teaser campaign in the newspapers, using the same phrase, unsupported by any explanation, is about the best stunt that has ever been put over in connection with a motion picture. The most incurious man in the world, or one who would scorn to have anything whatever to do with the boosting of a motion picture serial, after he has been told a few times over his private phone, "This is the Voice on the wire," is going to begin to wonder if his friends have all taken leave of their senses. Then about the third time, he is going to be devoured with wonder as to what it may mean; and if he is human at all, his next step will be to pass on the High Sign to his neighbor, so as to make sure that he is not the only victim.

When you realize that the same procedure is taking place all over the Union, that the same teasing line is appearing in the newspapers, that people are calling each other on the telephone and receiving for answer, "This is the voice on the wire," you will acknowledge that no motion picture ever had such nation-wide advertising before, and that the Benevolent Boosters are the most wonderful organization for the assistance of the motion picture exhibitor which has ever existed.

The more the merrier, so join them today. No formalities necessary. Simply call up somebody and answer, "This is the Voice on the Wire" when he says "Hello!" That makes you automatically a member of the Benevolent Boosters, and once affiliated with this splendid organization, you are a member for life. Ben Wilson is the President, Vice-President and all the officers because he is the star of the new serial. You see him with the insignia and paraphernalia of the organization in the cut. Reader, go thou and do likewise!

Ben Wilson in "The Voice on the Wire"

Howard Van Cleft in terror at the voice over the disconnected wire and the message it told.

THE name of the first episode of the new Universal serial, "The Voice on the Wire," is an indication of the novelty of the mystery which it takes fifteen chapters to solve. Chapter one is called "The Oriental Death Punch," or, if you prefer it in the original, "Sen-Si-Yao." The serial is a screen adaptation by J. G. Alexander, of the well-known book of the same name, written by Eustace Hale Ball, and the production is under the care of Stuart Paton, producer of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Ben Wilson is the star, in the best role he has ever had, and Neva Gerber is his leading lady. Other prominent members of the cast or Joseph Girard, Howard Crampton and Ernest Shields.

"THE ORIENTAL DEATH PUNCH," First Episode of the New Universal Serial. Produced by Stuart Paton from the well known book by Eustace Hale Ball.—Those who have seen the first three episodes declare it is the best serial idea ever filmed.

Captain Cronin	Howard Crampton
Dr. Renolds	Joseph Girard
Howard Van Cleft	Ernest Shields

The "Sen-Si-Yao" is the mysterious blow by which several victims, prominent in society, have met an untimely end before the serial begins. It is delivered directly over the heart in such a manner as to leave a slight bruise as the only trace of the way in which the victim has met his death. Another equally baffling feature of the series of crimes, is the appearance each time of a muffled figure which no one can identify, and a warning over a wire, which usually proves to be disconnected, of the intended murder, which is sometimes received by the victim, and sometimes by the authorities. Ben Wilson is a detective of reputation, who is called in consultation by the baffled police force. Neva Gerber is an actress, in whose company two of the murdered men have been at the time of their death. She is under suspicion by the police.

The community has been stirred to its depths by several unexplained murder cases, surrounded by the deepest mystery when the episode begins. Captain Cronin and the authorities are powerless to discover even the manner in which death is inflicted. Alvin Van Cleft, a wealthy roue, has invited Polly Marion, an actress, to supper with him. After supper they enter a taxi together and drive home through the park. A muffled figure is distinctively seen as the taxi drives away. In the cab they both become drowsy. A mysterious hand, which seems to have no connection with a body, comes through the window and touches Van Cleft. He falls to the floor dead.

Howard Van Cleft is sitting up for his father. He receives a message over the phone telling him that his father has been murdered in the park, and that if he investigates he will meet the same fate. Howard notifies the authorities. They arrest Polly and take her to the station, but she protests that she knows nothing. Captain Cronin calls John Shirley on the case, and he orders the release of Polly, telling Cronin that it is for purposes of his own. Shirley also informs young Van Cleft that his father was murdered by the Oriental death punch. As he is doing so, he receives a message over the phone, warning him to desist from his investigations or he will be the next victim. He traces the message and finds that it comes from premises which were burned to the ground some weeks before.

Shirley leaves the house in the company of Captain Cronin. He is called back to the telephone and when he comes out again Cronin has disappeared. Later Shirley hears that he has been taken to the hospital with a fractured skull.

Shirley pays a visit to Howard Van Cleft, who is nearly crazed by grief over his father's murder and fears for his own safety. In the shrubbery surrounding the house he sees a muffled figure. He attempts to follow it. He vaults over the fence and two crooks attack him. He draws a gun and takes them to the police station, where they sullenly refuse to talk.

Shirley then pays a visit to the

Animated Weekly News

Sig. G. Bonestein Dean of Cameramen at the Nation's Capital

THE following is Sig G. Boernstein's story of himself. He is the representative of the Universal Animated Weekly in Washington, D. C., and in the note which he enclosed with the story, he said: "This is less than half of what I might say and still be truthful, and at that, be twice as much as you might want to say. As a matter of fact I have made pictures from the roof of a burning building, revoking my life insurance, and have had both my hands frozen, being caught in a blizzard at Arlington. So I believe I am eligible for the cameramen's fraternity."

Sig G. Boernstein has represented the Universal Animated Weekly in Washington, D. C., since its first issue. He is known throughout the Capitol City as the "dean" of cameramen, having been the first in that section to follow the lure of the movie camera.

He has photographed official Washington from stem to stern, and there are but few notables who have not, at one time or another, passed in review before his camera.

One of his first "takes" was to record on the permanent celluloid, the original trial flights of the Wright brothers of their "heavier-than-air" machine.

He was the first to photograph Washington from an aeroplane, this was in the very beginning of his motion picture career; according to Boernstein, he thought at this time he was a full-fledged cameraman, but after dropping 300 feet and landing through a board fence, he said he came back to earth with such a shock that he almost decided there were other jobs easier than making the movies.

His next venture was to make phographs from a hydroplane and the flight was started in the face of a brisk wind. He had gone some time when the phone in his office rang and the stenographer answering, hearing Boernstein's voice on the wire, inquired: "Shall I send you more film?"

"No," came the reply; "send me a dry suit." Some disappointment after flying 3,000 feet above the city to drop into the historic old Potomac, and this before the day of the submarine motion picture.

Boernstein says for real excitement there is nothing like chasing a Universal take. This was especially true when he made the overland trip to the San Francisco Exposition in midwinter in a racing car, riding with Barney Oldfield around the Tucson (Arizona) Track and driving two miles on the ice of Lake Michigan, to film a sinking steamer.

With the acquisition of a few gray hairs, this cameraman is becoming a little more conservative and is devoting a great portion of his time to scientific work and may now, at any time, be found digging among the polywogs, microbes and organisms. He has photographed the flea in its natural state and as a "trained performer," making the first insect motion picture—"The Flea Circus."

Among his scientific pictures are "The Rat as a Disease Carrier," "Flies and Their Relation to the Public Health," "Bubonic Plague and Its Eradication," "The Propagation of Fish" and in addition he has photographed every wild animal in captivity.

Esther, encouraged by Grandpa, makes preparation for the secret wedding.

FOR the setting of the fifty-ninth Bluebird Photoplay, Lynn Reynolds, the author and producer, chose old ocean itself. Upon a three-masted bark of old-fashioned type, he embarked with his company, cameraman, assistant director, and all the paraphernalia of picture making. There they remained for some time, until the most important scenes for the picture were completed. Reynolds uses an interior studio as little as possible in all his pictures. His technique as a picture director demands that he shall see things, as far as possible, from the point of view of pictures, and not from that of the stage. He believes in doing things that are out of the question in the older form of drama. In each of his recent Bluebirds, he has selected some phase of nature, and set his story in natural surroundings which could not be reproduced by paint and canvas for the ordinary theatre. Of course, Bluebird policy dictates that the "play shall be the thing," but Reynolds provides for that, by writing his plays himself. Then he stages them as no director of the speaking stage can ever do, amid the grandeurs of the world of out-of-doors, where the story gains in impressiveness from its setting. A tale with many sensational features is told in "Mutiny," which, by the way, is the third Bluebird to be booked at the Rialto Theatre, at Broadway, New York

The Captain and the mate quarrel.

Grandfather Whitaker was set in his ways and firm in his convictions, and though he had once captained the smartest bark on the Spanish Main and had laughed at the buccaneers who tried to catch him, he now spent most of his time knitting and petting the cat, his only orders being issued to his grand-daughter, Esther.

But, accidentally discovering that Esther loved Caleb Tilden, her childhood sweetheart, and was being forced by her father, Aaron Whitaker, to marry Jacob Babcock, his mate on the Alden Besse, the grandfather advised the two young lovers to disappear until the wedding-day had passed and the Alden Besse had sailed. The old man smiled with satisfaction to think that he was not yet too old for deeds of daring.

Captain Aaron Whitaker was known and feared as a stern, two-fisted man, and Jacob Babcock, his mate, had absorbed his master's vice and had added some of his own. There was much to be feared from both of them.

Learning that Esther was away, presumably because of the illness of her aunt, the Captain allowed Jacob, the mate, to remain ashore during the coming voyage in order to be married as soon as his daughter returned.

Three days later, Esther and Caleb came home, married, though no one was aware of the fact. The girl was finally forced to tell Jacob that she had changed her mind and did not intend to marry him.

Months passed by. Awaiting the return of the Captain, the mate bided his time. The Alden Besse came to port one day very unexpectedly and Aaron Whitaker was astounded to hear that Jacob and Esther were not yet married. He also learned that his aged father had died during his absence.

Grimly he walked into the house and confronted Esther. In her fright, she had left a baby's woolen shirt dangling from the side of her sewing basket. He saw it, and refusing to listen to her explanation, thundered out that he would grant her fifteen minutes to get her things together and sail with him. Fearing for Caleb's safety, she remained silent and obeyed, trusting to some kind Fate to aid her.

Esther and her grandfather.

FIFTY-NINTH Bluebird Photoplay, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds and staged upon a sailing vessel, many miles out at sea. Featuring Myrtle Gonzalez, with George Hernandez and Val Paul.

CAST.

Esther Whitaker	Myrtle Gonzalez
Caleb Tilden	Fred Harrington
Aaron Whitaker	Jack Curtis
Eben Wiggs, the cook	E. J. Brady
Grandfather Whitaker,	George Hernandez
Jacob Babcock, the mate	Val Paul

Forced to board the Alden Besse, she was thrown into a cabin, the door of which was locked. The sailors, all hardened men, only sneered at her cries and moans. But Eben Wiggs, the "cookee," a quiet sort of man and one who immediately sensed the injustice of the affair, surreptiously assisted and sympathized with her.

Caleb, meanwhile, landing at the old pier from his lobster trapping, was met by the Captain and, after a vicious struggle, was thrown from the wharf into the ocean. Aaron Whitaker thought he had rid himself of Caleb forever.

But the chill of the water had resuscitated Caleb, and gradually he dragged himself onto a crossbeam underneath the pier. Looking dazedly about him, he saw the Alden Besse setting sail. Terrified by a sudden thought, he watched the ship with concentration. At last he caught a glimpse of Esther and heard her scream his name. He attempted to follow, shouted an answer, and fell forward upon his face.

Afraid to return to his home, because of the murder he thought he had committed, Aaron Whitaker anchored the Alden Besse in foreign waters. It was there that Esther's baby was born, cared for and loved by the faithful "cookee."

Jacob being urged by the Captain to marry Esther, finally consented with the understanding that he should receive part ownership of the brig. But when her father as Captain of the ship attempted to marry her to the mate, Esther snatched up her baby and threatned to cast herself into the sea. Her father, disgusted with the whole affair, at last threw the Bible aside and shut himself in his cabin.

As a seaman on another vessel, Caleb sought in vain for the Alden Besse. At last, by chance, he discovered her one night anchored in Panama Bay. While attempting to discover its passengers, he was seen by Aaron Whitaker and forced to flee, though the Captain thought it was the ghost of the murdered man come to haunt him.

"I'll throw myself into the sea!"

Some time afterward, the Captain determined to report that the Alden had floundered and by changing her name, enable himself to return to his own country.

One night, as the ship was nearing its home port, the Captain and several sailors, among whom was the pilot, became badly intoxicated. The rest of the crew, led by Jacob Babcock, began a revolt. Aaron and some of the men were killed and their bodies were heaved overboard into the sea.

Then with malicious intent, the mate made his way to the cabin occupied by Esther, and smashing in the door, was about to spring upon her, when the cook, having followed him to the cabin, struck him a terrific blow with a cleaver, which felled him to the floor.

With no one to steer her, the ship was dashed upon the rocks. The cook saying nothing of what had happened, lashed Esther and the baby to a raft, after which he kissed the child good-by, with tears in his eyes.

It was following months of fruitless effort and search that Caleb had come home to watch and wait. Deserted by the villagers, who believed him crazy, he continued his hopeless vigil at the entrance of the bay. One day while gathering driftwood along the beach, he thought he saw the Alden Besse. Having heard that she had been lost at sea, and thinking he must really be insane, he went on to his home without investigating.

Gale's Infinite Variety

MISS HENRY, STAR OF THE JOKER BRAND AND THE FUNNIEST WOMAN ON THE SCREEN, SEES HERSELF AS OTHERS SEE HER.

As she really is.

Leading woman of the Jokers, I'm as thin as twenty pokers.
When it comes to face-distortion, I'm the one and only Caution.
In "Art Aches" you'll see me soon as "December Afternoon."
As the spouse of Mil Moranti my attire is rather scanty.
So for fear he'd have to faint, Bill gave me a coat of paint,
And in doing so our Farney proved himself to be quite brainy.
When a Mule must be my Mate, my costume is more sedate,
Or exclaiming, "What the ——? Why she isn't on the level!"

Strangers passing by would maybe, also want to know "Whose baby?"
You must do the best you can. It's a job, "Getting a man."
For, of course, you have to know if he's just "Out for the Dough,"
Or will make an awful holler if you "Wanta make a dollar."
Mine was not a "Boob for Luck," but he certainly had pluck.
He's assisting to direct, so he knew what to expect.
Take a tip—book my releases, and you'll be as rich as Croesus.
Age can't wilt or custom stale the variety of Gale.

She regards her own pictures with a look which says "Am I really like that?"

"THE COMMON SIN"

Right—The old hag tells Eldora her story.

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama, written and produced by Charles L. Gaskill, with Helen Gardner in the dual role of the gypsy mother and her daughter. Staged in the heart of the forest.

THIS Gold Seal three-reel drama, written and produced by Charles L. Gaskill, and featuring Helen Gardner in the dual role, was staged in the heart of the forest, in natural surroundings of great beauty. Miss Gardner has the role of a gypsy woman, who is betrayed by a traveler from the city, and whose daughter avenges the wrong inflicted on her mother. The story runs as follows:

Sheba, a most beautiful woman of the gypsy camp, is betrothed by her father to Carlo, a member of the tribe. She meets George Lattimer, a city man, in the woodws for a vacation and gives her heart to him. So she protests against her father's wish that she shall marry one of their own people, but he pays no attention and the preparation for the ceremony, according to gypsy rite, goes on. George is engaged to be married to a girl of his own town, but he keeps Sheba in ignorance of this, and when he asks her to go away with him she consents. She is forced to submit to the marriage with Caro, but steals away directly after the ceremony and meets George. Her awakening comes soon, for he tires of her and leaves her, and she returns heart-broken to the tribe, to bear her child. She dedicates the little girl to the task of vengeance.

Sheba's daughter is grown into a beautiful woman, when Lattimer and his wife visit the woods on a vacation. They meet Eldora, and her old grandmother recognizes the man, and tells the girl the story of her mother. Pretending not to know him, Eldora begs the wife to take her to the city, and Mrs. Lattimer does so. Eldora takes with her a bundle containing the clothes worn by her mother when she first met Lattimer.

She takes kindly to the ways of the city and becomes a social favorite, with many suitors, including Lattimer's son. But she still dreams of the gypsy boy, David, with whom she has grown up. He, in the meantime, is nearly distracted with grief at losing her. The old grandmother perceives this, and giving him the girl's ragged gown and a knife tells him to go to her, make her return with him or kill her. He sets out for the city.

Lattimer, strangely attracted to the gypsy girl, one day makes open love to her. She tells him that his words are an insult not only to her, but to his wife, whom she loves. Mrs. Lattimer comes in with her son, while the girl is struggling in Lattimer's arms. She manages to extricate herself from the situation by pretending that she loves the son. Then, that night, she writes to him that she is returning to her mountains, and that he is to try to think well of her. She has led Lattimer to think that she is going to leave home with him. She dresses in the gypsy gown of her mother, and reveals herself to Lattimer as the child of Sheba, whom he wronged. He is terrified. Just at that moment her gypsy lover, David, breaks in. He throws at her the rags she has worn in the forest and says, "Put these on; you are coming with me!" He stabs Lattimer and drags Eldora away with him.

Later we see them restored to happiness together in the depths of the forest.

"THE HIDDEN DANGER"

BIG U Two-Reel Indian Drama, featuring Mona Darkfeather in a powerful role.

THE American Indian is supposed to be a phlegmatic creature, and the last person in the world who would make a good motion picture actor. Yet we find representatives of the race of the noble Red Man who have made their mark as screen players. Among them none has won more lasting fame than Mona Darkfeather, who has been featured in many Universal

Second Adventure of the Series

"The Perils of the Secret Service"

THE Second Adventure of the "Perils of the Secret Service," the exciting series which is being produced at Universal City by George Bronson Howard, and is founded upon his own Yorke Norroy stories, is well named "The Clash of Steel." The climax of it is one of the duels with the foils which has ever been shown on the screen. Kingsley Benedict, in the leading role, and L. C. Shumway, as the most sinister of villains, are the principals in the thrilling encounter, which recalls the best fencing scenes of the legitimate plays. E. H. Sothern himself, famous for his mastery of the small sword, never used it in a more realistic conflict.

The scene is set in a town in Normandy, where Princess Seraphina has fled with her young son from the court of her husband, Prince Feodor, who tries to make her flight the pretext of a divorce. An outline of the plot suggests the rapid action which follows:

Princess Seraphina, taking her small son, Prince Paul, flees from Yulania to the little village of Champ Fleury in Normandy, because of the debauchery of her husband, Prince Feodor.

The following morning the agent of Saxonia, Count Stefan, hearing of the flight of the Princess, calls to convince Feodor that he should divorce his wife and marry Princess Sofia Anoria with her fifty million francs, for Saxonia needs Yulania as a buffer state in case of war. Prince Feodor consents to his arrangement, and agrees to the conspiracy of the agent to gain reason for divorce.

Champ Fleury is the chief rendezvous of Yorke Norroy and his coadjutor, Carson Huntley. Huntley, then living in the village, has become acquainted with Princess Seraphina, soon learning to love little Paul.

Count Stefan follows the Princess to Champ Fleury and watches with satisfaction the growing friendship between her and Huntley. He and his confederate, Gregor, wire Prince Feodor to hasten to the village and receive a reply that Feodor is motoring there.

Yorke Norroy also is on his way to Champ Fleury. He passes the prince, recognizes him and wonders what can have brought him, incognito, so far from his court.

Meanwhile, Stefan and Gregor have kidnapped Prince Paul and have enticed Princess Seraphina to Huntley's rooms, she believing that her son has been injured and taken there. Stefan then enters and accuses her of having left her husband for her lover, to whom she is now making a night visit. He holds them both prisoners, while awaiting the coming of Feodor. Norroy arrives in the village shortly before the prince and, scenting trouble, enters Huntley's house with drawn revolver, a new noiseless automatic which he has acquired from a foreign spy.

Stefan is one of the best swordsmen in all Europe. Soon Norroy is apparently exhausted. He staggers against the table and with a sudden jerk, overturns the candelabra on it.

Huntley and the princess escape. When Prince Feodor arrives and is told of the past events, he realizes his own folly and pleads forgiveness, the princess pardoning him because of her boy.

Whisperings From Th

Phil Dunham in "Nabbing a Noble," coming L-Ko.

PHIL DUNHAM LEARNS TO "KNOW HIMSELF."

PHIL DUNHAM, L-Ko Komedian, has acquired a habit which is common among screen actors, of dropping into a theatre where one of his own pictures is running, to see its effect upon the people, and hear their comments. Sometimes they are gratifying, sometimes directly the opposite. The other day he went into a house where "Defective Detectives," a comedy in which he is featured, was being shown. He sat down in front of two beauteous damsels, and could not help hearing their conversation. He soon realized that it was all about himself.

"Yes, I used to know Phil Dunham awful well," the prettier of the two was saying, "but he is just terrible, now, why he——" and she went on to give the actor a reputation which would have been the envy of Nero himself.

Phil thought he had a pretty thorough knowledge of himself, but the detail of his dreadful past was too much for him. In terror, lest he should hear something which would force him to take desperate measure for the suppression of such a human pest, he arose and left the theatre in a hurry. But before he went, he took a card out of his pocket, and gravely presented it with a deep bow, to the young ladies.

PRESIDENT LAEMMLE VISITS "HADES."

WHEN President Carl Laemmle arrived at Universal City last month the first thing he was asked to do was to visit the largest set which had ever been erected on the big main stage. This was a representation of a dance-hall in Alaska, in the early days of the rush to the newly discovered gold fields in that country.

"Don't speak of Alaska," said the Universal's president with a shiver. "Don't you know that I've just come from New York, where the thermometer is lingering around the zero point?"

"In that case, probably you would rather visit the Jokers," said the manager of productions, who was talking to the big chief. "They have put on a wonderful representation of Hades for their comedy, 'What the ———!' and they are having a real hot time."

"That will be much more acceptable," said Mr. Laemmle. However, later in the day the warm sun of California caused him to forget all about the chilliness of New York, and he was photographed on the big set, even though it did represent a dance-hall in Alaska.

THE MAJOR WAS NEUTRAL.

"TRY your hand at the camera and do a little shooting," said Director Allan Holubar to Major Henry Holland Sheen of the Military Corps of the United States Army at Universal City a few days ago. The Major had stopped at the famous motion picture institution while en route from the border to San Francisco, to see Holubar at work on his five-reeler, "The Reward of His Government."

"Shoot what?" asked the military gentleman.

"This is 'somewhere in France' and that attacking party represents the German forces," replied the director by way of explanation.

"You'll have to excuse me, Mr. Holubar," said Major Sheen, "no shooting for me—I'm strictly neutral."

BOYS HAVE NOTHING ON RUTH.

THERE is "nothing slow" about Ruth Stonehouse, the young director-actress starred in the Victor feature "Dorothy Dares." One day this week while seeking a location with her company Miss Stonehouse vaulted two wooden fences and climbed quicker than her assistant through a barbed-wire fence.

"My father thought I'd be a boy, and I have always acted like a boy just to gladden his heart," she said.

MERTA STERLING LAUGHS AT FATE.

MERTA STERLING declares that she resembles Abraham Lincoln. No, she is not mad. She does not mean physically or mentally. She means that, like the greatest American, she was born in a log cabin. It was out in Wisconsin, and she says that she had as hard a time, when she was a small child, as Lincoln had. It does not seem to have hurt her disposition, for Miss Sterling is a marvelously cheerful person, off the stage as well as on.

Eight years ago, she was a stenographer in the office of Klaw and Erlanger. They decided to revive "The Prince of Pilsen," and she had a hunch that she was just cut out to play the character woman. She succeeded in convincing her employers that she was right, and they told her she might learn the part and attend the rehearsals. When they saw her work, they gave her the chance, inexperienced as she was, and she made good. She had a lot of vaudeville experience after that, and two years ago, deserted to the movies, finding her way to the L-Ko studio. She is horribly abused in pictures, but nothing seems to impair her good nature, or decrease her weight. She says she never tells any one how much she weighs, as they would not believe it anyhow.

FRANKLYN FARNUM HAS A FURRY FRIEND.

FRANKLYN FARNUM, the youngest of the famous Farnum family, has made friends on all sides since he decided to desert the stage for pictures. The Bluebird star, who is working at present on "The Clock," under the direction of William Worthington, is a favorite with every one at the film capital. He even includes the black bear from the zoo in his visiting list, and the other day they were photographed together and the picture appears on this page. Farnum, who is enthusiastic about pictures, lives at a well-known athletic club with the two Nestor comedians, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, and is keen about all sorts of sport. But he says that the best sport of all is picture-making, and one of the reasons for his great and growing popularity on the screen is the fact that he conveys the impression of enjoying himself thoroughly while he is playing a picture.

SCOTCH GIANT VISITS NESTORS

THEY had one of the biggest men in the world at Universal City recently. His name is Donald McGregor, and he is known as the Scotch giant, a title which is well earned, for he is no less than eight feet two and one-half inches tall. Mr. McGregor brought solace to the minds of all those at the picture city who have been worrying about overweight. Several of the directors, as well as many of the actors, have been dieting lately, but when they learned that McGregor weight 463 pounds, they declared, with one accord, for at least a temporary relaxation of their gastronomic rules. The head steward of the Universal City restaurant said that there was more pie consumed in the week following the giant's visit than in a month before he came.

The big fellow spent some time with the Nestor comedians, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, and posed with them and their director, Louis Chaudet. The result is seen on this page. McGregor is demonstrating how easy it is to shake two men at once, even when their combined weight is three hundred and fifty pounds.

At last comes the release of the new combination three-reel and two-reel pictures, which are issued together as one five-reel Red Feather feature, which deserves the much-abused name if any film ever did. We have had so much to say about this new idea in former numbers of the Weekly, that there is nothing much to add. The stories may be left, with perfect confidence, to speak for themselves, as they are both unusually satisfactory ones. "The Girl Who Lost" was written by Calder Johnstone, adapted for the screen by Bess Meredyth, and produced by George Cochrane. A glance at the cast, with its four names which have so frequently been featured by themselves in other productions, will show that this is an aggregation of talent which is worth the special boosting that has been done for it. Here is a brief outline of the story:

"THE GIRL WHO LOST," Red Feather Three-Reel picture, story by Calder Johnstone, scenario by Bess Meredyth, production by George Cochrane, with Cleo Madison, Roberta Wilson and Molly Malone featured in the cast.

CAST.

Mary	Cleo Madison
Frances	Roberta Wilson
Millicent	Molly Malone
Hayden Van Holt	Jack Nelson
Andrew Van Holt	Daniel Leighton
Landlady	Lydia Y. Titus

Although Mary belonged in the chorus, still she did not belong to the gay night life which is supposed to be synonymous with theatrical work. Instead she hurried home to her younger sister, Frances, whose one ambition was to go on the stage. At length the season closes and Mary has to go "on the road," leaving her sister with the good natured and well-meaning landlady.

Frances becomes dissatisfied and seeks work, entering the employment of Andrew Van Holt, and ere long she has sacrificed her honor. When Mary returns she learns that her young sister is about to become a mother. From the weeping girl she learns of the man who wronged her, and in the heart of the gentle Mary is born the spirit of revenge and retaliation.

Chance makes her acquainted with the son of Van Holt, Hayden, who is engaged to Millicent. Both are very

Double Attraction Red Feather

HERE is the second half of the Double Attraction Red Feather. It is called "Border Wolves," and was written and produced by George Marshall, with a scenario by Karl Coolidge. Neal Hart is featured with the famous Universal cowboys in support, and a new and very pretty leading lady in the person of Janet Eastman, who had never ridden a horse in all her little life, when she was called upon to do an Amazonian act in this picture. There is a surprise ending to this corking film which no one can anticipate, and there are daring stunts enough in it to recall the days of the old "Wild West" shows at their best. The story, tamely told, in synopsis form, is like this:

"BORDER WOLVES," Two-Reel Red Feather picture, story and production by George Marshall, adapted for the screen by Karl Coolidge. Featuring Neal Hart and the famous Universal cowboys and full of surprises.

The captain of the Texas Rangers has been telling the lieutenant that something must be done about Snakehead, for there is an organized band of gun-runners there.

In the little town of Snakehead, close to the Mexican border, McGowan, owner of the "Open House" dance hall and the power supreme, makes arrangements with his right hand man, "Mex" Joe, to run some guns across the border. All plans are made, the guns are cached at Hell-Hole, but more men are needed. Second only to his love of gold, McGowan loves his daughter Tina, and when Joe tries to make love to her he fiercely commands him to keep away from her. Joe is very angry and determines to get even.

The "Bum," wandering through the country, arrives at Snakehead, and while drinking in the saloon, becomes very friendly with "Mex" Joe. Joe finally hires the "Bum" to join them

BISON Two-Reel comedy-drama, story by George Marshall, adapted for the screen by W. B. Pearson, and produced by George Marshall, with the co-operation of the Universal cowboys.

UNUSUAL team-mates, a real French countess and the Universal cowboys, appear together in the Bison picture "Roped In," which was written and produced by George Marshall, from the scenario by W. B. Pearson. There is comedy which is really comic in the idea of one of the boys being sacrificed as the husband of the new owner of the ranch, so that the work will be properly accomplished. The lady owner, no longer in her first youth and beauty, turns out to be that hard task mistress, a perfect housekeeper. She does not care what happens to the live stock as long as the kitchen floor is scrubbed to whiteness every day. When the boys are nearly desperate at being turned into housemaids, "Skeeters" has an idea. One of their number must be the scape goat, must marry the tyrant, and boss the job as it ought to be bossed. The boys decide to "donate" Hi Pockets to the cause. Hi is an unwilling victim, and tries his best to dodge the honor, but when finally cornered, thrown and tied, he finds a way out, and the picture ends as a sort of cowboy version of the immortal "Taming of the Shrew." Neal Hart and the boys make the most of the chances for humor, and Bill Gillis is a masterpiece of solemnity as the victim.

All the boys on the ranch clean up for the arrival of their new boss, only to find that it is a woman. She is very dignified, wears horn-rimmed glasses and is all that this get-up implies. The new owner is introduced to the foreman, looks him up and down, and then goes into the house and finds the table covered with cigarette butts. She gives the foreman one look, and he beats it to the yard, where all the boys kid him.

Next day she makes the boys clean up the place, and they obey, because they are afraid of her. At the end of the week the house looks fine, but the grounds have not been touched and the cattle are straying. The boys decide that one of them must propose to her so the others can work the ranch. They draw matches and "Skeeters," the foreman, wins. He takes a drink and starts into the room where the boss is drinking tea. She asks him what he wants and all he can stammer is something about the day's work. At this she orders him out of the house.

Next day, another one of the boys, "Hi Pockets" by name, suggests that with a little nerve tonic he thinks he can turn the trick, because she has always liked him from the start. So they boost him and he goes out and sits under a tree. The boss comes up, and shows him evident favor, but Hi Pockets' nerve fails.

But then it occurs to him that if he marries her he can be boss of the ranch and have all the boys working for him. He proposes and is accepted. The wedding takes place and immediately afterward the bridegroom beats it for town. The boys think he is running away and pursue. He buys a gown and starts back. He throws the gown at his wife, saying that it is a scrubbing outfit and that she is to get to work at once. He puts his feet on the table, lights a large cigar and orders the boys to work when they come in. They see it is useless to protest and go out a sadder and a wiser bunch, while Hi Pockets remains king of the situation.

ALLAN HOLUBAR, the young author-actor-producer whose work we have learned to look for with anticipation of so much pleasure, has again accomplished a fine piece of work in the Laemmle picture, "Where Glory Waits," which was written for him by E. Magnus Ingleton. Holubar has produced the story with all the care which would ordinarily be lavished on a five-reeler. In the earlier scenes in which the Heir Apparent is still a happy irresponsible collegian, he gives us pictures of university life, which, wonderful to relate, are really true to life. Flashes of a football game, of an auto race, of boyish skylarking are staged with remarkable realism. Then the Heir is summoned to his kingdom and has to leave his freedom behind him, and, sad to relate, is also expected to transfer his affections from the lovely daughter of the college president, to the keeping of the royal and dignified, but singularly unattractive Princess of a neighboring kingdom. How a chance meeting with a little peasant girl teaches him to accept his responsibilities in a new spirit, and how he finds happiness after all, makes a picture of unusually satisfying qualities.

The young King, but a month on his throne, was sadly dreaming of the happy days gone by when cares of state were unknown, and he was simply the popular football captain, all-around athlete, winner of many races and beloved as a man by all his comrades at the university where he had been educated.

His reveries were broken by the coming of the learned counselors and the last of his boyhood's visions vanished as he was told that a marriage of state had been arranged for him with a certain dignified and haughty princess.

The counselors handed him her portrait, which was the antithesis of everything he had imagined in connection with love and a wife. As he looked at the cold, passionless features his thoughts reverted to the laughing face of a sunny, curly-haired girl, the daughter of the university president. He rebelled at the hard, stern responsibilities before him, and abruptly left the palace to wander in the forest.

Following the sound of blows, he discovered a ragged, bare-footed peasant girl wielding an axe and watched her a moment before she discovered his presence. Pausing to wipe the sweat from her face, thinking him but an ordinary man, she mockingly addressed him: "Well! Want some work?"

The King, greatly amused, sprang forward, took the axe from her hands and speedily sent the chips flying. Conversing with the girl, he learned that her name was "Scylla," that she was the sole support of a bedridden mother and four little hungry brothers and sisters. Once she had had a sweetheart, but they had never married, for she was forced to look after her family. Later he went to war and gave his life for the king.

Upon learning that Scylla did not quarrel with her fate, but unselfishly regarded it all as a sacred duty, the young King looked at her in amazement, for an ignorant peasant girl had taught him a wonderful lesson.

Some days later Scylla received a purse of gold and a message from the King, which she never forgot.
